THE LIFE

OF

WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

The name of Shakspeare, which is mentioned by Verstegan, among those 'syrmames imposed upon the first bearers of them for valour and feats of arms,' is one of great antiquity in the woodland districts of Warwickshire. The family, thus honourably distinguished, appears to have received its origin either at Rowington or Lapworth. Long before the genius of our great dramatic poet had rendered their name a subject of national interest, the Shakspeares were established among the more affluent inhabitants of those villages, and thence several individuals of the race, from time to time, removed, and became settlers in the principal places of the county.

After the most indefatigable researches Malone found himself unable to trace the particular branch of the family from which Shakspeare himself descended, beyond his immediate ancestor; but it is mentioned by Rowe, as being 'of good figure and fashion,'† in the town of Stratford. This statement is supported by the authority of a document, preserved in the College of Heralds, conferring the grant of a coat of arms on John Shakspeare, the poet, in which the title of gentleman is added to his denomination; and it is stated, that 'his great grandfather had been rewarded by king Henry the Seventh, for his faithful and approved services, with lands and tenements given him in those parts of Warwickshire, where they have continued by some descents in good reputation and credit.'‡ the estate which the royal munificence had thus conferred on his ancestor, it was insufficient for his wants; and he was obliged to have recourse to trade to increase the narrow measure of his patrimony. The traditional accounts that have been received respecting him are consistent in describing him as engaged in business, though they disagree in the nature of the employment which they ascribe to him. In the MS. notes which Aubrey had collected for a life of the poet, it is affirmed, that 'his father was a butcher;' while on the other hand, it is stated by Rowe that he was 'a considerable dealer in wool.' The truth of the latter report it is scarcely possible to doubt. It was received from Betterton the player, whose veneration for the poet induced him to make a pilgrimage to Warwickshire, that he might collect all the information respecting the object of his enthusiasm which remained among his townsmen, at a time when such prominent facts as the circumstances and avocation of his parents could not yet have sunk into oblivion.§ It is indeed, not improbable that both these accounts may be correct.

† Few occupations,' observes Malone, 'can be named which are more naturally connected with each other.' Dr. Farmer has shown that the two trades were occasionally united:¶ or if they were not thus exercised together by the poet's father, his having adopted them separately at different periods of his life, is not inconsistent with the changeable character of his circumstances. The new notion of John Shakspeare's in the consideration of remote events, if the express authority of contemporary official documents is to be set aside by the questionable conjectures of the antiquarian.

§ Betterton was born in 1635. Shakspeare's youngest daughter lived till 1662, and his grand-daughter till 1679; and many of his relatives and connections, the Harts and the Hathaways, were surviving at the time of Betterton's visit to Stratford.

having been a glover, which has been advanced in Malone's last edition of our author's works, I have no hesitation in dismissing. It is neither supported by tradition, nor probability; and the brief minute which the laborious editor discovered in the bailiff's court at Stratford, must have referred to some other of the innumerable John Shakespeares, whom we find mentioned in the wills and registers of the time.

The father of Shakespeare married, probably about the year 1555 or 1556, Mary the daughter of Robert Arden, of Willingcote, in the county of Warwick; by which connexion he obtained a small estate in land, some property in money, * and such accession of respectability as is derived from an equal and honourable alliance. The family of Mary Arden, like his own, was one of great antiquity in the county, and her ancestors also had been rewarded for their faithful and important services by the gratitude of Henry the Seventh. The third child, and the eldest son of this union, was the celebrated subject of the present memoirs.

William Shakespeare was born on the 23d of April, 1564, and baptized on the 26th of the same month.

At the time of the birth of his illustrious offspring, John Shakespeare evidently enjoyed no slight degree of estimation among his townsmen. He was already a member of the corporation, and for two successive years, had been nominated one of the chamberlains of Stratford. From this time he began to be chosen in due succession to the highest municipal offices of the borough. In 1563, he was appointed to discharge the important duties of high bailiff, and was subsequently elected and sworn chief alderman for the year 1571.

During this period of his life, which constitutes the poet's years of childhood, the fortune of Master John Shakespeare—for so he is uniformly designated in the public writings of the borough, from the time of his acting as high bailiff—perfectly corresponded with the station which we find him holding among his townsmen. His charities rank him with the second class of the inhabitants of Stratford. In a subscription for the relief of the poor, 1564, out of twenty-four persons, twelve gave more, six the same, and six less, than the poet's father; and in a second subscription, of fourteen persons, eight gave more, five the same, and one less. So early as 1556, he held the lease of two houses in the town, one in Green Hill, and the other in Henley Street; in 1570 he rented fourteen acres of land, called Ingon Meadow: and we find him four years afterwards, becoming the purchaser of two additional houses in Henley Street, with a garden and orchard attached to each.

In this season of prosperity, Mr. John Shakespeare was not careless of the abilities of his child. His own talents had been wholly unimproved by education, and he was one of the twelve, out of the nineteen aldermen of Stratford, whose accomplishments did not extend to being able to sign their own names. This circumstance, by the bye, most satisfactorily establishes the fact, that he could not have written the confession of faith which was found in repairing the roof of his residence at Stratford. But, whatever were his own deficiencies, he was careful that the talents of his son should not suffer from a similar neglect of education. William was placed at the Free School of Stratford: it is not interesting to know the names of the instructors of Shakespeare. They have been traced by the minute researches of Malone. Mr. Thomas Hunt, and Mr. Thomas Jenkins, were successively the masters of the school, from 1572 to 1580, which must have included the schoolboy days of our poet.

At this time, Shakespeare would have possessed ample means of obtaining access to all those books of history, poetry, and romance, with which he seems to have had so intimate an acquaintance, and which were calculated to attract his early taste, and excite the admiration of his young and ardent fancy; and he might also thus early have become imbued with a taste for the drama, by attending the performances of the different companies of players, the comedians of the Queen, of the Earl of Worcester, of Lord Leicester, and of other noblemen, who were continually making the Guildhall of Stratford, the scene of their representations. But he was soon called to other cares, and the discharge of more serious duties. The prosperity of his father was not of permanent duration. In 1578, Mr. John Shakespeare mortgaged the estate which he had received from his wife; in the following year he was exempted from the contribution of fourpence a week for the poor, which was paid by the other aldermen; and that this exception in his favour was made in consequence of the pecuniary embarrassments under which he was known to labour, is manifest from his having been at the same period reduced to the necessity of obtaining Mr. Lambert's security for the payment of a debt due to him. In 1582, the land he was debtors to the corporation for a daughter. The whole was worth little more than 100l., at that time considered a fair provision for a daughter.

* From the sentiment and the language, this confession appears to be the effusion of a Roman Catholic mind, and was probably drawn up by some Roman Catholic priest. If these premises be granted, it will follow, as a fair deduction, that the family of Shakespeare were Roman Catholics. * Chalmers' Apology, p. 198. The paper was found in 1570, and communicated to Malone; but are not the official situations held by Shakespeare's father in the borough conclusive against the opinion which Mr. Chalmers has grounded upon it!

ment of a debt of five pounds, to Sadler, a baker.

This depression of his circumstances is alluded to by Rowe, and attributed to the expenses incidental to a large and increasing family; but in this statement, the real cause of his difficulties is mistaken. It has been ascertained, by the diligence of Malone, that the family of Shakespeare's father was by no means numerous; for of his eight children, live only attained to the years of maturity.* The decay of his affairs was the natural consequence of the decline of the branch of trade in which he was engaged. As a woolstapler, Mr. John Shakspeare had flourished as long as the business itself was prosperous; and with its failure, his fortunes had fallen into decay. He became involved in the gradual ruin which fell on the principal trade of the place, and which, in 1560, drew from the bailiffs and bargesses of Stratford, a supplication to the Lord Treasurer Burghley, lamenting the distresses of the town; 'for want of such trade as heretofore they had by clothings, and making of yarne, employing and maynteyninge a number of poore people by the same, which now lie in great penury and miserie, by reason they are not set at worke, as before they have.'†

In this unfavourable state of the affairs of his family, Shakespeare was withdrawn from school; 'his assistance was wanted at home.'‡ It was, I should imagine, at this juncture, that his father, no longer able to secure a respectable subsistence for his wife and children, by his original trade as a woolstapler, had recourse to the inferior occupation of a butcher; and, if the tale be founded in fact, which Aubrey says 'he was told heretofore by some of his neighbours,' then it must have been, that Shakespeare began to exhibit his dramatic propensities, and 'when he killed a calf, would do it in a high style, and make a speech.'§

The assistance, however, which the poet rendered his father in his business, was not of long duration. He had just attained the age of eighteen, when he married. The object of this early attachment was Anne, the daughter of Richard Hathaway, a substantial yeoman, in the neighbourhood of his native town. She was eight years older than her husband; and oldys, without stating his authority, in one of his MSS. mentions her as beautiful.|| It may be feared that this marriage was not perfectly happy.

From the celebrated passage in Twelfth Night, concluding with

'Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent,'

we may suspect that Shakespeare, at the time of writing this, which was probably his last, play, had lived to repent his too early marriage, and the indulgence of an affection so much misgrafted in respect of years.'‡ Such is the conjecture of Malone: but it is hardly fair to apply personally to the poet the general maxims that may be discovered in his works. His daughter Susanna was born in the following year. The parish register of Stratford informs us that within eighteen months afterwards his wife bore twins, a son and daughter, who were baptized by the names of Hamnet and Judith: and thus, when little more than twenty, Shakespeare had already a wife and three children dependant on his exertions for support.

Malone supposes that our author was at this time employed in an attorney's office, and gives a long list of quotations from his works, which shew how familiarly he was acquainted with the terms and the usages of the law, in support of his conjecture. As there are no other grounds for entertaining such a supposition; as testimony of the same nature, and equally strong, might be adduced to prove that Shakespeare was a member of almost every other trade or profession, for he was ignorant of none; and as the legal knowledge which he displays might easily have been caught up in conversation, or indeed from experience in the quirks and technicalities of the law, during the course of his own and his father's difficulties; I have little hesitation in classing this among the many ingenious but unsound conjectures of the learned editor, and adopting the tradition of Aubrey respecting the avocation of this portion of his life. To satisfy the claims that were multiplying around him, Shakespeare endeavoured to draw upon his talents and acquirements as the source of his supplies, and undertook the instruction of children.

The portion of classical knowledge that he brought to the task, has given occasion for much controversy, which it is now impossible to determine. The school at which he was educated, produced several individuals, among the contemporaries of our great poet, who were not deficient

8 THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Sleeping) that there needed not many a word To make him believe he was a lord: But you affirm, and in it seems most easy, 'Twill make a herd to drum as any boogier. Had Milly been so much to him as you say, I think that with such stately companies He put Kit Sly saw each hardly traces And let us meet there for a fit of gladness, And drink ourselves merry in sober sadness.

When the Stratford lands went over to Biffoy, they found the toppers were gone Evesham fair: but were sold, if they wished to try their strength with the sippers, they were ready for the contest. This being accorded to our hard and his companions were agitated at the first onset, when they thought it advisable to sound a retreat, while the means of retreat were practicable; and then had scarce marched half a mile, before they were all forced to lay down more than their arms, and encamp in a very disagreeable and murmuring form, under no better covering than a large crab-tree; and there they rested till morning.

This tree is yet standing by the side of the road. It is, it has been observed by the late Mr. T. Warton, the meanest house to which Shakespeare has an allusion, interest curiously, and acquires an importance, surely the tree which has spread its shade over him, and sheltered him from the dews of the night, has a claim to our attention.

In the morning, when the company awakened our bard, the story, says they, attracted him to return to Bifford, and renew the charge, but this he declined; and seeking round upon the adjoining villages, exclaimed, "No! I have had enough; I have drunk with Pheasant Pelwerto, Danielu Marriott, Haunted Hill-farde, Henrys Griffin, Dancing Richard Page Wiltsford, Regency Brown, and Drunk at Bifford."}

*Of the truth of this story, I have very little doubt, or uncertainty, than the crab-tree is known an round the country by the name of Shakespere-scrob, and that whole village, on which the avenue is made, all bear the epithets here given to the people of Pelworth are well named for the skill of the pipe and rhythm. Hillborough is more called Haunted Hillborough, and Griffin is memorable for the poverty of its cell."

The above relation, if it be true, presents us with a most unwonted picture of the manners and morals prevalent among the youth of War-wickshire, in the early years of Shakespeare; and in-ded on with regret, we find our immortal poet, with faculties so exalted, combating the base proceeded in such stoical manner. It is some relief to know that, though he served in amusing himself with such grand associations, he was the first to remove them in disgust.

We can search, in the present day, form a correct and impartial judgment of a disgraceful offence, in which these masculine contumacies involved him as a party. The transaction, whatever as it would now be considered, appears to admit of great examination, in regard to the manners and sentiments that prevailed at the time; and when we consider the consequences to which it led, we find it difficult to connect with much severity of custom the occasion by which Shakespeare was removed from the intercourse of such unworthy companions, and by which these powerful efforts to seduce were awakening men, who might; or who, perhaps, have been degraded in the manner of vulgar sensations, as an equality with his associates, or have assumed an irreparable fineness than the appearance of a country term.

One of the famous anecdotes of the young companions with whom Shakespeare had connected himself, was the planting of these and vines. This violation of the rights of property, must not, however, be considered with the respect which, at the present day, would be a similar offence. In these early ages, the spirit of Robin Hood was yet abroad, and they were conscientious, with riches and lands, among the more adventurous, but during, terms of youth. It was considered in the light of an indiscretion, rather than of a criminal offence; and in this particular, the young men of our times were congratulated by the presence of the students of the University. In those numerous excursions, Shakespeare was not backward in accompanying his comrades. The persons whose neighbour- hood, perhaps, with the exception of the wood-carvings and others, was described among the individual from whose hands they were likely to escape with impunity in case of detection. Sir Thomas Hare was a Puritan, and the severity of manners which was always characterized this state, would teach him to express very limited assiduity to the excesses of Shakespeare and his fiends companions. He was better a game preserver: in his place as a member of parliament, he had been an active instrument in offenders. Nothing, however, can be more uniform than the traditions that deer and cows were really stolen from some (i.e. by Shakespeare and his friends, Mr. Jones, who died in 1631, and afterwards of another, and who lived at Parlow, a village about ten miles from Stratford) related the services Mr. Thomas Wilks, and remains related to several old people.—Batemow was told us at Stratford, and communicated it to the Rev. Mr. James R. has the same story.—Dr. Davy, Pecius ad, M. F. Notes for a book of Shakespeare were made in 1811.

the formation of the game laws: * and the trespasses of our poet, whether committed on the demesne of himself or others, were as offensive to his predictions as to his principles. Shakspeare and his complices were discovered, and fell under the rigid lash of Sir Thomas Lucy's authority and resentment. The knight attacked the poet with the penalties of the law; and the poet revenged himself by sticking the following satirical copy of verses on the gate of the knight's park.

COPY OF THE VERSES ON SIR THOMAS LUCY.

′A parliament member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scarecrow, in London an ass;
If Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

He thinks himself great, yet an ass in byse state,
We allowe bye his cares but with asses to mate;
If Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

He's a haughty proud insolent knighte of the shire,
At home nobody loves, yet thers many him fear;
If Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

To the sessions he went, and dyd scarcely complain,
His parks had beene robb'd, and his deer they were slain;
This Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

He sayd 'twas a rout, his men had beene beat,
His vension was stolen, and clandestinely eat;
Soe Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

His haughtye pride insolent knyghte of the shire,
At home nobody loves, yet thers many him fear;
If Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

Soe haughtye was he when the fact was confess'd,
He said 'twas a crime that could not bee redress'd;
Soe Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

Though Lucies a dozen he paints in his coat,
His name it shall Lowsie for Lucey bee wrote;
For Lucy is Lowsie, as some volke miscall it,
Synghe Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

If a juerulane friskick he cannot forgive,
We'll syngue Lowsie Lucy as long as we live;
And Lucy the Lowsie a label may call it,
We'll syngue Lowsie Lucy whatever befall it.

It would appear that the above song, the first effort we have received of our author's poetical talents, was not his only attempt at this kind of retaliation. It is said, in a book called a Manuscript History of the Stage, which is supposed by Malone to have been written between 1727 and 1730, 'that the learned Mr. Joshua Barnes, late Greek professor of the University of Cambridge, having about forty years ago at an inn in Stratford, and hearing an old woman singing part of the above said song, such was his respect for Mr. Shakspeare's genius, that he gave her a new gown for the two following stanzas in it; and could she have said it all, he would (as he often said in company, when any discourse has casually arose about him) have given her ten guineas.

* Sir Thomas was too covetous,
To covet so much deer;
When horns enough upon his head
Most plainly did appear.

Had not his worship one deer left?
What then? He had a wife,
Took pains enough to find him horns,
Should last him during life.'

The volume in which this anecdote is found, is not much to be relied upon; for the author has been, in several instances, detected as too credulous in receiving the reports of others, or as actually criminal, in giving the reins to his imagination, and supplying the want of facts by the resources of his invention. The verses, however, which prove not to have been, as was originally supposed, part of the first satirical effusion, but the fragment of another Jen d'esprit of the same kind, and on the same subject, sufficiently authenticate themselves. The quibble on the word deer, is one that was familiar with our author; and, says Whiter, 'the lines may be readily conceived to have proceeded from our young bard, before he was removed from the little circle of his native place.' Besides, the author of the book in which they were first published must have possessed an intrepidity of falsehood unparalleled in the history of literary forgeries, if he had dared, so soon after the death of Joshua Barnes, to advance a story of this kind as a notorious fact, when, had it been a fiction, any of the professor's friends would have had an opportunity of contradicting him. Malone considers these verses, as well as the first, a forgery; and cites the epitaph erected by Sir Thomas Lucy, in praise of his wife, as evidence of their spuriosity. Exaggerated conceit is the very essence of a satire; exaggerated praise is the universal characteristic of the epitaph. Each is equally wide of the truth: it is probable, that the real character of Lady Lucy neither warranted the panegyric of her husband, nor the severity of Shakspeare. But it would, at the present day, puzzle the ingenuity of a modern, to determine which was most likely to afford the fairest estimate of her worth.

The contest between Shakspeare and Sir Thomas Lucy was unequal; and the result was such as might have been anticipated, from the disproportion that existed between the strength and weapons of the opposing parties. The poet died in 1778, at the age of eighty. Malone considers the whole a forgery. The last stanza is indeed of a very suspicious appearance.

ought irritate by his wit; but the magistrate could wound by his authority. It is recorded by Mr. Davies, that the knight "had him oft whip, and sometimes imprisoned, and at last made him fly his native country." That the severity was undue, there can be little room for doubting. Every contemporary who has spoken of our author, has been lavish in the praise of his temper and disposition. "The gentle Shakespeare" seems to have been his distinguishing appellation. No slight portion of our enthusiasm for his writings, may be traced to the fair picture which they present of our author's character; we love the tenderness of heart—the candour and openness, and singleness of mind—the largeness of sentiment—the liberality of opinion, which the whole tenor of his works prove him to have possessed; his faults seem to have been the transient aberrations of a thoughtless moment, which reflection never failed to correct. The ebullitions of high spirits might mislead him; but the principles and the affections never swerved from what was right. Against such a person, the extreme severity of the magistrate should not have been exerted. His youth—his genius—his accomplishments—his wife and children, should have mitigated the rigour of the authority that was armed against him. The powerful enemy of Shakespeare was not to be appeased: the heart of the Puritan or the game-preservation is very rarely "framed of penetrable stuff." Our author fled from the inexpressible persecutions of his opponent, to seek a shelter in the metropolis; and he found friends, and honour, and wealth, and fame; where he had only hoped for an asylum. Sir Thomas Lucy remained to enjoy the triumph of his victory; and he yet survives in the character of Justice Shallow, as the laughing-stock of posterity, and as another specimen of the exquisite skit, with which the victim of his magistrate's authority was capable of painting the particulars of the weak and the vain, the arrogant and the servile.1

About the year 1587, in the twenty-third of his age, Shakespeare arrived in London. It is not possible to discover the inducements which led our poet, after his flight from Stratford, to seek his home and his subsistence in the neighbourhood of a theatre. Probably, in the course of their travels, he might have formed an acquaintance with some of the performers, during the occasional visits which they had made to Stratford. Homing and Burbage, distinguished performers of the time, were both Warwickshire men, and born in the vicinity of Stratford. Greene, another celebrated comedian of the day, was the townswoman, and he is thought to have been the relation, of Shakespeare. On arriving in the metropolis, these were perhaps his only acquaintance, and they secured his introduction to the theatre. It seems however agreed, that his first occupation there was of the very lowest order. One tradition relates, that his original office was that of call-boy, or prompter's attendant; whose employment it is, to give the performers notice to be ready to enter, as often as the business of the play requires their appearance on the stage; while another account, which has descended in a very regular line from Sir William D'Avenant to Dr. Johnson, states, that Shakespeare's first employment was to wait at the door of the playhouse, and hold the horses of those who rode to the theatre, and had no servants to take charge of them during the hours of performance. It is said, 'that he became so conspicuous in this office, for his care and readiness, that in a short time, every man as he alighted called for Will Shakespeare; and scarcely any other waiter was trusted with a horse, while Will Shakespeare could be had. This was the first dawn of better fortune. Shakespeare finding more horses put into his hand than he could hold, hired boys to wait under his inspection, who, when Will Shakespeare was summoned, were immediately to present themselves, I am Shakespeare's boy, sir. In time, Shakespeare found higher employment, but as long as the practice of riding to the playhouse continued, the waiters that held the horses retained the appellation of Shakespeare's boys. That the above anecdote was really communicated by Pope, there is no room to doubt. This fact Dr. Johnson states upon his own authority, and coming from such a source, the story is certainly deserving of more respect than the commentators have been inclined to attach to it. It was originally related by D'Avenant, who, if the frequenters of the theatre had ever been in the habit of riding to the play, must have remembered the time; and if at that time, the lads who took charge of the horses were, as he affirmed, called having appeared first in Cibber's Lives of the Poets, a book of no authority. But the general inaccuracy of that work, ought not, in the present instance, to be considered as diminishing the credibility of its narration. The book was, in fact, written by Sheriff, the amanuensis of Dr. Johnson, and he, most probably, picked up from his employer this piece of original information. Johnson, in his edition of Shakespere, repeated it, without any allusion to Sheriff's work, as having come to him immediately from Pope, and in apparent ignorance of its ever having been printed before.

2 There can be no doubt, that Justice Shallow was designed as the representative of the knight. If the traditional authority of this fact were not quite satisfactory, the description of his coat of arms, in the first scene of The Merry Wives of Windsor, which is, with very slight deviation, that of the Lucies, would be sufficient to direct us to the original of the portrait.

Shakespeare's boys, that circumstance is the strongest possible corroboration of the story. But it was known to Rowe, and rejected by him; and Stevens advances this omission as a proof that our author's first biographer considered the anecdote incredible, and wholly undeserving his attention. In the suppression of the fact may however have originated in some other cause than his suspicion of its truth. Might he not have been actuated by that absurd spirit of refinement, which is only too common among the writers of biography, as well as history, and which induces them to conceal or misrepresent every occurrence which is at all of a humiliating nature, and does not accord with those false and effeminate notions so generally entertained respecting the dignity of that peculiar class of compositions? But, however inferior the situation when Shakespeare occupied on first entering upon his dramatic career, his talents were not long buried in obscurity. He rapidly rose to the highest station in the theatre; and, by the power of his genius, raised our national dramatic poetry, then in its most infancy, to the highest state of perfection which it is perhaps capable of reaching.

*We have a curious account in a book entitled Mount Tabor, or private Exercises of a Peculiar Nature, by R. W. Willis, Esq., published in the year of his age 75, Anna Domini, 1699, an extract from which will give the reader a more accurate notion of the old Moralsities, than a long dissertation on the subject.

† Upon a Stage-play which I saw when I was a child.

² In the city of Gloucester the manner is (as I think it is in other like corporations), that when players of interludes come to town, they first attend the Mayor, to enforce him what noblemans's servants they are, and so to get licence for their publick playing; and if the Mayor like the actors, or would shew respect to their lord and master, he appoints them to play their first play before himself, and the Alderman and Common-Council of the city; and that is called the Mayor's play, where every one that will, comes in without money, the Mayor giving the players a reward as he thinks fit to show respect upon them. At such a play, my father took me with him and made me stand between his legs, as he sat upon one of the benches, where we saw and heard very well. The play was called The Cradle of Security, wherein was personated a king or some great prince, with his couriers of several kinds, among which three ladies were in special grace with him; and they keeping him in delights and pleasures, drew him from his gravest counsellors, hearing of sermons, and listening to good counsell and ad monitions, that in the end they got him to lye down in a cradle upon the stage, where these three ladies joyning in a sweet song, rocked him asleep, and he awoke again; and in the mean time closely conveyed under the cloaths wherewith he was covered, a vizard, like a swine's snout, upon his face, with three wire chains fastened thereto, the other end whereof being held severally by those three ladies, who fall to singing again, and then discovered his face, that the spectators might see how they had transformed him, going on with their singing. Whilst all this was acting, there came forth of another door at the farthest end of the stage, two old men; the one in blew, with a serjeant at armes, his mace on his shoulder; the other in red, with a drawn sword in his hand, and leading with the other hand upon the other's shoulder; and so they went along with a soft pace round about the were more artificial, regular, and connected, and which were entirely formed of such personifications; but the first rough draught of a regular tragedy and comedy that appeared, Lord Sackville's Gorboduc, and Still's Gammer Gurton's Needle, were not produced till within the latter half of the sixteenth century, and but little more than twenty years previous to Shakspeare's arrival in the metropolis. *

About that time, the attention of the public began to be more generally directed to the stage; and it threw admirably beneath the cheerful beams of popularity. The theatrical performances which had, in the early part of the reign of Elizabeth, been exhibited on temporary stages, erected in such halls or apartments as the actors could procure, or, more generally, in the yards of the great inns, while the spectators surveyed them from the surrounding windows and galleries, began to be so established in more convenient and permanent situations. About the year 1569, a regular playhouse, under the appropriate name of The Theatre, was built. It is supposed to have stood somewhere in Blackfriars; and three years after the commencement of this establishment, yielding to her inclination for the amusements of the theatre, and disregarding the remonstrances of the Puritans, the queen granted license and authority to the Servants of the Earl of Leicester, 'to use, exercise, and occupie, the arte and facultie of playinge comedies, tragedies, interludes, stage-plays, as well for the recreation of our lovinge subjects, as for our solace and pleasure, when we shall thinke good to see them, throughoute our realme of England.' From this time, the number of theatres increased with the ripening taste and the increasing demands of the people. Various noblemen had their respective companies of performers, who were associated as their servants, and acted under their protection; and during the period of Shakspeare's theatrical career, not less than seven principal playhouses were open in the metropolis.

Of these the Globe, and the playhouse in Blackfriars, were the property of the company to which Shakspeare was himself attached, and by whom all his productions were exhibited. The Globe appears to have been a wooden building of a considerable size, hexagonal without, and circular within; it was thatched in part, but a large portion of the roof was open to the weather. This was the company's summer theatre; and the plays were acted by day-light: at the Blackfriars, on the contrary, which was the winter theatre, the top was entirely closed, and the performances were exhibited by candle-light. In every other respect, the economy and usages of these houses appear to have been the same, and to have resembled those of every other contemporary theatre.

With respect to the interior arrangements, there were very few points of difference between our modern theatres and those of the days of Shakspeare. The terms of admission, indeed, were considerably cheaper; to the boxes, the entrance was a shilling, to the pit and galleries only sixpence.† Sixpence, also, was the price paid for stools upon the stage; and those seats, as we learn from Docker's Gull's Hauktow, were peculiarly affected by the wits and critics at the time. The conduct of the audience was less restrained by the sense of public decorum, and smoking tobacco, playing at cards, eating and drinking, were generally prevalent among them: the hour of performance also was earlier; the play beginning at first at one, and afterwards at three o'clock, in the afternoon. During the time of representation, a flag was unfurled at the top of the theatre; and the floor of the stage (as was the case with every floor at the time, from the cottage to the palace) was strewn with rushes. But in other respects, the ancient theatres seem to have been very nearly similar to those of modern times; they had their pit, where the inferior class of spectators—the groundlings—ventured their clamorous censure or approbation; they had their boxes, and even their private boxes, of which the right of exclusive admission was hired by the night, for the more wealthy and refined portion of the audience; and there were again the galleries, or scaffold above the boxes, for those who were content to purchase inferior skirt of the stage, till at last they came to the crate, when all the court was in the greatest jollity; and then the foremost old man with his face stroke a fearfull blow upon the crate; wherewith all the courtiers, with the three ladies, and the wizard, all vanished; and the deadeate prince starting up barefaced, and finding himself thus sent for to judgment, made a lamentable complaint of his miserable case, and so was carried away by wicked spirits. This prince did perswade in the Morall, the wicked of the world; the three ladies, Pride, Covetousness, and Luxury; the two old men, the end of the world, and the last judgment. This sight took such impression in me, that when I came towards man's estate, it was as fresh in my memory, as if I had seen it newly acted.†

The writer of this book appears to have been born in the same year with our great poet (1564). Supposing him to have been seven or eight years old when he saw this interlude, the exhibition must have been in 1571, or 1572.—Malone, History of the English Stage.

Gorboduc was produced in 1562. Gammer Gurton, in 1566.

‡ A little pique happened betwixt the duke of Lenox, and the Lord Chamberlains, about a box, in a new play at the Blackfriars, of which the duke had got the key; which if it had come to be debated betwixt them, as it was once intended, some heat or perhaps other inconvenience might have happened.—Letter from Mr. Gerrard, dated Jan. 22th, 1565. Stratt. Letters, vol. i. p. 311.
accommodation at a cheaper rate. On the stage, the arrangements appear to have been nearly the same as at present—the curtain divided the audience from the actors; which, at the third sounding, not indeed of the bell, but of the trumpet, was drawn for the commencement of the performance. Malone has puzzled himself and his readers, in his account of the ancient theatre, by the supposition that there was a permanent elevation of about nine feet, at the back of the stage, from which, in many of the old plays, part of the dialogue was spoken; and that there was a private box on each side of this platform. Such an arrangement would have precluded the possibility of all theatrical illusion; and it seems an extraordinary place to fix upon as a station for spectators, where they could have seen nothing but the backs and trains of the performers. But as Malone himself acknowledges the spot to have been inconvenient, and that 'it is not very easy to ascertain the precise situation where these boxes really were;' it may be presumed, from our knowledge of the good sense of our forefathers, that, if indeed such boxes existed at all, they certainly were not where the historian of the English stage has placed them. Malone was possessed with an opinion, that the use of scenes was unknown in the early years of our national drama, and he was perhaps not unwilling to adopt such a theory respecting the distribution of the stage as would effectually preclude the supposition that such aids to the imagination of the audience had ever been employed. That he was in error respecting the want of painted scenery, I cannot help suspecting, even against the high authority of Mr. Gifford.† As to his permanent platform, or upper stage, he may, or may not, be correct in his opinion; all that is certain upon this subject is, that his quotations do not authorize the conclusion that he has deduced from them; and only prove that in the old, as in the modern theatre, when the actor was to speak from a window, or appear upon a balcony, or on the walls of a fortress, the requisite ingenuity was not wanting to contrive an adequate representation of the place. But, with regard to the use of scenery, it is scarcely possible, from the very circumstances of the case, that such a contrivance should have escaped our ancestors. All the materials were ready to their hands; they had not to invent for themselves, but to adapt an old invention to their own purposes: and at a time when every better apartment was adorned with tapestry; when even the rooms of the commonest taverns were hung with painted cloths; while all the essentials of scenery were continually before their eyes, we can hardly believe our forefathers to have been so deficient in ingenuity, as to suppose that they never should have conceived the design of contriving the common ornaments of their walls into the decorations of their theatres. But, the fact appears to be, that the use of scenery was almost coexistent with the introduction of dramatic representations in this country. In the Chester Mysteries, written in 1268, and which are the most ancient and complete collection of the kind that we possess, we have the following stage direction: 'Then Noe shall go into the ark with all his family, his wife excepte. The ark must be boarded round about, and upon the burdes all the beasts and fowles hereafter rehearsed must be painted, that their words may agree with the pictures.' In this passage, then, is a distinct reference to a painted scene; and it is not likely, that in the lapse of three centuries, while all other arts were in a state of rapid improvement, and the art of dramatic writing perhaps more rapidly and successfully improved than any other, the art of theatrical decoration should have alone stood still. It is not improbable that their scenes were few; and that these were varied as occasion might require, by the introduction of different pieces of stage furniture. Mr. Gifford, who adheres to Malone's opinion, says, 'a table with a pen and ink thrust in, signified that the stage was a counting-house; if these were withdrawn, and two stools put in their places, it was then a tavern;§ and this might be perfectly satisfactory, as long as the business of the play was supposed to be passing within doors, but when it was removed to the open air, such mere devices would no longer be sufficient to guide the imagination of the audience, and some new method must have been adopted to indicate the place of action. After giving the subject consideratible attention, I cannot help thinking that Steevens was right in rejecting the evidence of Malone, strong as it may in some instances appear; and concluding that the spectators were, as at the present day, assisted in following the progress of the story, by means of painted and moveable scenery. This opinion is confirmed by the ancient stage directions. In the Folio Shakespeare, of 1623, we read, 'Enter Brutus, in his orchard.' 'Enter Timon, in the woods.' 'Enter Timon, from his case.' In Coriolanus: 'Marcius follows them to the gates, and is shut in.' Innumerable instances of the same kind might be cited, to prove that the ancient stage was not so defective in the necessary decorations as some antiquarians of great authority would represent. 'It may be added,' says Steevens, 'that the dialogue of Shakespeare has such perpetual reference to objects supposed visible to the audience, that the want of scenery could not have failed to render many of the descriptions uttered by his speakers absurd and laughable. Banquo examines the outside of Inverness castle with such obviated the necessity of obstructing performers before the public in parts that were unsuited to their time of life. When the lid had become too tall for Julia, he was prepared to act, and was most admirably calculated in age to assume, the character of the ardent Romeo: when the voice had the 'mannish crack,' that rendered the youth unfit to appear as the representative of the gentle Imogen, he was skilled In the knowledge of the stage, and capable of doing justice to the princely sentiments of Arviragus or Guiderius.

Such then was the state of the stage when Shakspeare entered into its service, in the double capacity of actor and author. As an author, though Dryden says, that 'Shakspeare's own muse his Pericles first bore,' it is most probable that Titus Andronicus was the earliest dramatic effort of his pen. Shakspeare arrived in London about the year 1567, and according to the date of the latter play, as intimated by Ben Jonson, in his introduction to Bartholomew Fair, we find it to have been produced immediately after his arrival. That Titus Andronicus is really the work of Shakspeare, it would be a defiance to all contemporary evidence to doubt. It was not only printed among his works by his friends, Heminge and Condell, but is mentioned as one of his tragedies by an author, who appears to have been on such terms of intimacy with him, as to have been admitted to a sight of his MSS. sonnets. Against this testimony, the critics have nothing to oppose but the accumulated horrors of its plot; the stately march of its versification; and the dissimilarity of its style from the other efforts of Shakspeare's genius. It does not strike me that these arguments are sufficient to lead us to reject the play as the composition of our great dramatist. He was, perhaps, little more than three-and-twenty years of age when it was composed. The plays which at the time had possession of the stage, of which very few had been written, and not above fifteen are extant, supposing Andronicus to have been produced in 1589, were all of the same bombastic and exaggerated character; and the youthful poet naturally imitated the popular manner, and strove to bent his contemporaries with their own weapons. However tiresome the tragedy may be to us, it was a great favourite at its first appearance. It was full of barbarities that shock the refined taste; but these formed a mode of exciting the interest of the audience which was very commonly had recourse to by the play-writers of the age, and from which Shakspere never became fully weaned, even at a period when his judgment was matured; as we may learn from the murder of Macduff's children, the hamstringing of Cassio, and the plucking out the eyes of Gloucester. The versification and language of the play, are certainly very different from those of Othello, of Hamlet, of Macbeth, or Lear. The author had not yet acquired that facility of composition for which he was afterwards distinguished. He wrote with labour, and left in every line the trace of the labour with which he wrote. He had not yet discovered (and it was he who eventually made the discovery), that the true language of nature and of passion is that which passes most directly to the heart; but it is not with the works of his experienced years, that this 'bloody tragedy' should be compared; if it be, we certainly should find a difficulty in admitting that writings of such opposite descriptions, could be the effusions of the same intellect; but, compare this tragedy with the other works of his youth, and the difficulty vanishes. Is it improbable that the author of the Venus and Adonis, and the Rape of Lucrece, should, on turning his attention to the stage, produce as heavy and monotonous a performance as the Titus Andronicus?

I have been rather more diffuse upon this subject, than the nature of the present notice would appear to warrant, because it affords the means of ascertaining the time when Shakspere commenced writer for the stage. If Titus Andronicus be really his, as I suppose, he became an author immediately on finding himself in the service of the theatre. His first play, though we now despise and reject it, was the best play that had been presented to the public; and immediately placed him in the first ranks of the profession, and among the principal supports of the company to which he was attached. Pericles, if the work of Shakspere, was probably his next dramatic production. Dryden has most unequivocally attributed this play to Shakspere, and he was also commended as its author, in 1646, by S. Shepherd, in a poem called Time displayed. It is true that it was omitted by Heminge and Condell, in their collection of our poet's works; but this may have proceeded from forgetfulness, and it was only by an afterthought, that Troilus and Cressida escaped a similar fortune. How far Pericles, as originally written, was, or was not, worthy the talents of Shakspere, we have no means of judging. The only editions of this tragedy that have come down to us, are three spurious quartos, of which the text was printed from copies taken by illiterate persons during representation, and published without any regard to the property or the reputation of the author, to impose on the curiosity of the public. The Pericles of Shakspere may have been a splendid composition, and yet not have shewn so in the garbled editions of the booksellers. We may estimate the injuries that Pericles received, by the injuries which we know were inflicted upon Hamlet on its first issuing, after such a process, from the press. In the first edition of Hamlet, 1603, there is scarcely a trace of the beauty and majesty of Shakspere's work. Long passages, and even scenes, are misplaced; grammar is set wholly at defiance; half lines frequently omitted, so as to destroy the sense; and sentences brought together without any imaginable connexion. Sometimes the transcriber caught the expression, but lost the sentiment; and babbled the words together, without any regard to the meaning or no-meaning that they might happen to convey: at other times he remembered the sentiment, but lost the expression; and considered it no presumption to supply the lines of Shakspere with doggerel verses of his own. Such were, for the most part, the early quarto impressions of our author's plays; and it is not difficult to conceive, that Pericles, which seems to have suffered more than any other play in passing through the ignorant and negligent hands of the transcriber and the printer, might have been originally the work of Shakspere, without retaining in its published form any distinguishing characteristics of the magic hand that framed it. To attempt tracing the literary life of our great dramatist were a work of unprofitable toil. I have given in the appendix (No. 2.) the list of his plays, according to the order in which Chalmers, Malone, and Dr. Drake, suppose them to have been composed; but the grounds of their conjectures are so uncertain, that little reliance can be placed in them, and all we really know upon the subject, is what we learn from Meres, that previously to the year 1598, that is, within twelve years after his attaching himself to the theatre, Shakspere had not only published his two poems, the Venus and Adonis, and the Rape of Lucrece; but had already written Titus Andronicus, King John, Richard the Second, Henry the Fourth, Richard the Third, Romeo and Juliet, The Midsummer Night's Dream, Two Gentlemen of Verona, The Comedy of Errors, The Lover's Labour Lost, The Lover's Labour Won,* and The Merchant of Venice. He had also written a great number of his Sonnets, and the minor pieces of poetry which were collected and printed by Jaggart, in 1599, under the somewhat affected title of the Passionate Pilgrim. After this, we have no means of ascertaining the succession in which the plays of Shakspeare were composed.

Very early in his dramatic career, he appears to have attained to a principal share in the direction and emoluments of the theatres to which he was attached. His name stands second in the list of proprietors of the Globe, and Blackfriars, in the license granted to them by James the First in 1603: and his industry in supporting these establishments was indefatigable. Besides the plays which were entirely of his own composition, of which he so completely re wrote as to make them his own, he seems to have been frequently engaged in revising, and adding to, and remodelling, the works of others.† This task, however beneficial to the interests of his theatre, and necessary to give attraction to the pieces themselves, was viewed with an eye of jealousy by the original authors; and Robert Greene, in his Groatsworth of Wit, himself a writer for the stage, in admonishing his fellow-dramatists to abandon their pursuit, and apply themselves to some more profitable vocation, refers them to this part of our author's labours with no little asperity. 'Trust them not (i.e. the players), for there is an upstart crow beautified with our feathers, that with his tyger's heart wrapt in a player's hide, supposes he is as well able to bombast out a blank-verse as the best of you; and being an absolute Johannes factotum, is in his own conceit the only Shaks-scene in a country.' This sarcasm, however, was nothing more than the unwarranted effusion of a dissolve and disappointed spirit. Greene was a bad man. The pamphlet from which the above passage is extracted was published after his death by Henry Chettle; and the editor, after he had given it to the world, was so satisfied of the falseness of the charges insinuated against our author, that he made a public apology for his indiscretion in the preface to a subsequent pamphlet of his own, entitled, Kind Hart's Dreame; lamenting that he had not omitted, or at least moderated, what Greene had written against Shakspeare, and adding, 'I am as sorry as if the original fault had been my fault; because myself have seen his demeanour, so less civil than he excelleth in the quality he professeth: besides divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honestie, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his art.'

It may be conceived from the abundance of his works, of which, perhaps, very many have been lost, that our author's facility of composition must have been extremely great; and, on this point, we have the contemporary testimony of his sincere, kind-hearted, generous, and much slandered friend, Ben Jonson, who writes in his Discoveries, 'I remember the players have often mentioned it as an honour to Shakspeare, that in writing (whatever he penned) he never blotted out a line. My answer hath been, Would he had blotted out a thousand! which they thought a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance, who chose that circumstance to commend their friend by, wherein he most faulted; and to justify mine own candour, for I loved the man, and do honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was, indeed, honest, and of an open and free nature, had an excellent fancy, brave notions, and gentle expressions; wherein he flowed with that felicity, that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped; Sufflaminandus erat, as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was in his own power; would the rule of it had been so too. Many times he fell into those things which could not escape laughter; as when he said, in the person of Caesar, one speaking to him, 'Cesar, thou dost me wrong.'

He replied:

'Cesar did never wrong, but with just cause,'‡

'and such like, which were ridiculous. But he redeemed his vices with his virtues; there was ever more in him to be praised than to be pardoned.'§

But Shakspeare was not only an author but an actor. In this union of the two professions he was not singular; his friend Ben Jonson resembled him in this. With respect to the merits of Shakspeare as a performer, there has existed some doubt. From the expression used in

Roe's Life, it would appear that he had been but indifferently skilled in the inferior half of his double vocation, and never attempted any parts superior to the Ghost in Hamlet; but the words of Cheettle, speaking of him as 'one excellent in the qualities he professes,' confirm the account of Aubrey, that 'he did act exceedingly well.' That he understood the theory of his profession is manifest from the invaluable instructions which he has written for the use of all future actors, in the third act of Hamlet. His class of characters was probably not very extensive. If the names of the performers prefixed to the early editions of Every Man in his Humour were arranged in the same order as the persons of the drama, which was most probably the case, he was the original representative of Old Knowell; and an anecdote preserved by Oldys would also make it appear that he played Adam in As you like it. One of Shakspeare's brothers,* who lived to a good old age, even some years after the restoration of Charles the Second, would, in his younger days, come to London to visit his brother Will, as he called him, and be a spectator of him as an actor in some of his own plays. This custom, as his brother's fame enlarged, and his dramatic entertainments grew the greatest support of our principal, if not of all our theatres, he continued it seems so long after his brother's death as even to the latter end of his own life. The curiosity at this time of the most noted actors (exciting them) to learn something from him of his brother, &c. they justly held him in the highest veneration. And it may be well believed, as there was, besides, a kinsman and descendant of the family, who was then a celebrated actor among them (Charles Hart. See Shakspeare's Will). This opportunity made them greedily inquisitive into every little circumstance, more especially in his dramatic character, which his brother could relate of him. But he, it seems, was so stricken in years, and possibly his memory so weakened with infirmities (which might make him the easier pass for a man of weak intellects), that he could give them but little light into their inquiries; and all that could be recollected from him of his brother Will in that station was, the faint, general, and almost last ideas he had of having once seen him act a part in one of his own comedies, wherein, being to personate a decrepit old man, he wore a long beard, and appeared so weak and drooping and unable to walk, that he was forced to be supported and carried by another person to a table, at which he was seated among some company, who were eating, and one of them sung a song.† From this it would appear, that the class of characters to which the historionc exertions of Shakspeare were confined, was that of elderly persons; parts, rather of declamation than of passion. With a countenance which, if any one of his pictures is a genuine resemblance of him, we may adduce that one as our authority for esteeming capable of every variety of expression; with a knowledge of the art that rendered him fit to be the teacher of the first actors of his day, and to instruct Joseph Taylor in the character of Hamlet, and John Lowine in that of King Henry the Eighth;† with such admirable qualifications for pre-emminence, we must infer that nothing but some personal defect could have reduced him to limit the exercise of his powers, and even in youth assume the slow and deliberate motion, which is the characteristic of old age. In his minor poems we, perhaps, trace the origin of this direction of his talents. It appears from two places in his Sonnets, that he was lamed by some accident. In the 37th sonnet he writes—

"So I made lame by Fortune's dearest spite."

And, in the 89th, he again alludes to his infirmity, and says——

"Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt."

This imperfection would necessarily have rendered him unfit to appear as the representative of any characters of youthful ardour, in which rapidity of movement or violence of exertion was demanded; and would obliged he to apply his powers to such parts as were compatible with his measured and impeded action. Malone has most inefficiently attempted to explain away the palpable meaning of the above lines; and adds, "If Shakspeare was in truth lame, he had it not in his power to halt occasionally for this or any other purpose. The defect must have been fixed and permanent. Not so. Surely, many an infirmity of the kind may be skillfully concealed; or only become visible in the moments of hurried movement. Either Sir Walter Scott or Lord Byron might, without any impropriety, have written the verses in question. They would have been applicable to either of them. Indeed the lameness of Lord Byron was exactly such as Shakspeare's might have been; and I remember as a boy, that he selected those speeches for declamation, which would not constrain him to the use of such exertions, as might obviate the defect of his person into notice. Shakspeare's extraordinary merits, both as an author and as an actor, did not fail of obtaining for him the fame and the remuneration that they deserved. He was soon honoured by the patronage of the young Lord Southampton, one of the most amiable and accomplished noblemen of the court of Elizabeth, and one of the earliest patrons of our national drama. To this distinguished person our author dedicated, 'the first heir of his invention,'† the poem of Venus and Adonis, in 1593. This was within five years after Shakspeare arrived in London; and, in the following year, he inscribed the Rape of Lucrece to the same nobleman, in terms which prove that the barriers imposed by difference of condition had become graduallylevelled, and that, between these young men, the cold and formal intercourse of the patron and the client had been rapidly exchanged for the kinder familiarity of friendship. The first address is respectful; the second affectionate. When this intimacy began Shakspeare was in his twenty-seventh, and Lord Southampton in his twentieth year; a time of life when the expansion of our kindness is not restrained by any of those apprehensions and suspicions which, in after-life, impede the development of the affections; and when, in the enthusiastic admiration of excellence, we hasten to seek fellowship with it, and disregard every impediment to free communication which may be opposed by the artificial distinctions of society. The superiority of Shakspeare’s genius raised him to a level with his friend. Lord Southampton allowed the gifts of Nature to claim equal privilege with the gifts of Fortune; and the splendid present of a thousand pounds, which our great poet received from him, was bestowed and accepted in the true spirit of generosity; as coming from one, who was exercising to its noblest uses the power of his affluence, and received by one whose soul was large enough to contain the sense of obligation without any mixture of petty shame or any sacrifice of independence. The name of Henry Wriothesley, earl of Southampton, should be dear to every Englishman, as the first patron—the youthful friend—and author of the fortunes of Shakspeare.

The authority for believing that this magnificent present was made—which is equivalent to at least five thousand pounds at the present day—is the best that can be obtained respecting the events of our author’s life; that of Sir William D’Avenant. It was given,’ he says, ‘to complete a purchase.’ Malone doubts the extent of the earl’s munificence—and what does he not doubt? He says, ‘no such purchase was ever made.’ This is a mere gratuitous assumption; for it is evident that Shakspeare had a very considerable property in two principal theatres, which must have been obtained by purchase, and could not have been obtained for an inconceivable sum; nor by any means that our author could of himself have procured, by the most indefatigable exertions of his talents and economy. At a time when the most successful dramatic representation did not produce to its author so much as twenty pounds, and generally little more than ten; when, as an actor, his salary would have amounted to a mere trifle; and when, as we have before seen, the circumstances of his father could not have aided him by any supplies from home, it is only by adopting D’Avenant’s statement, and admitting the munificence of Lord Southampton, that we can account for the sudden prosperity of Shakspeare. But, says Malone, ‘it is more likely that he presented the poet with a hundred pounds in return for his dedications.’ And this instance of liberality, which is so creditable to Shakspeare and his patron—to him who merited, and the high-spirited and noble youth who comprehended and rewarded his exalted merit—is to be discredited, because such an ardour of admiration does not square with the frigid views of probability entertained by the aged antiquarian in the exclusion of his closet.

The fortunes of Shakspeare were indeed rapid in their rise; but he did not selfishly monopolize the emoluments of his success. On being driven from Stratford, he left, as we have seen, a father in reduced circumstances, and a wife and children who were to be supported by his labours. We may confidently assert, on a comparison of facts and dates, that the spirit of Shakspeare was not of a niggard and undiscerning kind. The course of his success is marked by the returning prosperity of his family. In 1578, his father was unable to pay, as a member of the corporation, his usual contribution of four-pence a-week to the poor; and in 1588, a distress was issued for the seizure of his goods, which his poverty rendered nugatory; for it was returned, ‘Johannes Shakspeare nihil habet unde distributio potest levari.’ Yet, from this state of poverty, we find him within ten years rising with the fortunes of his child; cheered and invigorated by the first dawning of his illustrious son’s prosperity; and in 1590, applying at the Herold’s Office for a renewal of his grant of arms,† and described as a Justice of the Peace, and one possessing lands and tenements to the amount of 500l. That this restoration of Mr. John Shakspeare’s affairs properties, and the dresses, must have been worth infinitely more. In Greene’s Gracie’s worth of Wit, a player is introduced, boasting that his share in the stage apparel could not be sold for two hundred pounds. Shakspeare was also the purchaser of property at Stratford so early as 1587.††

§ The Globe was, perhaps, worth about 500l; the Blackfriars somewhat more: but this was the least valuable portion of the concern. The scenery, the originated in the filial piety of his son, appears evident, from our knowledge that the branch of traffic with which his circumstances in life were inseparably connected, was at that period in its most extreme state of depression.

The kindness of Shakspeare was not restricted to his family; and the only letter which remains out of the many he must have received, is one from his townsmen, Richard Quiney, requesting in terms that speak him confident of success, the loan of thirty pounds, a sum in those days by no means inconsiderable.

Pecuniary emolument and literary reputation were not the only reward that our poet received for his labours: the smiles of royalty itself shone upon him. 'Queen Elizabeth,' says Rowe, 'gave him many gracious marks of her favour'; and so delighted was she with the character of Falstaff, that she desired our author to continue it in another play, and exhibit him in love. To this command we owe The Merry Wives of Windsor. Dennis adds, that, from the Queen's eagerness to see it acted, 'she commanded it to be finished in fourteen days, and was afterwards, as tradition tells us, very well pleased with the representation.'

If Queen Elizabeth was pleased to direct the course of our author's imagination, with her successor he was a distinguished favourite: and James the First, whose talents and judgment have deserved more respect than they have received, wrote him a letter with his own hand, which was long in the possession of Sir W. D'Avenant. Dr. Farmer supposes this letter to have been written in return for the compliment paid the monarch in Macbeth; but he has overlooked an equally probable occasion. The Tempest was written for the festivities that attended the marriage of the Princess Elizabeth with the Prince Palatine; and was performed at court in the beginning of the year 1613. In the island Princess, Miranda, Shakspeare undoubtedly designed a poetical representative of the virgin and high-born bride; in the royal and learned Prospero, we may trace a complimentary allusion to the literary character and mysterious studies of her royal father; and it is at all events as likely that the letter of James to Shakspeare should have had reference to The Tempest as to Macbeth. Our author seems to have formed a far more correct estimate of the talents of his sovereign, than that which we have blindly received and adopted on the authority of his political enemies, the Non-conformists; and in a MS. volume of poems, which was purchased by Boswell, the following complimentary lines are preserved.

\[ SHAKSPEARE UPON THE KING. \]

'Crownes have their compass, length of dayes their date,
Triumphs their tombs, felicity her fate:
Of more than earth cunn earth make none partaker;
But knowledge makes the king most like his Maker.'

Thus honoured and applauded by the great, the intercourse of Shakspeare with that bright band and company of gifted spirits, which enabled the reigns of Elizabeth and James by their writings, must have been a source of the highest intellectual delight. The familiarity with which they seem to have communicated; the constant practice of uniting their powers in the completion of a joint production; the unenvying admiration with which they rejoiced in the triumphs of their literary companions, and introduced the compositions of one another to the world by recommendatory verses, present us with such a picture of kind and gay and intelligent society, as the imagination finds it difficult to entertain an adequate conception of. 'Sir Walter Raleigh, previously to his unfortunate engagement with the wretched Cibbom and others, had instituted a meeting of beaux esprits at the Mermaid, a celebrated tavern in Friday-street. Of this club, which combined more talent and genius, perhaps, than ever met together before or since, our author was a member; and here, for many years, he regularly repaired with Ben Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher, Selden, Cotton, Carew, Martin, Donne, and many others, whose names, even at this distant period, call up a mingled feeling of reverence and respect. Here, in the full flow and confidence of friendship, the lively and interesting "wit combats" took place between Ben Jonson and our author; and hither, in probable allusion to them, Beaumont fondly lets his thoughts wander, in his letter to Jonson, from the country:

"* What things have we seen Done at the Mermaid! I heard words that have been so nimble, and so full of subtle flame. As if that every one from whom they cause, Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest, &c."

The ‘wit combats’ alluded to in this interesting passage are mentioned by Fuller, who, speaking of Shakspeare, says, 'Many were the wit com-

 Gifford's Ben Jonson, vol. i. p. lxv. lxvi.
The intimacy of Shakspeare and Ben Jonson is alluded to in the following letter, written by G. Peel, a dramatic poet, to his friend Marle:

"FRIEND MARLE,

'Never longed for thy company more than last night. We were all very merry at the Globe, when Ned Alleyn did not scruple to alarime pleasantly to thy friend Will, that he had stolen his speeches about the qualities of an actor's excellency, in Hamlet his tragedy, from conversations manyfold which had passed between them, and opinions given by Alleyn touching the subject. Shakspeare did not take this talk in good sorte; but Jonson put an end to the strife, wittyly remarking. This affaire needeth no contentione; you steal it from Ned, no doubt; do not marvel: have you not seen him act tymes out of number?"

G. PEEL.

The first appearance of this Letter was in the Annual Register for 1770, whence it was copied into the Biographia Britannica, and in both these works it commences in the following manner:

'Ve must desire that my syster hyr watche, and the cockerie book you promysed, may be sente hye the man.—I never longed, &c.' "Of the four, this is the only anecdote worth preserving; but', concludes Dr. Drake, 'I apprehend it to be a mere forgery.'

The names of Shakspeare and Ben Jonson, as friends, and the most successful cultivators of our early dramatic literature, are so intimately connected, that the life of one involves the frequent mention of the other. Indeed, it is reported by Rowe, that Shakspeare was the original means of introducing the works of Jonson to the stage. Jonson, altogether unknown to the world, had offered one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the persons into whose hands it was put, after having turned it carelessly and superciliously over, were just upon returning it to him with an ill-natured answer, that it would be of no service to their company, when Shakspeare luckily cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Jonson and his writings to the public."—This anecdote is disputed by Mr. Gifford. He proves that in 1598, when Every Man in His Humour, the first effort of Jonson's genius which we are acquainted with, was produced, "its author was as well known as Shakspeare, and, perhaps, better." Very true; but this does not in the least impugn the credibility of Rowe's tradition.

is nowhere asserted, that Every Man in his Humour was the play which thus attracted the attention of Shakespeare; all arguments therefore deduced from the situation held by Jonson in the literary world, at the time that comedy was first acted, are perfectly invalid. The performance which recommended him to Shakespeare, was most probably a boyish effort, full of talent and inexperience, which soon passed from the public mind, but not sooner than the author wished it to be forgotten; which he had the good sense to omit in the collection of his works published in 1616, and which, perhaps, he only remembered with pleasure from its having been the means of introducing him to the friendship of his great contemporary.

But whatever cause might have originated the mutual kindness which subsisted between these two excellent and distinguished men, it is certain that an intimacy the most sincere and affectionate really did subsist between them. On the part of Jonson, indeed, the memorial of their attachment has been handed down to us in expressions as strong and unequivocal as any which the power of language can combine. He speaks of Shakespeare, not indeed as one blinded to the many defects by which the beauty of his productions was impaired, but with such candour and tenderness, as every reasonable man would desire at the hands of his friends, and in terms which secured a credit to his commendations, by shewing that they were not the vain effects of a blind and ridiculous partiality. Jonson writes, 'I love the man, and do honour his memory, on this side idola try, as much as any.' And it is from his Elegy, To the Memory of his beloved Master William Shakespeare, that we have derived the two most endearing appellations, the 'Gentle Shakspeare,' and 'Sweet Swan of Avon;' by which our poet has been known and characterized for nearly two centuries.*

It must appear extraordinary, that in opposition to such decisive proofs of the kindness entertained by Jonson for our author, his memory should have been persecuted for the last century by the most unfounded calumnies, as if he had been the insidious and persevering enemy of his reputation. The rise and progress of this slander, which has been propagated through every modern edition of Shakespeare's works, is not wholly undeserving of our attention. Rowe, indeed, has the following anecdote, which he relates, perhaps, on the authority of Dryden, that 'in a conversation between Sir John Suckling, Sir William D'Avenant, Endymion Porter, Mr. Hales of Eton, and Ben Jonson, Sir John Suckling, who was a professed admirer of Shakespeare, had undertaken his defence against Ben Jonson with some warmth; Mr. Hales, who had sat still for some time, told them, that, if Mr. Shakespeare had not read the ancients, neither had he stolen any thing from them; and that if he would produce any one topic finely treated by any one of them, he would undertake to show something upon the same subject at least as well written by Shakespeare.' This anecdote was written nearly a hundred years after the death of our author, and more than seventy after the death of Jonson. Even supposing all the circumstances to be correct,† it only represents Jonson as maintaining an opinion in conversation which he has printed in his Discoveries, that 'many times Shakspeare fell into those things which could not escape laughter,' and arguing, that a deeper knowledge of the classic writers would have improved his genius, and taught him to lop away all such unseemly exuberances of style. It shews the most learned poet of his time, or, perhaps, of any time, honestly ascertaining the advantages that a poet may derive from variety of learning; but this is all; and it supposes no undue or unfriendly attempt in Jonson to depreciate the fame of Shakespeare. Indeed no hint of the existence of any difference or unkindness between those celebrated individuals is to be found in any contemporary author. Dryden thought Jonson's Verses to Shakspeare sparing and injudicious; but to this opinion Pope very justly recorded his dissent; and wondered that Dryden should have held it. Rowe in the first edition of his Life of Shakespeare, insinuates a doubt of the sincerity of Jonson's friendship; before the publication of his second edition he found cause to reject a suspicion so injurious to the reputation of Jonson, and had the honesty to erase the passage from his work. The words, however, did not escape the vigilance of Malone: they were re-printed, and the sentiment re-adopted; and, as if it were more valuable to the commentators, from having been condemned by its author, their united labours and ingenuity have been indefatigably employed in inventing and strained evidence to support an insinuation, which was too carelessly disseminated, and too silently withdrawn. Rowe should have made such an explicit recantation of his error, as might have repaired the ill he had occasioned, and guarded the good name of one of our greatest poets against the revival of the calumny: this he unfortunately omitted; and he thus left the character of Jonson bare to the senseless and grata tuous malignity of every puny spirit, that chose to amuse its spleen by insulting the memory of the mighty dead. For years, the friend and eulogist of Shakespeare was aspersed as sensuous and ungrate ful, in almost every second note of every edition of our author's works; and it is only lately that the judicious exertions of Gilchrist and of Gifford have exposed the fallacy of such unwarranted imputations, and demonstrated beyond the possibility of future doubt, that Jonson and Shakspeare were friends and associates, till the latter finally retired—that no feud, no jealousy, ever disturbed their connexion—that Shakspeare was pleased with Jonson, and that Jonson loved and admired Shakspeare.*

But courted, praised, and rewarded as he was, the stage, as a profession, was little fitted to the disposition of our poet. In his Sonnets,† which afford us the only means of attaining a knowledge of his sentiments upon the subject, we find him lamenting the nature of his life with that dissatisfaction, which every noble spirit would necessarily suffer, in a state of unimportant labour and undisguised publicity. In the hundred and tenth he exclaims,

* Also, 'tis true I have gone here and there, And made myself a moisture; to the view.'

And again, in the hundred and eleventh; with evident allusion to his being obliged to appear on the stage, and write for the theatre, he repeats,

'O, for my sake, do you with fortune chide
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide,
Than public means, which public manners breed.'

With this distaste for a course of life, to which adversity had originally driven him, it is not extraordinary to find that he availed himself of the first moment of independence, to abandon the histrionic part of his double profession. This occurred so early as 1604. After that time his name never appears on the lists of performers which were attached to the original editions of the old plays. Ben Jonson's Semonus, which came out in 1603, is the last play in which he is mentioned as a performer. As a writer for the stage, and part proprietor of two principal theatres, he was obliged to be much in London; but he never took root and settled there. His family always resided at Stratford, and thither he once a year repaired to them. In the privacy of his native town all the affections of his heart appear to have been 'garner'd up;' and there, from his beginning to reap the wages of success, he deposited the emoluments of his labours, and hoped to find a home in his retirement. In 1607, he purchased New Place, a house which he repaired and adorned to his own taste, and which remained in the family till the death of his granddaughter, Lady Barnard; and in the garden of which he planted the celebrated mulberry-tree, which was so long an object of veneration as the flourishing memorial of the poet. To the possession of New Place, Shakspeare successively added in the course of the following eight years, an estate of about one hundred and seven acres of land, and a moiety of the great and small tithes of Stratford.§

It was in one of his periodical journeys from London to Stratford, that 'one midsummer night' he met at Crendon, in Bucks, with the original of Dogberry. Aubrey says, that the constable was still alive about 1642. 'He and Ben Jonson did gather humours of men wherever they came; and as the constable of Crendon sat for the picture of Dogberry, so we are told, on the authority of Bowman the player, that part of Sir John Falstaff's character was drawn from a towsman of Stratford, who either faithlessly broke a contract, or spitefully refused to part with some land for a valuable consideration, adjoining to Shakspeare's house.'† Oldys has where is the man who has not offences to repent of? Why are we to suppose Shakspeare alone immaculate? And would it not be continually urged as a reproach by the calumnious voice of Envje against the favoured friend of Southampton, that he had been obliged to fly his country in poverty and disgrace?

* Motley, i.e. a fool, a buffoon.

§ The house at Stratford that Shakspeare had consecrated by his residence, exists no longer. New Place descended from his daughter Susanna, to his grand-daughter, Mrs. Nash, afterwards Lady Barnard; and there, during the civil wars, that lady and her husband, in 1644, received Henrietta Maria, the queen of Charles the First, who sojourned with them for three weeks. After passing through the hands of several intervening proprietors, it fell into the possession of Sir Hugh Clifton, who pulled down the ancient house, and built one more elegant on the same spot. This was in its turn destroyed by the Rev. Mr. Gastrill, because he conceived himself assessed too highly; and it was by the same barbarous hands, that the celebrated mulberry-tree, which Shakspeare himself had planted, was cut down, because he found himself inconvenienced by the visitors, who were drawn by admiration of the poet, to visit the classic ground on which it stood.

† Aubrey, Ms. Mrs. Ashmot.

recorded in his MS. another anecdote connected with those journeys of our poet to Stratford, which I shall give in his own words. — If tradition may be trusted, Shakspere often baited at the Crown Inn or Tavern in Oxford, in his journey to and from London. The landlady was a woman of great beauty and sprightly wit, and her husband, Mr. John Davenant (afterwards mayor of that city), a grave, melancholy man; who, as well as his wife, used much to delight in Shakspere's pleasant company. Their son, young Will. Davenant (afterwards Sir William), was then a little school-boy in the town, of about seven or eight years old, and so fond also of Shakspere, that whenever he heard of his arrival, he would fly from school to see him. One day, an old townswoman observing the boy running homeward, almost out of breath, asked him whether he was posting in that heat and hurry. He answered, to see his god-father Shakspere. There's a good boy, said the other, but have a care that you don't take God's name in vain. This story Mr. Pope told me at the Earl of Oxford's table, upon occasion of some discourse which arose about Shakspere's monument, then newly erected in Westminster Abbey; and he quoted Mr. Betterton, the player, for his authority.

The anecdote of Shakspere's death, as related by Dr. Coombes, is another which has commonly been attributed to Shakspere, his friend, but Mr. Aubrey, in his edition of Aubrey's随时, says:— 'Sir John-a-Combe, an old usurer, whose name was Shakespeare, and was buried in Stratford, a drunken blacksmith, with a carbuncled face, recoiled up to him and demanded,

'Now, Mr. Shakspere, tell me if you can,

The difference between a youth and a young man?'

to which our poet instantly rejoined:

'Thou son of fire, with thy face like a maple,

The same difference as between a scalded and coddled apple.'

A part of the wit,' says Dr. Drake, 'turns upon the comparison between the blacksmith's face, and a species of maple, the bark of which is uncommonly rough, and the grain undulated and crisped into a variety of curls.'

Rove relates, that he had a particular intimacy with Mr. Combe, 'an old gentleman noted thereabouts for his wealth and usury: it happened, that in a pleasant conversation amongst their common friends, Mr. Combe told Shakspere, in a laughing manner, that he fancied he intended to write his epitaph, if he happened to outlive him; and since he could not know what might be said of him when he was dead, he desired it might be done immediately; upon which Shakspere gave him these four verses:

'Ten in the hundred lies here ingrav'd;

'Tis a hundred to ten his soul is not sav'd:

If any man ask, who lies in this tomb?

Oh! oh! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.

But the sharpness of the satire is said to have stung the man so severely, that he never forgave it.'

Aubrey narrates the story differently, and says, 'that one time as Shakspere was at the tavern at Stratford, Mr. Combes, an old usurer, was to be buried, he makes there this extempore epitaph upon him:

'Ten in the hundred the devil allows,

But Combe will have twelve, he swears and he vows;

If any one ask, who lies in this tomb?

Hab! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.'

Dr. Drake considers Aubrey's version of the event as the most probable. In some of its circumstances Rowe's account is contradicted; for it is certain, that Shakspere and Combe continued friends till the death of the latter; who should be omitted in this edition, than from any regard for their intrinsic value.

A story, preserved by the tradition of Stratford, and which, according to Malone, 'was related fifty years ago to a gentleman of that place, by a person upwards of eighty years of age, whose father was contemporary with Shakspere,' may not improperly be attributed to this portion of his life. It is said, that as Shakspere was leaning over the hatch of aurer's door at Stratford, a drunken blacksmith, with a carbuncled face, recoiled up to him and demanded, left him 61, as a token of kind remembrance in his will; and that no feud afterwards arose between our poet and the relations of Combe, seems pretty evident from Shakspere's having bequeathed his sword to Mr. Thomas Combe, the nephew of the usurer.

In addition to the above ludicrous verses, two epitaphs of a serious character have been ascribed to Shakspere by Sir William Dugdale, which are preserved in a collection of epitaphs at the end of the Visitations of Salop. Among the monuments in Tongue Church, in the county of Salop, is one erected in remembrance of Sir Thomas Stanley, knight, whom Malone supposes to have died about 1600. The tomb stands on the north side of the chancel, supported with Corinthian columns. It hath two figures of men in armour lying on it, one below the arches and columns, the other above them; and besides a prose inscription in front, the monument is enriched by the following verses of Shakspere.

Written on the east end of the tomb:

Ask who lies here, but do not weep;
He is not dead, he doth but sleep.
This stony register is for his bones,
His name is more perpetual than these stones:
And his own goodness, with himself being gone,
Shall live, when earthly monument is none.

Written on the west end thereof:

Not monumental stone preserves our fame,
Nor sky-aspiring pyramids our name.
The memory of him for whom this stands,
Shall outlive marble, and defacer's hands.
When all to time's consumption shall be given,
Stanley, for whom this stands, shall stand in heaven.

Besides these inscriptions for the monument of Sir Thomas Stanley, which we have the authority of Dugdale, a Warwickshire man, and who spent the greater part of his life in that county, for attributing to our author; we find another epitaph ascribed to him in a manuscript volume of poems by William Herrick, and others. The volume, which is in the handwriting of the time of Charles the First, is among Rawlinson's Collections, in the Bodleian Library, and contains the following epitaph:

When God was pleas'd, the world unwilling yet,
Elia James to Nature payd his debt,
And here reposeth: as he lived, he dyd;
The saying in him strongly verisid:—
Such life, such death: then, the known truth to tell,
He lived a godly life, and dyed as well.
* Wm. Shakspere.

There was a family of the surname of James, formerly resident at Stratford, to some one of whom the above verses were probably inscribed.

The life of our poet was now drawing towards its close; and he was soon to require from the hands of others those last honours to the dead, which, while alive, he had shewn himself so ready to contribute. His eldest and favourite daughter, Susanna, had been married as early as 1607, to Dr. Hall, a physician of considerable skill and reputation in his profession, who resided at Stratford; and early in 1616, his youngest daughter, Judith, married Mr. Thomas Quincey, a vintner of the same place. This ceremony took place on February the 10th. On the twenty-fifth of the following month, her father made his will—being, according to his own account, in perfect health and memory—and a second month had not elapsed before Shakspere was no more. He died on the twenty-third of April, 1616, and on his birth-day, having completed his fifty-second year. * It is remarkable,* says Dr. Drake, that on the same day expired, in Spain, his great and amiable contemporary Cervantes; and the world was thus deprived, nearly at the same moment, of the two most original writers which modern Europe has produced.

Of the disease by which the life of our poet was thus suddenly terminated, we are left in ignorance. His son-in-law, Dr. Hall, left for publication a manuscript collection of essays, selected from not less than a thousand diseases; but the earliest case recorded is dated 1617, and thus all mention is omitted of the only one which could have secured to his work any permanent interest or value.

On the second day after his decease, the remains of Shakspere were interred on the north side of the chancel of the great church of Stratford. Here a monument, containing a bust of the poet, was erected to his memory. He is represented under an arch, in a sitting posture, a cushion spread before him, with a pen in his right hand, and his left rested on a scroll of paper. The following Latin distich is engraved under the cushion:

Judicio Pyliam, genio Soratem, arte Maronem,
Terra tegit, populus secat, Olympus habet.

The first syllable in Soratem is here made short, which cannot be allowed. Perhaps we should read Sophelem. Shakspere is then appositely compared with a dramatic author among the ancients: but still it should be remembered, that the eulogium is lessened while the metre is re-formed; and it is well known, that some of our early writers of Latin poetry were uncommonly negligent in their prosody, especially in proper names. The thought of this distich, as Mr. Tollet observes, might have been taken from The Faery Queene of Spenser.†

* Drake's Shakspere and his Times, vol. ii. p. 611.
† Book 2. c. 9. st. 18, and c. 10. st. 3.
To this Latin inscription on Shakspeare, should be added the lines which are found underneath it on his monument:

Stay passenger, why dost thou go so fast?
Read, if thou canst, whom envious death hath plac'd Within this monument; Shakspeare, with whom Quick nature dy'd; whose name doth deck the tomb
Far more than cost: since all that he hath writ
Leaves living art but page to serve his wit.'

Ex. 53, die 23 April.'

And on his grave-stone underneath, is inscribed:

'Good friend, for Jesus' sake, forbear
To dig the dust inclosed here.
Blest be the man that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.'

The tomb at Stratford is not the only monumental tribute that has been raised to the honour of Shakspeare. A cenotaph was subsequently erected to his memory in Westminster Abbey, by the direction of the Earl of Burlington, Pope, Dr. Mead, and Mr. Martyn. This monument, which cost three hundred pounds, was the work of Scheemaker, after a design by Kent, and was opened in January, 1741; one hundred and twenty-five years after the death of our author. The dean and chapter of Westminster gave the ground, and the expenses of the statuary were defrayed by a benefit at each of the London theatres. The receipts of Drury Lane exceeded two hundred pounds; at Covent Garden they did not amount to more than half that sum.

Of the genius of Shakspeare it were in this place superfluous to write: that task has been performed by others; and is sufficiently discussed in the discourses of Rowe, and Pope, and Johnson; but of his disposition and moral character, it may not be uninteresting to give the following passage from Dr. Drake. — 'To these tradition has ever borne the most uniform and favourable testimony. And, indeed, had she been silent on the subject, his own works would have whispered to us the truth; would have told us, in almost every page, of the gentleness, the benevolence, and the goodness, of his heart. For, though no one has exceeded him in painting the stronger passions of the human breast, it is evident that he delighted most in the expression of loveliness and simplicity, and was ever willing to descend from the loftiest soarings of imagination, to sport with innocence and beauty. Though the world of spirits and of nature, says the admirable Schlegel, 'had laid all their treasures at his feet: in strength a demi-god, in profundity of view a prophet, in all-seeing wisdom a protecting spirit of a higher order, he yet lowered himself to mortals, as if unconscious of his superiority, and was as open and unassuming as a child.'

'That a temper of this description, and com-

bled with such talents, should be the object of sincere and ardent friendship, can excite no surprise. ‘I loved the man,’ says Jonson, with a noble burst of enthusiasm, ‘and do honour his memory on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was, indeed, honest; and of an open and free nature;’ and Rowe, repeating the unconstrued rudumour of times past, has told us,—that every one, who had a true taste of merit, and could distinguish men, had generally a just value and esteem for him;’ adding, ‘that his exceeding candour and good-nature must certainly have inclined all the gentler part of the world to love him.

‘No greater proof, indeed, can be given of the felicity of his temper, and the sweetness of his manners, than that all who addressed him, seem to have uniformly connected his name with the epithets worthy, gentle, or beloved; nor was he backward in returning this esteem, many of his sonnets indicating the warmth with which he cherished the remembrance of his friends. Thus the thirtieth opens with the following pensive retrospect:—

‘When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh—
For precious friends, hid in death's dateless night.’

‘And in the thirty-first he tenderly exclaims:—

‘How many a holy and obsequious tear,
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye,
As interest of the dead!’

‘Another very fascinating feature in the character of Shakspeare, was the almost constant cheerfulness and serenity of his mind: he was ‘very good company,' says Aubrey, ‘and of a very ready, and pleasant, and smooth wit.' In this, as Mr. Godwin has justly observed, he bore a striking resemblance to Chaucer, who was remarkable for the placidity and cheerfulness of his disposition; nor can there, probably, be a surer indication of that peace and sunshine of the soul which surpasses all other gifts, than tois habitual tone of mind.

‘That Shakspeare was entitled to its possession from his moral virtues, we have already seen; and that, in a religious point of view, he had a claim to the enjoyment, the numerous passages in his works, which breathe a spirit of pious gratitude and devotional rapture, will sufficiently declare. In fact, upon the topic of religious, as upon that of ethic wisdom, no profane poet can furnish us with a greater number of just and luminous aphorisms; passages which dwell upon the heart, and reach the soul; for they have issued from lips of re, from conceptions worthy of a superior nature, from feelings solemn and earthy.'

Of the descendants of Shakespeare there is not one remaining. Hamnet, his only son, died in childhood. His eldest daughter, Mrs. Hall, survived her father upwards of thirty years; and if the inscription of her tomb present us with a fair estimate of her talents and her virtues, she was the worthy child of Shakespeare. She left one daughter only, who is mentioned in our poet's will, as his "niece Elizabeth." This lady was twice married; to Thomas Nashe, Esq. and afterwards to Sir John Barnard, of Abington, near Northampton, but had no issue by either husband. Judith, the other daughter of our poet, was the mother of several children; of which the eldest, with an honest pride in that maiden name, which her father's genius had rendered illustrious, was christened Shakespeare; but none of her offspring arrived at years of maturity.

It must strike every one as extraordinary, that the writings of a poet so distinguished should have been handed down to us in so corrupt and imperfect a state; and that so little should be known with any degree of certainty respecting the author of them. Shakespeare himself appears to have been entirely careless of literary fame. In his early works he was sufficiently cautious in superintending their progress through the press; and the Venus and Adonis, the Rape of Lucrece, and the Titus Andronicus, were presented to the public with as much typographical accuracy as any volumes of the time. He was at first not indifferent to celebrity as an author; but it was a mere youthful vanity, and having attained the object of his ambition, and perceived its worthlessness, he afterwards only considered his genius and his improved skill in composition as the means of acquiring independence for his family, and securing an early retirement from the anxieties of public life. He wrote only for the theatre; his purpose was answered, if his pieces were successful on the stage; and he was perfectly careless of the manner in which his most splendid productions were disfigured in surreptitious and defective editions, and his most exquisite passages rendered ridiculous by the blunders of ignorant transcribers. The plays that were printed in his life-time, with the exception of Titus Andronicus, had all issued from the press under circumstances the most injurious to the reputation of their author, without his revision or superintendence, and perhaps without his consent or knowledge; and when, eight years after his death, his friends Heminge and Condell undertook the collection and publication of his works, it is scarcely possible that the MSS. from which the edition was printed should have been the genuine MSS. of Shakspeare. Those had most probably perished in the fire that destroyed the Globe Theatre in 1613; and the first folio was made up from the playhouse copies, and deformed by all the omissions and the additions which had been adopted to suit the imperfections or the caprice of the several performers.—If Shakspeare still appears to us the first of poets, it is in spite of every possible disadvantage, to which his own sublime contempt of applause had exposed his fame, from the ignorance, the negligence, the avarice, or the officiousness, of his early editors.†

To these causes it is to be ascribed that the writings of Shakspeare have come down to us in a state more imperfect than those of any other author of his time, and requiring every exertion of critical skill to illustrate and amend them. That so little should be known with certainty of the history of his life, was the natural consequence of the events which immediately followed his dissolution. It is true, that the age in which he flourished was little curious about the lives of literary men; but our ignorance

* Here lyeth the body of Susanna, wife to John Hall, Gent. 3d daughter of William Shakspeare, Gent. She deceased the 11th of July, A. D. 1649, aged 66.

† Witty above her sexe, but that's not all, Wise to salvation was good Mistris Hall. Something of Shakspeare was in that; but this Wholly of him with whom she's now in bliss. Then, passenger, hast ne'er a tear? To weep with that wept with all: That wept, yet set herself to chere Them up with comfort cordiall. Her love shall live, her mercy spread, When thou hast ne'er a tear to shed.

‡ The foregoing English verses, which are preserved by Dugdale, are not now remaining, half of the tombstone having been cut away, and another half stone joined to it, with the following inscription on it.—"Here lyeth the body of Richard Watts, of Ryhon-Clifford, in the parish of Old Stratford, Gent. who departed this life the 23d of May, Anno Domini 1687, and in the sixt year of his age." Thus Mr. Watts, as I am informed by the Rev. Mr. Davenport, was owner of, and lived at, the estate of Ryhon-Clifford, which was once the property of Dr. Hall.

† Mrs. Hall was buried on the 16th July, 1649, as appears from the register of Stratford.—Malone.

‡ It may be perceived that many passages must have been corrupted beyond the reach of restoration, by comparing the following lines from Lear, which the ingenuity of the commentators has fortunately been able to set right, with the original text:

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus: That these hot tears, which break from me perseive, Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs upon thee! The untended woundings of a father’s curse Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes, Beweep this cause again, I'll pluck you out, And cast you, with the waters that you lose, To temper clay.

The first edition reads the first line correctly, and continues, ‘that these hot tears, that break from me when the tender woundings of a father’s curse, peruse every sense about the old fond eyes, beweep this cause again?’ &c.
must not wholly be attributed to the want of curiosity in the immediate successors of the poet. The public mind soon became violently agitated in the conflict of opposite opinions. Every individual was called upon to take his stand as the partisan of a religious or political faction. Each was too intimately occupied with his personal interest to find leisure for so peaceful a pursuit as tracing the biography of a poet. If this was the case during the time of civil commotion, under the puritanical dynasty of Cromwell the stage was totally destroyed; and the life of a dramatic author, however eminent his merits, would not only have been considered as a subject underving of inquiry, but only worthy of contempt and abomination. The genius of Shakspeare was dear to Milton and Dryden; to a few lofty minds and gifted spirits; but it was dead to the multitude of his countrymen, who, in their foolish bigotry, would have considered their very houses as polluted, if they had contained a copy of his works. After the Restoration, these severe restrictions were relaxed, and, as is universally the case, the counteraction was correspondent to the action. The nation suddenly exchanged the rigid austerity of Puritanism for the extreme of profligacy and licentiousness. When the drama was revived, it existed no longer to inculcate such lessons of morality as were enforced by the contrition of Macbeth, the purity of Isabel, or the suffering constancy of Iwanen; but to teach modesty to blush at its own innocence, to corrupt the heart by pictures of debauchery, and to exalt a gay selfishness and daring sensuality above all that is noble in principle and honourable in action. At this period Shakspeare was forgotten. He wrote not for such profligate times. His sentiments would have been met by no correspondent feelings in the breasts of such audiences as were then collected within the walls of the metropolitan theatres, composed of men who came to hear their vices flattered; and of women masked, ashamed to show their faces at representations which they were sufficiently abandoned to delight in. The jesting, lying, bold intriguing rake, whom Shakspeare had rendered contemptible in Lucio, and hateful in Iachimo, was the very character that the dramatists of Charles's time were painting after the model of the court favourites, and representing in false colours as a deserving object of approbation. French taste and French morals had banished our author from the stage, and his name had faded from the memory of the people. Tate, in his altered play of King Lear, mentions the original in his dedication as an obscure piece: the author of the Tanner, in quoting some lines of Macbeth, cites them from the disfigured alteration of D'Avenant. The works of Shakspeare were only read by those whom the desire of literary plunder induced to pry into the volumes of antiquated authors, with the hopes of discovering some neglected jewels that might be clandestinely transplanted to enrich their own poverty of invention; and so little were the productions of the most gifted poet that ever ventured to embark on the varying waters of the imagination known to the generality of his countrymen, that Otway stole the character of the Nurse and all the love scenes of Romeo and Juliet, and published them as his own, without the slightest acknowledgment of the obligation, or any apprehension of detection. A better taste returned: but when, nearly a century after the death of Shakspeare, Rowe undertook to superintend an edition of his Plays, and to collect the Memoirs of his Life; the race had passed away from whom any certain recollections of our great national poet might have been gathered; and nothing better was to be obtained than the slight notes of Aubrey, the scattered hints of Oldys, the loose intimations which had escaped from D'Avenant; and the vague reports which Betterton had gleaned in his pilgrimage to Stratford.

* Even in the reign of Elizabeth, the enmity against the stage was carried to a great extent; play-books were burnt privately by the bishops, and publicly by the Puritans.

SHAKESPEARE'S WILL,

FROM THE ORIGINAL

IN THE OFFICE OF THE PREROGATIVE COURT OF CANTERBURY.

Is the name of God, Amen. I William Shakspeare, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gent., in perfect health and memory (God be praised!) do make and ordain this my last will and testament in manner and form following; that is to say:

First, I commend my soul into the hands of God my Creator, hoping, and assuredly believing through the only merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting; and my body to the earth whereof it is made.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my daughter Judith, one hundred and fifty pounds of lawful English money, to be paid unto her in manner and form following: that is to say, one hundred pounds in discharge of her marriage portion within one year after my decease, with consideration after the rate of two shillings in the pound for so long time as the same shall be unpaid unto her after my decease; and the fifty pounds residue thereof, upon her surrendering of, or giving of such sufficient security as the overseers of this my will shall like of, to surrender or grant, all her estate and right that shall descend or come unto her after my decease, or that she now hath, of, in, or to, one copyhold tenement, with the appurtenances, lying and being in Stratford-upon-Avon aforesaid, in the said county of Warwick, being parcel or holden of the manor of Rowington, unto my daughter Susanna Hall, and her heirs for ever.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my said daughter Judith one hundred and fifty pounds more, if she, or any issue of her body, be living at the end of three years next ensuing the day of the date of this my will, during which time my executors to pay her consideration from my decease according to the rate aforesaid: and if she die within the said term without issue of her body, then my will is, and I do give and bequeath one hundred pounds thereof to my niece [Elizabeth Hall, and the fifty pounds to be set forth by my executors during the life of my sister Joan Hart, and the use and profit thereof coming, shall be paid to my said sister Joan, and after her decease the said fifty pounds shall remain amongst the children of my said sister, equally to be divided amongst them; but if my said daughter Judith be living at the end of the said three years, or any issue of her body, then my will is, and so I devise and bequeath the said hundred and fifty pounds to be set out by my executors and overseers for the best benefit of her and her issue, and the stock not to be paid unto her so long as she shall be married and covert baron; but my will is, that she shall have the consideration yearly paid unto her during her life, and after her decease the said stock and consideration to be eldest daughter by the custom of the manor.—MALONE, edit. 1821.

† to my niece—Elizabeth Hall was our poet's grand-daughter. So, in Othello, Act I. sc. 1. Iago says to Brabantio: 'You'll have your nephews' neigh to you.' meaning his grand-children.—MALONE.

* This was found to be unnecessary, as it was ascertained that the copyhold descended to the paid to our children, if she have any, and if not, to her executors or assigns, she living the said term after my decease; provided that if such husband as she shall at the end of the said three years be married unto, or at any [time] after, do sufficiently assure unto her, and the issue of her body, lands answerable to the portion by this my will given unto her, and to be adjudged so by my executors and overseers, then my will is, that the said hundred and fifty pounds shall be paid to such husband as shall make such assurance, to his own use.

Item, I give and bequeath unto my said sister Joan twenty pounds, and all my wearing apparel to be paid and delivered within one year after my decease; and I do will and devise unto her the house, with the appurtenances, in Stratford, wherein she dwelleth, for her natural life, under the yearly rent of twelve-pence.

Item, I give and bequeath unto her three sons, William Hart, — Hart,* and Michael Hart, five pounds a piece, to be paid within one year after my decease.

Item, I give and bequeath unto the said Elizabeth Hall all my plate (except my broad silver and gilt bowl†), that I now have at the date of this my will.

Item, I give and bequeath unto the poor of Stratford aforesaid ten pounds; to Mr. Thomas Combe,‡ my sword; to Thomas Russel, esq. five pounds; and to Francis Collins§ of the borough of Warwick.

* — Hart. It is singular that neither Shakespeare nor any of his family should have recorded the Christian name of his nephew, who was born at Stratford but eleven years before the making of his will. His Christian name was Thomas; and he was baptized in that town, July 24, 1600. — Malone.
† — except my broad silver and gilt bowl. This bowl, as we afterwards find, our poet bequeathed to his daughter Judith.
‡ — Mr. Thomas Combe.] This gentleman was baptized at Stratford, Feb. 9, 1588-9, so that he was twenty seven years old at the time of Shakespeare’s death. He died at Stratford in July 1657, aged 68; and his elder brother William died at the same place, Jan. 30, 1600-1, aged 50. Mr. Thomas Combe by his will, made June 26, 1656, directed his executors to convert all his personal property into money, and to lay it out in the purchase of lands, to be settled on William Combe the eldest son of John Combe of Althorpe in the county of Lincoln, gent., and his heirs male; remainder to his two brothers successively. Where, therefore, our poet’s sword has wandered, I have not been able to discover. I have taken the trouble to ascertain the ages of Shakespeare’s friends and relations, and the time of their deaths, because we are thus enabled to judge how far the traditions concerning him which were communicated to Mr. Rowe in the beginning of this century, are worthy of credit. — Malone.
§ — to Francis Collins.] This gentleman was godfather to Shakespeare’s only son, who was called after him. Mr. Sadler, I believe, was born about rough of Warwick, in the county of Warwick, gent. thirteen pounds six shillings and eight-pence, to be paid within one year after my decease.

Item, I give and bequeath to Hamlet [Hamnet] Sadler twenty-six shillings eight-pence, to buy him a ring; to William Reynolds, gent. twenty-six shilling eight-pence, to buy him a ring; to my godson, William Walker,‡ twenty shillings in gold; to Anthony Nash, gent. twenty-six shillings eight-pence; and to Mr. John Nash,†† twenty-six shillings eight-pence; and to my fellows, John Heminge, Richard Burbage, and Henry Cundell,‡‡ twenty-six shillings eight-pence a piece, to buy them rings.

Item, I give, will, bequeath, and devise, unto my daughter, Susannah Hall, for better enabling of her to perform this my will, and towards the performance thereof, all that capital message or tenement, with the appurtenances, in Stratford aforesaid, called The New Place, wherein I now dwell, and two messages or tenements, with the appurtenances, situate, lying, and being in Henley-street, within the borough of Stratford aforesaid; and all my barns, stables, orchards, gardens, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whatsoever, situate, lying, and being, or to be had, received, perceived, or taken, within the towns, hamlets, villages, fields, and grounds, of Stratford-upon-Avon, Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe, §§ or in any of them, in the said the year 1599, and died at Stratford-upon-Avon, in October 1612. His wife, Judith Sadler, who was godmother to Shakespeare’s youngest daughter, was buried there, March 23, 1613-14. Our poet probably was godfather to their son William, who was baptized at Stratford, Feb. 5, 1599-8. — Malone.

* — to my godson, William Walker.] William, the son of Henry Walker, was baptized at Stratford, Oct. 16, 1608. I mention this circumstance, because it appears that one author was at his native town in the autumn of that year. Mr. William Walker was buried at Stratford, March 1, 1679-80. — Malone.
 — to Anthony Nash.] He was father of Mr. Thomas Nash, who married our poet’s grand-daughter, Elizabeth Hall. He lived, I believe, at Welcombe, where his estate lay; and was buried at Stratford, Nov. 18, 1622. — Malone.
†† — to Mr. John Nash.] This gentleman died at Stratford, and was buried there, Nov. 16, 1623. — Malone.
‡‡ — to my fellows John Heminge, Richard Burbage, and Henry Cundell.] These our poet’s fellows did not very long survive him. Burbage died in March, 1610; Cundell in December 1627; and Heminge in October, 1613. — Malone.
§§ — Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe.] The lands of Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe, here devised, were, in Shakespeare’s time, a continuation of one large field, all in the parish of Stratford. Bishopton is two miles from Stratford, and Welcombe one. For Bishopton, Mr. Theobald erroneously printed Bushopton, and the error has been continued in all the subsequent editions. The word in Shakespeare’s original will is spelt Bushopton, the vulgar pronunciation of Bishopton.

I searched the Indexes in the Rolls Chapel from county of Warwick; and also all that messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, wherein one John Robinson dwelleth, situate, lying, and being, in the Blackfriars in London near the Wardrobe: * and all other my lands, tenements, appurtenances, unto the said Susanna Hall, for her decease to the first son of her body lawfully issuing, and to the heirs-males of the body of the said first son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the second son of her body lawfully issuing, and to the heirs-males of the body of the said second son lawfully issuing; and for default of such heirs, to the third son of the body of the said Susanna lawfully issuing, and to the heirs-males of the body of the said third son lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, the same so to be and remain to the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sons of her body lawfully issuing one after another, and to the heirs-males of the bodies of the said fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sons lawfully issuing, in such manner as it is before limited to be and remain to the first, second, and third sons of her body, and to their heirs-males;

and for default of such issue, the said premises to be and remain to my said niece Hall, and the heirs-males of her body lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to my daughter Judith, and the heirs-males of her body lawfully issuing; and for default of such issue, to the right heirs of me enrolment of the purchase-deed of the estate here devised by our poet, and of ascertaining its extent and value; but it was not enrolled during that period, nor could I find any inquisition taken after his death, by which its value might have been ascertained. I suppose it was conveyed by the former owner to Shakspeare, not by bargain and sale, but by a deed of freedomin, which it was not necessary to enroll.—

chased by King Edward the Third from Sir John

Thus Shakspeare's original will.
It appears, in the original will of Shakspeare (now in the Prerogative-office, Doctors' Commons), that he had forgot his wife; the legacy to her being expressed by an interlineation, as well as those to Heminge, Burbage, and Cundell.
The will is written on three sheets of paper, the last two of which are undoubtedly subscribed with Shakspeare's own hand. The first indeed has his name in the margin, but it differs somewhat in spelling as well as manner, from the two signatures that follow.—Malone and Stevens.

The above are the only dramatic productions of our Author which were published during his life-time. All of them were sent into the world imperfectly; some printed from copies surreptitiously obtained by means of inferior performers, who, deriving no benefit from the theatre, except their salary, were uninterested in the retention of copies, which was one of the chief concerns of our ancient managers; and the rest, as Hamlet in its first edition, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Romeo and Juliet, Henry the Fifth, and the two Parts of Henry the Fourth, appear to have been published from copies inaccurately taken by the ear during representation, without any assistance from the originals belonging to the playhouses.

FOLIOS.

As Shakspeare had himself shown such an entire disregard for posthumous reputation as to omit publishing a collected edition of his works, an attempt was made to atone for his neglect by his friends Heminge and Condell, about eight years after his death, who published, in 1623, the only authentic edition of his works.

The title-page is as follows:

'Mr. William Shakspeare's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. Published according to the true original Copies, 1623. Fol. Printed at the Charges of W. Jaggard, Ed. Blount, J. Smeeweke, and W. Apsley. The Dedication of the Players, prefixed to the first folio, 1623.'

To the most Noble and Incomparable Paire of Brethren, William Earle of Pembroke, &c.

Right Honourable,

Whilst we sttiche to be thankful in our particular, for the many favoures we have receiv'd from your L. L. we are alme upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diverse things that can bee, feare and rashnesse; rashnesse in the enterprize, and feare of the success. For, when we value the places your H. H. sustaine, we cannot but know their dignity greater, then to descend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have deprv'd ourselves of the defence of our Dedication. But since your L. L. have been pleased to thinke these trifles something, herefore, and have prosequeht both them, and their Author living, with so much favour: we hope that (they out-living him, and he not having the fate, common with some, to be exequitor to his owne writings) you will use the same indulgence toward them, you have done unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any booke choose his Patrones, or fade them: This hath done both. For, so much were your L. L. likings of the severall parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the Volume ask'd to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of self-profit, or fame: onely to keepe the memory of so worthy a Friend, and Fellow alive, as was our Shakespeare, by humble offer of his plays, to your most noble patronage. Wherin, as we have justly observed, no man to come necere your L. L. but with a kind of religious addressse, it hath bin the height of our care, who are the Presenters, to make the present worthy of your H. H. by the perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be considered, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach forth milke, creame, fruits, or what they have; and many Nations (we have heard) that had not gummes and incense, obtained their requests with a lea-vened Cake. It was no fault to approch their Gods by what meanes they could; And the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we most hibariously consecrate to your H. H. these remains of your servant Shakespeare; that what delight is in them may be ever your L. L. the reputation his, and the faults ours, if any be committed, by a payre so carefull to shew their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

To the great variety of Readers,

From the most able, to him that can but spell: there you are number'd. We had rather you were weigh'd. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purses. Well! it is now publique, and you will stand for your privilidges wee know: to read, and censure. Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a Booke, the Stationer saies. Then, how oddie soever your braces be, or your wisdomes, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your sixe-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher. so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, whatever you do, Buy. Censure will not drive a Trade, or make the Jacke go. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and sit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Plays dailie, know, these Plays have had their triall alreadie, and stood out all Appeals; and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, than any purchasd Letters of commendation. It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to have been wished, that the Author himselfe had lived to have set forth, and overseeen his owne writings; But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you, doe not envie his Friends, the office of their care and paine, to have collected and publish'd them; and so to have publish'd them, as where (before) you were absud'd with divers stolne, and surreptitious copies, maimed and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of injurious impostors, that expos'd them: even those are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbs; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceived the: Who, as he was a happy imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together: and what he thought, he uttered with that easinesse, that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our province, who onely gather his works, and give them you, to praise him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capaci-cities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and held you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be lost. Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you do not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to other of his Friends, whom if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade yourselves, and others. And such readers we wish him.

John Heminge,
Henrie Condell.

Steevens, with some degree of probability, supposes these prefaces to be the productions of Ben Jonson.

In 1632, the works of Shakespeare were reprinted in folio by Thomas Cotes, for Robert Allot. Of this edition Malone speaks most con-temptuously, though many of the errors of the first are corrected in it, and he himselfe silently adopted 186 of its corrections without acknowledging the debt. The judgment passed by Steevens on this edition is, 'Though it be more incorrectly printed than the preceding one, it has likewise the advantage of various readings, which are not merely such as reiteration of copies will naturally produce. The curious examiner of Shakspeare's text, who possesses the first of these, ought not to be unfurnished with the second.'

The third folio was printed in 1664, for P. C. * And a fourth, for H. Herringham, E. Brewster, and R. Bentley, in 1682.

'To these impressions,' says Steevens, 'they are little better than waste paper, for they differ only from the preceding ones by a larger accumulation of errors.'

These are all the ancient editions of Shakspeare.

No. 4.

PLAYS ASCRIBED TO SHAKESPEARE.

EITHER BY THE EDITORS OF THE TWO LATER FOLIOS, OR BY THE COMPILERS OF ANCIENT CATALOGUES.

Locrine.
Sir John Oldcastle.
Lord Cromwell.
The London Prodigal.
The Puritan.
The Yorkshire Tragedy.

These were all printed as Shakspeare's in the third folio, 1664, without having the slightest claim to such a distinction. Steevens thought that the Yorkshire Tragedy might probably be a hasty sketch of our great poet; but he afterwards silently abandoned this opinion. We find from the papers of Henslowe† that Sir John Oldcastle was the work of four writers—Munday, Drayton, Wilson, and Hathaway. It is impossible to discover to whom the rest are to be attributed.

Some other plays, with about equal pretensions, have likewise been given to our author.

The Arraignment of Paris, which is known to have been written by George Peele.

The Birth of Merlin, the work of Rowley, although in the title-page, 1662, probably by a fraud of the bookseller, it is stated to be the joint production of Rowley and Shakspeare.

† He appears to have been proprietor of the Rose Theatre, near the bank side in Southwark. The MSS. alluded to were found at Dulwich College.

Edward the Third. This play Capell ascribed to Shakspeare, for no other reason but that he thought it too good to be the work of any of his contemporaries.

Fair Emma. There is no other ground for supposing this play to be among our author's productions, than its having been met with in a volume, which formerly belonged to Charles II. which is lettered on the back, SHAKSPEARE, Vol. I.

The Merry Devil of Edmonton, entered on the Stationers' books as Shakspeare's about the time of the Restoration; but there is a former entry, in 1608, in which it is said to be written by T. B. whom Malone supposes to have been Tony or Antony Brewer.

Mucedorus. The real author unknown. Malone conceives that he might be R. Greene.

Shakspeare is supposed to have had a share in two other plays, and to have assisted Ben Jonson in Sejanus, and Fletcher in the Two Noble Kinsmen. If he was the person who united with Jonson in the composition of Sejanus, which Mr. Gifford very reasonably doubts, no portion of his work is now remaining. The piece, as originally written, was not successful; and the passages supplied by the nameless friend of Jonson were omitted in publication. The fact of his having co-operated with Fletcher in the Two Noble Kinsmen has been much discussed; Pope favours the supposition that Shakspeare's hand may be discovered in the tragedy; Dr. Warburton expresses a belief that our great poet wrote 'the first act, but in his worst manner.' All the rest of the commentators, without exception, agree in rejecting this opinion; and attribute the origin of the tale to the puff of a bookseller, who found his profit in uniting the name of Shakspeare with that of Fletcher on publishing the play. The judgment of the majority appears in this case to be the most correct.
THAT praises are without reason lavished on the dead, and that the honours due only to excellence are paid to antiquity, is a complaint likely to be always continued by those, who, being able to add nothing to truth, hope for eminence from the hollies of paradox; or those, who, being forced by dis- appointment upon consolatory expedients, are willing to hope from posterity what the present age refruses, and flatter themselves that the regard which is yet denied by envy, will be at last bestowed by time. The notice of mankind, has undoubtedly votaries that reverence it, not from reason, but from prejudice. Some seem to admire indiscriminately whatever has been long preserved, without considering that time has sometimes co-operated with chance; all perhaps are more willing to honour past than present excellence; and the mind transplanted generation through generation of artificial opacity. The great contention of criticism is to find the faults of the moderns, and the beauties of the ancients. While an author is yet living, we estimate his powers by his worst performance, and when he is dead, we rate them by his best.

The works of Shakspeare show that there is not absolute and definite, but gradual and comparative; to works not raised upon principles demonstrative and scientific, but appealing wholly to observation and experience, no other test can be applied than length of duration and continuance of esteem. What mankind have long possessed they have often examined and compared, and if they persist to value the possession, the examination and comparison have confirmed opinion in its favour. As among the works of nature, no man can properly call a river deep, or a mountain high, without the knowledge of many mountains, and many rivers; so in the productions of genius, nothing can be styled excellent till it has been compared with other works of the same nature. It would be as difficult for any man to become acquainted with the genuine sources of his powers, and has nothing to hope or fear from the flux of years: but works tentative and experimental must be estimated by their proportion to the general and collective ability of man, as it is discovered in a long succession of endeavours. Of the first building that was raised, it might be with certainty determined that it was round or square; but whether it was spacious or lofty must have been referred to time.

The Pythagorean scale of numbers was at once discovered to be perfect; but the poems of Homer we yet know not to transcend the common limits of human intelligence, but by remarking, that nation after nation, and century after century, has been able to do little more than transcribe his incidents, new name his characters, and paraphrase his sentiments. The reverence due to writings that have long subsisted, arises therefore not from any credulons confidence in the superior wisdom of past ages, or gloomy persuasion of the degeneracy of mankind, but is the consequence of acknowledged and inhabitable positions, that what has been longest known has been most considered, and what is most considered is best understood.

The poet, of whose works I have undertaken the revision, may now begin to assume the dignity of an ancient, and claim the privilege of established fame and prescriptive veneration. He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of literary merit. Whatever advantages he might once derive from personal allusions, local customs, or temporary opinions, have for many years been lost; and every topic of merit or motive of sorrow, which the modes of artificial life afforded him, now only obscure the scenes which they once illuminated.

The effects of favour and competition are at an end; for, because qualified comparisons have long possessed they have often examined and compared, and if they persist to value the possession, the examination and comparison have confirmed opinion in its favour. As among the works of nature, no man can properly call a river deep, or a mountain high, without the knowledge of many mountains, and many rivers; so in the productions of genius, nothing can be styled excellent till it has been compared with other works of the same nature. like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen.

It was not easily he imagined how much Shakspere excels in accommodating his sentiments to real life, but by comparing him with other authors. It was observed of the ancient schools of declamation, that the more diligently they were frequented, the more was the student disqualified for the world, because he found nothing there which he should ever meet in any other place. The same remark may be applied to every stage but that of Shakspere. The theatre, when it is under any other direction, is peopled by such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language which was not love is only upon topics which will never arise to the commerce of mankind. But the style of this author is often so evidently determined by the incident which produces it, and is pursued with so much ease and simplicity, that it seems scarcely to claim the merit of fiction, but to have been gleaned by diligent selection out of common conversation, and common occurrences.

I pon every other stage the universal agent is love, by whose power all good and evil is distributed, and every action quickened or retarded. To bring a lover, a lady, and a rival into the fable; to entangle them in contradictory obligations, perplex them with oppositions of interest, and harass them with violence of desires inconsistent with each other; to make them meet in rapine and part in agony; to fill their mouths with hyperbolical joy and outrageous sorrow; to distress them as nothing human ever was distressed: to deliver them as nothing human ever was delivered, is the business of a modern dramatist. For this, probability is violated, life is misrepresented, and language is depauperated. But in Shakspere, though it be only one of many passions, and as it has so great influence upon the sum of life, it has little operation in the dramas of a poet, who caught his ideas from the living world, and exhibited only what he saw before him. He knew, that any other passion, as it was regular or exorbitant, was a cause of happiness or calamity.

Characters thus ample and general are not easily discriminated and preserved; yet perhaps no poet ever kept his characters more distinct from each other, and will not say with Pope, that every speech may be assigned to the proper speaker, because many speeches there are which have nothing characteristic: but, perhaps, though some may be equally adapted to every person, it will be difficult to find any that can be properly transferred from the present possession to another claimant. The choice is right, when there is reason for choice.

Other dramatists can only gain attention by hyperbolical or aggrandized characters, by fabulous and unexampled excellence or depravity, as the writers of barbarous romances invigorated the reader by a giant and a dwarf; and he that should form his expectation of human actions from the play, or from the tale, would be equally deceived. Shakspere has no heroes: his scenes are occupied only by men, who act and speak as the reader thinks that he should himself have spoken or acted on the same occasion, even where the agency is supernatural, the dialogue is level with life. Other writers disguise the most natural passions and frequent incidents; so that he who contemplates them in the book will not know them in the world: Shakspere approximates the remote, and familiarizes the wonderful; the event which he represents will not happen, but if it were possible, its effects would probably be such as he has assigned; and it may be said, that he has not only shewn human nature as it acts in real exiguities, but as it would be found in trials, to which it cannot be exposed.

This therefore is the praise of Shakspere, that his drama is the mirror of life; that he who has nursed his imagination, in following the phantoms which other writers raise up before him, may here be cured of his delirious ecstasies, by reading human sentiments in human language. He secures from human passions, with which a hermit may estimate the transactions of the world, and a confessor predict the progress of the Fashions.

His adherence to general nature has exposed him to the censure of critics, who form their judgment upon narrower principles. Dennis and Hume, who took his Romans not sufficiently Rd and Voltaire censures his kings as excessively royal. Dennis is offended, servant, a senator of Rome, should play the buffoon; and Voltaire perhaps thinks deficiency when the Danish usurer is represented as a drunkard. But Shakspere always makes nature predominate over accident; and is as serious as he serves the essential character, in the very careful of distinctions superinduced and adventitious. His story requites no sordid notice. He knows that Rome, like every other city, had men of all dispositions; and wanting a buffoon, he went into the senate-house for that which the senate-house would certainly have afforded him. He was inclined to shew an usurer at the murder not only odious, but despicable; he therefore added drunkenness to his other qualities, knowing that kings and wine are like other men, and that wine exerts its natural power upon kings. These are the petty civils of petty minds; a poet overlooks the casual distinction of country and condition, as a painter, satisfied with the figure, neglects the drapery. The censure which he has incurred by mixing comic and tragic scenes as it extends to all his works, deserves more consideration. Let the fact be first stated, and then examined.

Shakspere's plays are not in the rigorous and critical sense either tragedies or comedies, but compositions of a distinct kind; exhibiting the real state of sublunary nature, which is by parts of good and evil, joy and sorrow, mingled with endless variety of proportion and innumerable modes of combination; and painting the world, in which the loss of one is the gain of another; in which, at the same time, the reveller is hastie to his wine, and the mourner burying his friend; in which the majority of one is sometimes defeated by the frolic of another; and many mischiefs and many benefits are done and hindered without design.

Out of this chaos of mingled purposes and casualties, the ancient poets, according to the laws which custom had prescribed, selected some the crimes of men, and some their absurdities; some the monstrous vicissitudes of life, and some the lighter occurrences; some the terrors of distress, and some the gaities of prosperity. Thus rose the two modes of composition intended to promote different ends by contrary means, and considered as so little allied, that I do not recollect among the Greek or Romans a single writer who attempted both.

Shakspere has united the powers of existing in laughter and admiration, not only in one mind, but in laughter and admiration. Almost all his plays are divided between serious and ludicrous characters, and, in the successive evolutions of the design, sometimes pro-
Of seriousness and sorrow, and sometimes levity and laughter.
That this is a practice contrary to the rules of criticism will be readily allowed: but there is always an appeal open from criticism to nature. The end of writing is to instruct; the end of poetry to instruct by pleasing. That the mingled drama may convey all the instruction of tragedy or comedy cannot be denied, because it includes both in its alternations of exhibition, and approaches nearer than either to the appearance of life, by shewing how great machinations and slender designs may promote or obviate one another, and the high and the low co-operate in the general system by unavoidable concatenation.

It is objected, that by this change of scenes the passions are interrupted in their progression, and that the principal event, being not advanced by a due gradation of preparatory incidents, wants at last the power to move, which constitutes the perfection of dramatic poetry. This reasoning is so specious, that it is received as true even by those who in daily experience feel it to be false. The interchanges of mind and emotion seldom fail to produce the intended vicissitudes of passion. Fiction cannot move so much, but that the attention may be easily transferred; and though it must be allowed that pleasing melancholy be sometimes interrupted by unbecoming levity, yet let it be considered likewise, that melancholy is often not pleasing, and that the disturbance of one man may be the relief of another; that different sources of happiness exist, and that, upon the whole, all pleasure consists in variety.

The players, who in their edition divided our author’s works into comedies, histories, and tragedies, seem not to have distinguished the three kinds, by any very exact or definite ideas.

An action which ended happily to the principal persons, however serious or distressful through its intermediate incidents, in their opinion constituted a comedy. This idea of a comedy continued long amongst us, and plays were written, which, by changing the catastrophe, were tragedies to-day, and comedies to-morrow.

Tragedy was not in those times a poem of more general dignity or elevation than comedy; it required only modifications of different habits, such as the common criticism of that age was satisfied, whatever lighter pleasure it afforded in its progress.

History was a series of actions, with no other than chronological succession, independent on each other, and without any tendency to introduce and regulate the conclusion. It is not always very nicely distinguished from tragedy. There is not much nearer approach to unity of action in the tragedy of Antony and Cleopatra, than in the history of Richard the Second. But a history might be continued through many plays; as it had no plan, it had no limits.

Through all these denominations of the drama, Shakespeare’s mode of composition is the same; an invented scene may succeed as an error, and mislead the mind at one time, and exhilarate at another. But whatever be his purpose, whether to gladden or depress, or to conduct the story, without vehemence or emotion, through tracts of easy and familiar dialogue, he never fails to attain his purpose; as he commands us, we laugh or mourn, or sit silent with quiet expectation, in tranquillity without indifference.

When Shakespeare’s plan is understood, most of the criticisms of Rymer and Voltaire vanish away. The play of Hamlet is opened, without impropriety, by two contzents; Iago bellows at Brabantio’s window, without injury to the scheme of the play, though in terms which a modern audience would not easily endure; the character of Polonius is reasonable and useful; and the Gravediggers themselves may be heard with applause.

Shakespeare engaged in dramatic poetry with the world open before him; the rules of the ancients were yet known to few; the public judgment was uniform; he had no example of such fane as might force him upon imitation, nor critics of such authority as might restrain his extravagance; he therefore indulged his natural disposition, and his disposition, as Rymer has remarked, led him to comedy. In tragedy he often writes with great appearance of toil and study, what is written at last with little facility; but in his comic scenes, he seems to produce without labour, what no labour can improve. In tragedy he is always struggling after some occasion to be comic, but in comedy he seems to repose, or to luxuriate, as in a mode of thinking congenial to his nature. In his tragic scenes there is always something wanting, but his comedy often surpasses expectation or desire. His comedy pleases by the life of the scene, and his tragedy for the greater part by incident and action. His tragedy seems to be skill, his comedy to be instinct.

The force of his comic scenes has suffered little diminution from the changes made by a century and a half, in manners or in words. As his personages act upon principles arising from genuine passion, very little modified by particular forms, their pleasures and vexations are communicable to all times and to all places; they are natural, and therefore durable; the adventitious peculiarities of personal habits, are only superficial dies, bright and pleasing for a little while, yet soon fading to a deep tint, without any remains of former lustre; but the discriminations of true passion are the colours of nature; they pervade the whole mass, and can only persist with the body that exhibits them. The accidental compositions of heterogeneous modes are dissolved by the chance which combined them; but the uniform simplicity of primitive qualities neither admits increase, nor suffers decay. The saul heaped by one flood is scattered by another, but the stream continues in its place. The stream of time, which is continually washing the dissoluble fabrics of other poets, passes without injury by the adamant of Shakespeare.

If there be, what I believe there is, in every nation, a style which never becomes obsolete, a certain mode of phraseology so consonant and congenial to the analogy and principles of its respective language, as to remain settled and unaltered; this style is probably to be sought in the common intercourse of life, among those who speak only to be understood, without ambition of elegance. The poet is always catching modish innovations, and the learned depart from established forms of speech, in hope of finding or making better; those who forsake the vulgar, when the vulgar is right; but there is a conversation above grossness and below refinement, where propriety resides, and where this poet seems to have gathered his comic dialogue. He is therefore more agreeable to the ears of the present age than any other author equally remote, and among his other excellencies deserves to be studied as one of the original masters of our language.

These observations are to be considered not as exceptionally constant, but as containing general and predominant truth. Shakespeare’s familiar dialogue is affirmed to be smooth and clear, yet not wholly without ruggedness or difficulty: as a country may be eminently fruitful, though it has spots unfit for cultivation; his characters are praised as natural, though their sentiments are sometimes forced, and their actions improbable; as the earth upon the whole is spherical, though its surface is varied with protuberances and cavities.

Shakespeare with his excellencies has likewise faults, and faults sufficient to obscure and overwhelm any other merit. I shall shew them in the proper fund from which they appear to me, without envious malignity or superstitious veneration. No question can be more innocently discussed than a dead poet's pretensions to renown; and little regard is due to that bigotry which sets cumbour higher than truth.

His first defect is that to which may be imputed most of the evil in books or in men. He sacrifices virtue to convenience, and is so much more careful to please than to instruct, that he seems to write without any moral purpose. From his writings indeed a system of social duty may be selected, for he that thinks reasonably must think morally; but his precepts and axioms drop casually from him; he makes no pretence of instruction or of duty, nor is always careful to shew in the virtuous a dispensation of the wicked; he carries his persons indifferently through right or wrong, and at the close dismisses them without further care, and leaves their examples to operate by chance. This fault the barbarity of his age cannot excuse; for it is always a writer's duty to make the world better, and justify his creed and condition of existence.

The plots are often so loosely formed, that a very slight consideration may improve them, and so carelessly pursued, that he seems not always fully to comprehend his own design. He omits opportunities of instructing or delighting, which the train of his story seems to force upon him, and apparently rejects those exhibitions which would be more affecting, for the sake of those which are more easy.

It may be observed, that in many of his plays the latter part is evidently neglected. When he found himself near the end of his work, and in view of his reward, he shortened the labour, to snatch the profit. He therefore remixes his efforts where he should most vigorously exert them, and his catastrophe is improbable, and is imperfectly related.

He had no regard to distinction of time or place, but gives to one to age or nation, without scruple, the customs, institutions, and opinions of another, at the expense not only of likelihood, but of possibility. These faults Pope has endeavoured, with more zeal than judgment, to transfer to his imagined interlopers. We need not to wonder to find Hector quoting Aristotle, when we see the loves of Theseus and Hippolyta combined with the Gothic mythology of fairies. Shakespeare, indeed, was not the only violator of chronology, for in the same age Sidney, who wanted not the advantages of learning, has in his Arionia, confounded the pastoral with the feudal traditions, the play of innocuous sport and evil, nor is always careful to shew in the virtuous a dispensation of the wicked; he carries his persons indifferently through right or wrong, and at the close dismisses them without further care, and leaves their examples to operate by chance. This fault the barbarity of his age cannot excuse; for it is always a writer's duty to make the world better, and justify his creed and condition of existence.

In his comic scenes, he is seldom so successful, when he engages his characters in recurrences of smartness and contests of sarcasm; their jests are commonly gross, and their pleasantness licentious; neither his gentlemen nor his ladies have much delicacy, nor are sufficiently distinguished from his clowns by any appearance of refined manners. Whether he represented the real conversation of his time is not easy to determine; the reign of Elizabeth is commonly supposed to have been a time of state-lines, formality, and reserve, yet perhaps the relaxations of that severity were not very elegant. There must, however, have been always some modes of gaiety preferable to others, and a writer ought to choose the best.

In tragedy his performance seems constantly to be worse, as his labour is more. The effusions of passion, which exigence forces out, are for the most part striking and energetic; but whenever he solicits his interest he will train his felicity; the offering of his throes is tumour, meanness, tediousness, and obscurity.

In narration he affects a disproportionate pomp of diction, and a wearisome train of circumlocution, and tells the incident imperfectly in many words, which might have been more plainly delivered in few. Narration in dramatic poetry is naturally tedious, as it is unanimated and inanimate, and obstructs the progress of the action; it should therefore always be rapid, and enlivened by frequent interruption. Shakespeare found it an incumbence, and instead of lightening it by brevity, endeavoured to recommend it by dignity and splendor.

But the faults of his prose are commonly cold and weak, for his power was the power of nature; when he endeavoured, like other tragic writers, to catch opportunities of amplification, and instead of inquiring what the occasion demanded, to shew how much his stores of knowledge could supply, he seldom escapes without the pity or resentment of his reader.

In reading, the incident to him to be now and then entangled with an unwieldy sentiment, which he cannot well express, and will not reject; he struggles with it a while, and if it continues stubborn, comprises it in words such as occur, and leaves it to be disentangled and evolved by those who have more leisure to bestow upon it.

Not that always where the language is intricate, the thought is subtle, or the image always great where the line is bulky; the equality of words to things is very often neglected, and trivial sentiments and vulgar ideas disappoint the attention, to which they are recommended by sonorous epithets and swelling figures.

But the admirers of this great poet have most reasonably found in him the chief to which they approach nearest to his highest excellence, and seems fully resolved to sink them in dejection and mollify them with tender emotions by the fall of greatness, the danger of innocence, or the crosses of love. What he does best, he soon ceases to do. He is not long soft and pathetic without some idle conceit, or contemptible equivocation. He no sooner begins to move, than he counteracts itself, and terror and pity, as they are rising in the mind, are checked and blasted by sudden frigidity.

A quibble is to Shakespeare, what luminous vapours are to the traveller; he follows it at all adventures; it is sure to lead him out of his way, and sure to engulf him in a mire. It has some slight power over his mind, and its fascinations are irresistible. Whatever be the dignity or profundity of his disquisitions, whether he be enlarging knowledge, or excelling affection, whether he be amusing attention with incidents, or enchanting it in suspense, let but a quibble spring up before him, and he leaves his work unfinished. A quibble is the golden apple for which he will always turn aside from his career, or stoop from his elevation. A quibble, poor and barren as it is, gave him such delight, that he was content to purchase it by the sacrifice of reason, propriety, and truth. A quibble was to him the fatal Cleopatra for which he lost the world, and was content to lose it.

It will be thought strange, that, in enumerating the defects of this writer, I have not yet mentioned his neglect of the unities; his violation of those laws which have been instituted and established by the joint authority of poets and of critics.

For his other deviations from the art of writing, I resigne him to critical justice, without making any other demand in his favour, than that which must be indelged to all human excellence; that his virtues be rated with his failings: but, from the censure which this irregularity may bring upon him, I shall, with due reverence to that learning which I must oppose, adventure to try how I can defend him.

His histories, being neither tragedies nor comedies, are not subject to any of their laws; nothing more is necessary to all the praise which they expect, than that the changes of action be so prepared as to be understood, that the incidents be various and affecting, and the characters consistent, natural, and distinct. No other unity is intended, and therefore none is to be sought.

In his other works he has well enough preserved the unity of place. He has not, indeed, an imagination perplexed and regularly unravelled; he does not endeavour to hide his design only to discover it, for this is seldom the order of real events, and Shakspere is the poet of nature: but his plan has commonly what Aristotelic requires, a beginning, a middle, and an end; one event is concatenated with another, and thus the poem is made up of incidents.

There are perhaps some incidents that might be spared, as in other poets there is much talk that only fills up time upon the stage; but the general system makes gradual advances, and the end of the play is the end of expectation.

To the unities of time and place he has shewn no regard; and perhaps a nearer view of the principles on which they stand will diminish their value, and withdraw from them the veneration which, from the time of Corinelle, they have very generally received, by discovering that they have given more trouble to the poet, than pleasure to the auditor.

The necessity of observing the unities of time and place arises from the difficulty of making the drama credible. The critic holds it to be evident that an action of months or years can be possibly believed to pass in three hours; or that the spectator can suppose himself to sit in the theatre, while ambassadors go and return between distant kings, while armies are levied and towns besieged, while an exile wanders and returns, or till he whom they saw courting his mistress shall lament the untimely fall of his son. The mind revolts from evident falsehood, and fiction loses its force when it departs from the resemblance of reality.

From the narrow limitation of time necessarily arises the contraction of place. The spectator, who knows that he saw the first act at Alexandria, cannot suppose that he sees the second at Rome, at a distance from which not the dragons of Medea could, in so short a time, have transported him: he knows with certainty that he has not changed his place; and he knows that place cannot change itself; that what was a house cannot become a plain; that what was Thebes can never be Persepolis.

Such is the triumphant language with which a critic exults over the misery of an irregular poet, and exults commonly without resistance or reply. It is time therefore to tell him, by the authority of Shakspere, that he assumes, as an unquestionable principle, a position, which, while his breath is forming it into words, his understanding pronounces to be false. It is false, that any representation is mistaken for reality; that any dramatic failure in its materiality was ever credible, or, for a single moment, was ever credited.

The objection arising from the impossibility of passing the first hour at Alexandria, and the next at Rome, supposes, that when the play opens, the spectator really imagines himself at Alexandria, and believes that his walk to the theatre has been a voyage to Egypt, and that he lives in the days of Anthony and Cleopatra. Surely he that imagines this may imagine more. He that can take the stage at one time for the palace of the Ptolemies, may take it in half an hour for the promontory of Actium. Delusion, if delusion be admitted, has no certain limitation; if the spectator can be once persuaded, that his old acquaintance are Alexander and Caesar, that a room illuminated with candles is the plain of Pharsalia, or the banks of Granicus, he is in a state of elevation above the reach of reason, or of truth, and from the heights of empyrean poetry, may despise the circumscriptions of terrestrial nature. There is no reason why the natural spectator should not count the clock, or why an hour should not be a century in that calenture of the brains that can make the stage a field.

The truth is, that the spectators are always in their senses, and know, from the first act to the last, that the stage is only a stage, and that the players are only players. They believe to be beholding a number of lines recited with just gesture and elegant modulation. The lines relate to some action, and an action must be in some place; but the different actions that complete a story may be in places very remote from each other, and where is the absurdity of allowing that space to represent first Athens, and then Sicily, which was always known to be neither Sicily nor Athens, but a modern theatre?

By supposition, as place is introduced, time may be extended; the time required by the fable elapses for the most part between the acts; for, of so much of the action as is represented, the real and poetical duration is the same. If, in the first act, preparations for war against Mithridates are represented to be made in Rome, we believe that the time, without absurdity, be represented, in the catastrophe, as happening in Pontus; we know that there is neither war, nor preparation for war; we know that we are neither in Rome nor Pontus: that neither Mithridates nor Lucullus are before us. The drama exhibits successive imitations of successive actions, and why not the second imitation represent an action that happened years after the first: if it be so connected with it, that nothing but time can be supposed to intervene! Time is, of, all modes of existence, most obsequious to the imagination; a lapse of years is as easily conceived as a passage of hours. In contemplation we easily contract the time of real actions, and therefore it is willingly permitted to be contracted when we only see their imitation.

It will be asked, how the drama moves, if it is not credited. It is credited with all the credit due to a drama. It is credited, whenever it moves, as a just picture of a real original; as representing to the auditor what he would himself feel, if he were to do or suffer what is represented. This was one of the rules of Persepolis. The reflection that strikes the heart is not, that the evils before us are real evils, but that they are evils to which we ourselves may be exposed. If there be any fallacy, it is not that we fancy the players, but that we fancy ourselves unhappy for a moment, because we labor under the possibility than suppose the presence of misery, as a mother weeps over her babe, when she remembers that death may take it from her. The delight of tragedy proceeds from our consciousness of fiction; if we thought the wanderers and treasures real, they would please us no more.

Imitations produce pain or pleasure, not because they are more real for realities, but because they bring realities to mind. When the imagination is recreatad by a painted landscape, the trees are not supposed capable to give us shade, or the fountain coolness, but we consider, how we should be pleased with such fountains pouring beside us, and such trees waving over us. We are agitated in reading the history of Henry the Eighth: a dramatic exhibition is a book recited with concomitants that increase or diminish its effect. Familiar comedy is often more powerful in the theatre, than in the page; imperial tragedy is always less. The humour of the play may be heightened by grimace; but what voice or what gesture can hope to add dignity or force to the soliloquy of the prince?

A play read, affects the mind like a play acted. It is therefore evident, that the action is not supposed to be real; and it follows, that between the acts a longer or shorter time may be allowed to pass, and that no more account of space or duration is to be taken by the author of a drama, than by the reader of a narrative, before whom may pass in an hour the life of a hero, or the revolutions of an empire.

Whether Shakspeare knew the unities, and rejected them by design, or deviated from them by happy ignorance, it is, I think, impossible to decide, and useless to inquire. We may reasonably suppose, that, when he rose to notice, he did not want the counsels and admonitions of scholars and critics, and that he at last deliberately pursued a practice, which he might have begun by chance. As nothing is essential to the fable, but unity of action, and the unities of time and place arise merely silently from false assumptions, and, by very describing the extent of the drama, lessening its variety. I cannot think that anything of that sort was intended, that they were not known by him, or not observed: nor, if such another poet could arise, should I very vehemently reproach him, that his first act passed at Venice, and his next in Cyprus. Such violations of rules merely positive, become the comprehensive genius of Shakespeare, and such censures are suitable to the minute and slender criticisms of Voltaire:

Yet when I speak thus slightly of dramatic rules, I cannot but recollect how much their learning may be produced against me; before such authorities I am afraid to stand, not that I think the present question one of those that are to be decided by mere authority, but because it is to be suspected, that these precepts have not been so easily received, but for better reasons than I have yet been able to find. The result of my inquiries, in which it would be ludicrous to boast of impartiality, is, that the unities of time and place are not essential to a just drama; that they, though they may sometimes conduce to pleasure, they are always to be sacrificed to the nobler beauties of variety and instruction; and that a play, written with nice observation of critical rules, is to be contem- plated as an elaborate curiosity, as the product of superfluous and ostentatious art, by which is shown, rather what is possible, than what is necessary.

He that, without diminution of any other excellence, shall preserve all the unities unbroken, deserves the like applause with the architect, who shall display all the orders of architecture in a citadel, without any deduction from its strength; but the principal beauty of a citadel is to exclude the enemy; and the greatest graces of a play are to copy nature, and instruct life.

Perhaps, what I have here not dogmatically but deliberately written, may recall the principles of the drama to a new examination. I am almost frightened to come to a subject at my own temerity; and when I estimate the fame and strength of those that maintain the contrary opinion, am ready to sink down in reverential silence, as Eneas withdrew from the theatre of Troy, when he saw Neptune shaking the wall, and Juno heading the besiegers.

And from my arguments cannot persuade to give their approbation to the judgment of Shakspeare, will easily, if they consider the condition of his life, make some allowance for his ignorance.

Every man's performances, to be right estimated, must be compared to the state of the age in which he lived, and with its own particular opportunities; and this book a reader can be worse or better for the circumstances of the author, yet as there is always a silent reference of human works to human abilities, and as the inquiry, how far man may extend his designs, or how high he may rate his native force, is of far greater dignity than in what rank we shall place any particular performance, curiosity is always busy to dignify the instruments, as well as to survey the workmanship, to know how much is to be ascribed to original powers, and how much to casual and adventitious help. The palaces of Peru or Mexico were certainly mean and inconmodious habitations, if compared to the houses of European monarchs; yet who could forbear to view them with astonishment, who remembered that they were built without the use of iron?

The English nation, in the time of Shakspeare, was yet struggling to emerge from barbarity. The philosophy of Italy had been transplanted hither in the reign of Henry the Eighth; and the waters, which had quenched the thirst of the noblest and most curi-ous, had been so successfully cultivated by Lilly, Linacre, and others, by Pole, Cheke, and Gardiner; and the words by Smith, Clerk, Haddon, and As- chan. Greek was now taught to boys in the principal schools; and those who united elegance with learning, read, with great diligence, the Italian and Spanish poets. But literature was yet confined to professors, or to men and women of high rank. The public was gross and dark; and to be able to read was an accomplishment still valued for its rarity.

Nations, like individuals, have their infancy. A people newly awakened to literary curiosity, being yet unacquainted with the true state of things, knows not how to judge of that which is presented by resemblance. Whatever is remote from common appearance, is always welcome to vulgar, as to childish credulity; and of a country unenlightened by learning, the whole people is the vulgar. The study of those who then aspired to plebeian learning was laid out upon adventures, giants, dragons, and supernatural events. The Death of Agincourt was published in a small volume. The mind of man has feasted on the luxurios wonders of imagination, has no taste of the insipidity of truth. A play which imitated only the common occurrences of the world, would, upon the admirers of Phalaris...
The work of a correct and regular writer is a garden accurately formed and diligently planted, varied with shades and scented with flowers: the composition of Shakespeare is a forest, in which oak shades extend their branches, and pines tower in the air, interpersed with trees with weeds and brambles, and sometimes giving shelter to myrtles and to places, filling the eye with awful pomp, and gratifying the mind with endless diversity. Other poets display cabinets of precious rarities, minutely finished, wrought into shape, and polished into brightness. Shakespeare opens a mine which contains gold and diamonds, a mine inexhaustible, though clouded by incrustations, tarnished by the dirt of centuries, and mingled with a mass of meager minerals.

It has been much disputed, whether Shakespeare owed his excellence to his own native force, or whether he had the common helps of scholastic education, the precepts of critical science, and the examples of ancient authors.

There are always prevailed a tradition, that Shakespeare wanted learning, that he had no regular education, nor much skill in the dead languages. Jonson, his friend, affirms, that he had small Latin, and less Greek; who, besides that he had no imaginable temptation to falsehood, wrote at a time when the character and acquisitions of Shakespeare were known to multitudes. Such evidence ought therefore to decide the controversy, unless some testimony of equal force could be opposed.

Some have imagined, that they have discovered deep learning in many imitations of old writers; but the examples which I have known urged, were drawn from books translated in his time; or were such easy coincidences of thought, as will happen to all who consider the same subject. The evidence ought therefore to decide the controversy, unless some testimony of equal force could be opposed.

I have found it remarked, that in this important sentence, Go before, I'll follow, we read a translation of, I pra, sequar. I have been told, that when Cælian, after a pleasing dream, says, I tried to sleep again, the author imitates Anacreon, who, had he, like every other man, the same wish on the same occasion, there are a few passages which may pass for imitations, but so few, that the exception only confirms the rule; he obtained them from accidental quotations, or by oral communication, and as he used what he had, would have used more if he had obtained it.

The Comus is confessedly taken from the Menoechium of Plautus; from the only play of Plautus which was then in English. What can be more probable, than that he who copied that, would have copied more; but that those which were not translated were inaccessible?

Whether he knew the modern languages is uncertain. That his plays have some French scenes proves not little, that he knew the French, and perhaps, and probably, though he had known the language in the common degree, he could not have written it without assistance. In the story of Romeo and Juliet he is observed to have followed the English translation, where it deviates from the Italian; but this on the other part proves nothing against his knowledge of the original. He may have copied not what he knew himself, but what was known to his audience.

It is most likely that he had learned Latin sufficiently to make him acquainted with construction, but that he never advanced to an easy perusal of the Roman authors. Concerning his skill in modern languages, I can find no sufficient ground of determination; but as no imitations of French or Italian outlaws have been discovered, though the Italian poetry was then high in esteem, I am inclined to believe, that he read little more than English, and could not for his fables only such tales as he himself translated.

That much knowledge is certainly met with over his works is very justly observed by Pope, but it is often such knowledge as books did not supply. He that will understand Shakespeare, must not content to study him in the closet, he must look for his meaning sometimes among the sports of the field, and sometimes among the manufactures of the forge or translated.

There is, however, proof enough, that he was a very diligent reader, nor was our language then so indigent as books, but that he might very liberally improve his curiosity without excursin into foreign literature. Many of the Roman authors were translated, and some of the Greek; the Reformation had filled the kingdom with theological learning; and must of the topics of human dispute, and had found English writers; and penury had been cultivated, not only with little encouragement, but success. This was a stock of knowledge sufficient for a mind so capable of appropriating and improving it.

But the greater part of his excellence was the product of his own genius. He found the English stage in a state of the utmost rudeness, and the actors either in tragedy or comedy had appeared, from which it could be discerned to what degree of delight either the stronger of the passions, or the imagination, might be carried. Neither character nor dialogue were yet understood. Shakespeare may be truly said to have introduced them both amongst us, and in some of his happier scenes to have carried them both to the utmost height.

By what gradations of improvement he proceeded, is not easily known; it is enough for the chronology of his works is yet unsettled. Rowe is of opinion, that perhaps we are not to look for his beginning, like those of other writers, in his least perfect works; art had so little, and nature so large a share in what he did, that for aught I know, says he, the performances of his youth, as they were the most vigorous, were the best. But the power of nature is only the power of using to any certain purpose the materials which diligence procures, or opportunity supplies. Nature gives no man knowledge, and when images are collected by study and experience, can only assist in combining or applying them. Shakespeare, however, as we are informed what he had learned; and as nature, could impart only what he had, and what he could impart of what he had learned; like other mortals, by gradual acquisition, he, like them, grew wiser as he grew older, could display life better, as he knew it more, and instruct with more efficacy, as he was himself more amply instructed.

There is a vigilance of observation and accuracy of distinction which books and precepts cannot confer; from this almost all original and native excellence proceeds. Shakespeare must have looked upon mankind with perspicacity, in the highest degree curious and attentive. Other writers borrow their characters from preceding writers, and diversify them only by the accidental appendages of present manners; the dress is a little varied, but the body is the same. Our author had both matter and form to provide for, except the characters of Chance, to whom he allowed greatest license. I think he is not much indebted, there were no writers in English, and perhaps not many in other modern languages, which showed life in its native colours.

The contest about the original meaning of a passage or malignity of man had not yet commenced. Speculation had not yet as yet so far to analyse the mind, to trace the passions to their sources, to unfold the seminal principles of vice and virtue, or sound the depths of the heart for the motives of action. All those inquiries, which from that time that human nature became the fashionable study, have been made sometimes with nice discernment, but often with idle subtility, were yet unattempted. The tales with which the infancy of learning was supplied, exhibited only the superfluous appearance of action, related the events, but omitted the causes, and were formed as delighted in wonders rather than in truth. Hence, that Blankinsett was not then to be studied in the closet; he that would know the world, was under the necessity of gleaning his own remarks, by mingling as he could in its business and amusements.

Boyle congratulated himself upon his high birth, because it favoured his curiosity, by facilitating his access in a manner his precursors had no such advantage; he came able to London a needy adventurer, and lived for a time by very mean employments. Many works of genius and learning have been performed in states of life that appear very little favourable to thought or inquiry; so many, that he considers them inclined to think, he sees enterpize and perseverance, encouragement and assistance from all external agency, and building help and hindrance banish before them. The genius of Shakespeare was not to be depressed by the weight of poverty, nor limited by the narrow conversation to which men in want are so commonly confined: the incumbrance of his fortune were shaken from his mind, at dese drops from a lion's mane.

Though he had so many difficulties to encounter, and so little assistance to surround them, he has been able to obtain an exact knowledge of many modes of life, and many and kinds of native dispositions; to vary them with great multiplicity; to mark them by nice distinctions; and to show them in full view by proper combinations. In this part of his performances, he has been imitated by all succeeding writers, and may be doubted, whether from all his successors more maxims of theoretical knowledge, or more rules of practical prudence, can be collected, than he alone has given to his country.

Nor was his attention confined to the actions of men; he was a true surveyor of the inanimate world; his descriptions have always some peculiarities, gathered by contemplating things as they really exist. It may be observed, that the oldest parts of many nations preserve their reputation, by the following generations of writers, and a short celebrity, sink into oblivion. The same, whoever he be, must take their situations and descriptions immediately from knowledge; the resemblance is therefore just, their descriptions are verified by every eye, and their sentiments acknowledged by every breast. Those whom their fame invites to the same studies, copy partly them, and partly nature, till the books of one age gain such authority, as to stand in the place of nature, and be the models of imitation, always deviating a little, becomes at last capricious and casual. Shakespeare, whatever life or nature be his subject, shews plainly, that he has seen with his own eyes; he gives the image which he receives, not weakened or distorted by the intervention of any other mind; the ignorant feel his representations to be just, and the learned see that they are complete.

Perhaps it would not be easy to find any author, except Hesper, who invented so much as Shakespeare, who so much advanced the studies which he cultivated, or diffused so much novelty among the languages or country. The form, the rhymes, the language, and the shows of the English drama are his. He seems, says Dennis, to have been the very original of that, though he retired to ease and plenty, while he was yet little declined into the vale of years, before he could be disguised with fatigue, or disabled by infirmity, he made no collection of his works, nor desired to rescue those that had been already published from the deprivations that obscured them, or secure to the rest a better destiny, by giving them to the world in their genuine state.

Of the plays which bear the name of Shakspeare in the late editions, the greater part were not published till about seven years after his death, and the few which appeared in his life are apparently thrust into the world without the care of the author, and therefore probably without his knowledge.

All of the followers, clandestine or professed, the negligence and unskilfulness has by the late revisers been sufficiently shewn. The faults of all are indeed numerous and gross, and have not only corrupted many passages, perhaps beyond recovery, but have brought others into suspicion, which are only obscured by the crooked path of his obscurities; but our copyists equally unskilful, who still multiplied errors; they were perhaps sometimes mutilated by the actors, for the sake of shortening the speeches: and were at last printed without correction of the press.

In this state they remained, not as Dr. Warburton supposes, because they were unregarded, but because the poet was devoted to modern languages, and our ancestors were accustomed to so much negligence of English printers, that they could very patiently endure it. At last an edition was undertaken by Rowe; not because a poet was to be published by a poet, for Rowe seems to have thought very little on correction or explanation, but that our ancestors, by his author's request, should wear like those of his fraternity, with the appendages of a life and recommendatory preface. Rowe has been clamorously blamed for not performing what he did not undertake, and it is time that justice be done him, by confessing, that though he seems to have had no thought of corruption beyond the printer's errors, yet he has made many emendations, if they were not made before, which his successors have received without acknowledgment, and which, if they had produced them, would have filled pages and pages with censures of the stupidity by which the faults were committed, with displays of the absurdities which they involved, with ostentatious expositions of the new reading, and self-congratulations on the happiness of discovering it.

As of the other editors I have preserved the prefaces, I have likewise borrowed the author's life from Rowe, though not written with much elegance or spirit; it relates, however, what is now to be known, and therefore deserves to pass through all succeeding publications. them acquainted with the true state of Shakspeare's text, shewed that it was extremely corrupt, and gave reason to hope that there were means of reforming it. He collated the old copies, which none had thought to examine before, and restored many lines to their integrity; but by a very compendious criticism, he rejected whatever he disliked, and thought more of amendment than of cure. He was not why commended by Dr. Warburton for distinguishing the genuine from the spurious plays. In this choice he exerted no judgment of his own; the plays which he received, were given by Hennings and Condel, the first editors; and those which he rejected, though, according to the licentiousness of the press in those times, they were printed during Shakspeare's life, with his name, had been omitted by his friends, and were never added to his works before the edition of 1664, from which they were copied by the later printers.

This was a work which Pope seems to have thought unworthy of his abilities, being not able to suppress his contempt of the dull duty of an editor. He understated its business, and that is, no doubt, the true motive, or reason; for the editor is indeed dull, yet, like other tedious tasks, it is very necessary; but an emendatory critic would ill discharge his duty, without qualities very different from dullness. In perusing a corrupted piece, he must have before him all possibilities of meaning, with all possibilities of expression. Such must be his comprehension of thought, and such his copiousness of language. Of many readings possible, he must be able to select that which best suits with the state, opinions, and modes of language prevailing in every age, and with his author's particular cast of thought, and turn of expression. Such must be his knowledge, and such his taste. Conjunctural criticism demands more than humanity possesses, and he that exercises it with most praise, has the frequent need of indulgence. Let us now be told no more of the dull duty of an editor.

Confidence is the common consequence of success. They whose excellence of any kind has been loudly celebrated, are ready to conclude, that their powers are universal. Pope's edition fell below his own expectations, and he was so much the more offended with himself, as he was found to have left any thing for others to do, that he passed the latter part of his life in a state of hostility with verbal criticism.

I have retained all his notes, that no fragment of so great a writer may be lost; his preface, valuable alike for elegance of composition and justness of remark, and containing a general criticism on his author, so extensive that little can be added, and so exact, that little can be disputed, every editor has an interest to suppress, but that every reader would demand its insertion.

Pope was succeeded by Theobald, a man of narrow comprehension, and small acquisitions, with no native and intrinsic spleendour of genius, with little of the artifices of learning, but the dulness for minute accuracy, and not negligent in pursuing it. He collated the ancient copies, and rectified many errors. A man so anxiously scrupulous might have been expected to do more, but what little he did was common right.

In his report of copies and editions he is not to be taken without examination. He speaks sometimes indefinitely of copies, when he has only one. In his enumeration of editions, he mentions the two first folios as of high, and the third folio as of middle authority; but the truth is, that the first is equivalent to all others, and that the rest only deviate from it by the printer's negligence. Whoever has any of the folios has all, excepting those diversities which mere reiteration of editions has produced, which were not at all the beginning, but afterwards used only the first.

Of his notes I have generally retained those which he retained himself in his second edition, except when they were confuted by subsequent annotators, or were too minute to merit preservation. I have sometimes added to his restoration of a comma, without inserting the phrase in which he celebrated himself for his achievement. The exuberant excessiveness of his diction I have often lopped, his triumphant exultations over Pope and Rowe I have sometimes suppressed, and his contemptible ostentation I have frequently concealed; but I have in some places shown, he would have shewn himself, for the reader's diversion, that the laudable emptiness of some notes may justify or excuse the contraction of the rest.

Theobald, thus weak and ignorant, thus mean and faithless, thus petulant and ostentatious, by the good luck of having Pope for his enemy, has escaped, and escaped alone, with reputation, from this undertak- ing. He glingly does the world support those who solicit favours to those who slight him, and so easily is he praised, whom no man can envy.

Our author fell then into the hands of Sir Thomas Hanmer, the Oxford editor, a man, in my opinion, eminently qualified by nature for such studies. He had, what is the first requisite to emendatory criticism, that intuition by which the poet's intention is immediately discovered, and that discernment of his merit which dispaches its work by the easiest means. He had undoubtedly read much; his acquaintance with customs, opinions, and traditions, seems to have been large; and he is often learned without show. He seldom passes what he does not understand, without an attempt to find or to make a meaning, and sometimes hastily makes what a little more attention would have found. He is solicitous to reduce in grammar, what he could not be sure that his author intended to be grammatical. Shakspeare regarded more the series of ideas than of words; and his language, not being designed for the reader's desk, was all that he desired it to be, if it conveyed his meaning with the simplest diction.

Hammer's care of the metre has been too violently censured. He found the measure reformed in so many passages, by the silent labours of some editors, with the silent acquiescence of the rest, that he thought himself allowed to extend a little further the licence, which had already been carried so far without reprehension; and of his corrections in general, it must be confessed, that they are often just, and made commonly with the least possible violation of the text.

But, by inserting his emendations, whether invented or borrowed, into the page, without any notice of varying copies, he has appropriated the labour of his predecessors, and made his own edition of little authority. His confidence, indeed, both in himself and others, was so great; he supposes a thing that was done by Pope and Theobald; he seems not to suspect a critic of fallibility, and it was but reasonable that he should claim what he so liberally granted.

As he never writes without careful inquiry and diligent consideration, I have received all his notes, and believe that every reader will wish for more.

Of the last edition I have composed it with care. Respect is due to high place, tenderness to living reputation, and veneration to genius and learning; but he cannot be justly offended at that liberty of which he has himself so frequently given an example, nor very solicitous what is thought of notes which he couth never to have considered as part of his serious employments, and which, I suppose, since the ardour of composition is remitted, he no longer numbers among his amusements.

The original and predominant error of his commentary, is acquisiteness in his first thoughts; that precipitation which is produced by consciousness of quick discerrament; and that confidence which presumes to do, by surveying the surface, what labour only can perform, by penetrating the bottom. His notes exhibit sometimes perverse interpretations, and sometimes improbable conjectures; he at one time gives the author more profundity of meaning than the sentence admits, and at another discovers absurdities, where the sense is plain to every other reader. But his emendations are likewise often happy and just; and his interpretation of obscure passages learned and sagacious.

Of his notes, I have commonly rejected those, against which the general voice of the public has claimed, or which their own incongruity immediately condemns, and which, I suppose, the author himself would desire to be forgotten. Of the rest, to part I have given the highest approbation, by inserting the whole; and part II, by adopting, or allowing to pass, the judgment of the reader, as doubtful, though specious; and part III I have censured without reserve; but I am sure without bitterness of malice, and, I hope, without wantonness of insult.

It is no pleasure to me, in revising my volumes, to observe how much paper is wasted in controversy. While the successive revolutions of learning, and the various questions of greater or less importance, upon which wit and reason have exercised their power, must lament the unsuccesfulness of inquiry, and the slow advances of truth, when he reflects, that great part of the labour of every writer is only the destruction of those that went before him. The first care of the builder of a new system is to demolish the fabrics which are standing. The chief desire of him that comments an author, is to shew how much other commentators have corrupted and obscured him. The opinions prevalent in one age, as truths above the reach of controversy, are confuted and rejected in another, and rise again full of wonder and admiration. Thus the truth of the world is kept in motion without progress. Thus sometimes truth and error, and sometimes contrarieties of error, take each other's place by reciprocal invasion. The tide of seeming knowledge which is poured over one generation, retires and leaves another naked and barren; the sudden outpouring of intelligence, which for a while appears to shoot their beams into the regions of obscurity, on a sudden withdraw their lustre, and leave mortals again to grope their way.

These elevations and depressions of renown, and the contradictions to which all improvers of knowledge must for ever be exposed, since they are not escaped by the highest and brightest of mankind, may surely be endured with patience by critics and annotators, who can rank themselves but as the satellites of their authors. How canst thou beg for life, says Homer's hero to his captive, when thou knowest that thou art now to suffer only what must another day be suffered by Achilles?

Dr. Warburton had a name sufficient to confer celebrity on those who could exalt themselves into antagonists, and his notes have raised a clamour too loud to be distinct. His chief assailants are the authors of The Canon of Criticism, and of The Revised of Shakespeare's Text; of whom one ridicules his errors with airy perfunctory, suitable enough to the levity of the controversy; the other attacks them with gloomy malignity, as if he were dragging to justice an assassin or incendiary. The one stings like a fly, sucks a little blood, and drops it again; the other bites like a viper, and would be glad to leave inflammations and gangrene behind him. When I think on one, with his confederates, I remember the danger of Coriolanus, who was afraid that girls with spits, and boys with stones, should stay him in puny battle; when the other crosses my imagination, I remember the prolix in Macbeth:

"A falcon tow'ring in his pride of place,
Was by a mouseing hawk'd at and kill'd."

Let me however do them justice. One is a wit, and one a scholar. They have both shewn acuteness sufficient in the discovery of faults, and have both advanced some probable interpretations of obscure passages; but when they aspire to conjecture and emendation, it appears how falsely we all estimate our own abilities, and the little which they have been able to perform might have taught them more candour to the endeavours of others.

Before Dr. Warburton's edition, Critical Observations on Shakspeare had been published by Mr. Upton, a man skilled in the arts of disputation, and an annotator of books, but who seems to have had no great vigour of genius or nicety of taste. Many of his explanations are curious and useful, but he likewise, though he professes to oppose the licentious confidence of editors, and adhere to the old copies, is unable to restrain the extravagance of emendation, though his ardour is still seconded by his skill. Though he would urge, when his heart is expanded by a successful experiment, swells into a theorist, and the laborious collator at some unlucky moments frolics in conjecture.

Critical, historical, and explanatory Notes have been likewise published upon Shakspeare by Dr. Grey, whose diligent perusal of the old English writers has enabled him to make some useful observations. What he undertook he has well enough performed, but as he neither attempts judicial nor emendatory criticism, he employs rather his memory than his sagacity. It were to be wished that all would endeavour to imitate his modesty, who have not been able to surpass his knowledge.

I can speak with great sincerity of all my predecessors, what I hope will heretofore be said of me, that not one has left Shakspeare without improvement, nor is there one to whom I have not been indebted for assistance and information. Whatever I have taken from them, it was my intention to refer to its original author, and it is certain, that what I have not given to another, I believed when I wrote it to be my own. In some perhaps I have been anticipated; but if I am ever found to encroach upon the remarks of any other commentator, I am willing that the honour, be it more or less, should be transferred to the first claimant, for his right, and his alone, stands above dispute; the second can prove his pretensions only to himself, nor can himself always distinguish invention, with sufficient certainty, from recollection.

They have all been treated by me with candour, which they have not been careful of observing to one another. It is not easy to discover from what cause the acrimony of a scholar can naturally proceed. The subjects to be discussed by him are of very small importance; and they involve neither property nor liberty; nor favour the interest of sect or party. The various readings of copies, and different interpretations of a passage, seem to be questions that might exercise the wit, without engaging the passions. But whether it be, that small things make mean men proud,
The poetical beauties or defects I have not been very diligent to observe. Some plays have more, and some fewer judicial observations, not in proportion to their difference of merit, but because I give this part of my design to chance and caprice. For the reader, I believe, is seldom pleased with an opinion anticipated; it is not natural to delight more in what we find or make, than in what we receive. Judgment, like other faculties, is improved by practice, and its advancement is hindered by submission to dictatorial decisions, as the memory grows torpid by the use of a table book. Some imitation is however necessary; of all skill, poetry is infused by precept, and part is obtained by habit; I have therefore extenstions so much as may enable the candidate of criticism to discover the rest.

To the end of most plays I have added short strictures, containing a general censure of faults, or praise of excellence; in which I know not how much I have concurred with the current of my time. Most people, deviated from Newton’s method, and particularly and examined, and therefore it is to be supposed, that in the plays which are condemned there is much to be praised, and in those which are praised much to be condemned.

The part of criticism in which the whole succession of editors has laboured with the greatest diligence, which has occasioned the most pompous ostentation, and even the most solemn ceremony, is the emendation of corrupt passages, to which the public attention having been first drawn by the violence of the contention between Pope and Theobald, has been continued by the persecutions, which, with a kind of conspiracy, has been since raised against all the publishers of Shakespeare.

That many passages have passed in a state of deprecation through all the editions is indubitably certain; of these, the restoration is only to be attempted by collation of copies, or sagacity of conjecture. The editor’s province is safe and easy, the conjecturer’s perilous and difficult. Yet as the greater part of the plays are extant only in copy, the peril must not be avoided, nor the difficulty refused.

Of the readings which this emulation of amendment has hitherto produced, some from the labours of every publisher I have advanced into the text; those are to be considered as in my opinion sufficiently supported; some I have rejected from observation, as evidently erroneous; some I have left in the notes without abridgment, as requiring approbation, as resting in equipoise between objection and defence; and some, which seemed specious but not right, I have inserted with a subsequent animadversion.

Having classed the observations of others, I was at last to try what I could substitute for their mistakes, and how I could supply their omissions. I collected such copies as I could procure, and wished for others which I have not found the collectors of these rarities very communicative. Of the editions which chance or kindliness put into my hands I have given an enumeration, that I may not be blamed for neglecting what I had not the power to do.

By examining the old copies, I found that the latter public editions, which are passages to stand unauthorized, and contested themselves with Rowe’s regulation of the text, even when they knew it to be arbitrary, and with a little consideration might have found it to be wrong. Some of these alterations are only the decision of a word for one that appears to him more elegant or more intelligible. These corruptions I have often silently rectified; for the history of our language, and the true force of our words, can only be preserved, by keeping the text of authors free from adulteration. Others, and those very frequent, considered that I regulated the measure; on these I have not exercised the same rigour; if only a word was transposed, or a particle ininserted or omitted, I have sometimes suffered the line to stand; for the inconstancy of the copies is such, as that some liberties may be easily permitted. But this practice I have not suffered to proceed far, having restored the primitive division wherever it could for any reason be preferred.

The emendations, which comparison of copies supplied, I have inserted in the text; sometimes, where the improvement was slight, without notice, and sometimes with an account of the reasons of the change.

Conjecture, though it be sometimes unavoidable. I have not wantonly nor licentiously indulged. It has been my settled principle, that the reading of the ancient books is probably true, and therefore is not to be disturbed for the sake of elegance, perspicuity, or mere improvement of the sense. For though much credit is not due to the fidelity, nor any to the judgment of the first publishers, yet they who have the copies, appear entitled to read; right, than we who read it only by imagination. But it is evident that they have often made strange mistakes by ignorance or negligence, and that therefore something may be properly attempted by criticism, keeping the middle way between presumption and timidity.

Such criticism I have attempted, to the best I have been able, which might appear to theeccentrically perplexed, have endeavoured to discover how it may be recalled to sense, with least violence. But my first labour is, always to turn the old text on every side, and try if there be any interstice, through which light can find its way; nor would Hecules himself condemn me, as refusing the trouble of research, for the ambition of alteration. In this modest industry, I have not been unsuccessful. I have rescued many lines from the violations of temerity, and secured many scenes from the inroads of correction. I have adopted the Roman sentiment, that it is more honourable to save a citizen, than to kill an enemy, and have been more careful to protect the former than injure the latter. I have observed the common distribution of the plays into acts, though I believe it to be in almost all the plays void of authority. Some of those which are divided in the later editions have no division in the first folio, and some that are divided in the folio have no division in the preceding copies. The settled mode of the theatre requires four intervals in the play, but few, if any, of our author's compositions can be properly distributed in that manner. An act is so much of the drama as passes without intervention of time, or change of place. A pause makes a new act. In every real, and therefore in every imitative action, the intervals may be more or fewer, the restriction of five acts being accidental and arbitrary. This Shakespeare knew, and this he practised; his plays were written, and at first printed in one unbroken continui-unity, and ought now to be exhibited with short pauses, interposed as often as the scene is changed, or any considerable time is required to pass. This method would at once quell a thousand absurdties.

In restoring the author's works to their integrity, I have considered the punctuation as wholly in my power; for what could be their care of colons and commas, who corrupted words and sentences? Whatever could be done by adjusting points, is therefore silently performed, in some plays with much diligence, in others with less; it is hard to keep a busy eye steadily fixed upon evanescent atoms, or a discursive mind upon evanescent truth.

The same liberty has been taken with a few particles, or words of suppliants, for I have sometimes inserted or omitted them without notice. I have done that sometimes which the other editors have done always, and which indeed the state of the text may sufficiently justify.

The greater part of readers, instead of blaming us for passing tribes, will wonder that on mere tribes so much labour is expended, with such importance of debate, and such solemnity of dictation. To these I answer with confidence, that they are judging of an art which they do not understand; yet cannot much reproach them with their ignorance, nor promise that they would become in general, by learning criticism, more useful, happier, or better.

As I practised conjecture more, I learned to trust it less; and after I had printed a few plays, resolved to insert none of my own readings in the text. Upon this caution I now congratulate myself, for every day increases my doubt of my emendations.

Since I have confined my imagination to the margin, it may be thought to be quite inexcusable. I have suffered it to play some tricks in its own dominion. There is no danger in conjecture, if it be proposed as conjecture; and while the text remains uninjured, those changes may be safely offered, which are not considered even by him that offers them as necessary or safe.

If my conjectures appear of little value, there have not been ostentatiously displayed or improperly ob- truded. I could have written longer notes, for the art of writing notes is not of difficult attainment. The work is performed, first by raking at the stupidity, negligence, ignorance, and asinine tastelessness of the former editors, shewing, from all that goes before and all that follows, the indifference and abur-dity of the old reading; then by proposing something, which to superficial readers would seem specious, but which the editor rejects with indignation: then by producing the true reading, with a long paraphrase, and concluding with loud acclamations on the discovery, and a sober wish for the advancement and propriety of genuine criticism.

All this might have been, and perhaps done sometimes without impropery. But I have always suspected that the reading is right, which requires many words to prove it wrong: and the emendation wrong, that cannot without so much labour appear to be right. The justness of a happy restoration strikes at once, and the moral precept may be well applied to critic-ism, and adubia non gestim.

To dread the shock which he sees spread with wrecks, is natural to the sailor. I had before my eye, so many critical adventures ended in miscarriage, that caution was forced upon me. I encountered in every page wit struggling with its own sophistry, and learning confused by the multiplicity of its views, I was forced to consider those whom I admired, and could not but reflect, while I was disposing their emendations, how soon the same fate might happen to my own, and how many of the readings which I have corrected may be by some other editor defended and established.

"Critics I saw, that others' names efface, And fix'd their own, with labour, in the place; They set the one's date, and the other's place, Or disappear'd, and left the first behind."—Fors.

That a conjectural critic should often be mistaken, cannot be wonderful, either to others, or himself, if it be considered, that in his art there is no system, no principal and axiomatical truth that regulates B B subordinate positions. His chance of error is renewed at every attempt; an oblique view of the passage a slight misapprehension of a phrase, a casual inattentiveness to the parties connected, is sufficient to make him not the best, but fall acrimoniously; and lest he succeeds best, he produces perhaps but one reading of any probable, and he that suggests another will always be able to dispute his claims.

It is an unhappy state, in which danger is hid under pleasure. The allurements of emendation are scarcely resistent. Conjecture has all the joy and all the peace of invention, and he that has once started a happy change, is too much delighted to consider what objections may arise against it.

Yet conjectural criticism has been of great use in the learned world; nor is it my intention to depreciate a study, that has exercised so many mighty minds, from the revival of learning to our own age, from the Bishop of Aleria to English Bentley. The critics of ancient authors have, in the exercise of their sagacity, many assistance, which the editor of Shakespeare is condemned to want. They are employed upon grammatical and settled languages, whose construction contribute so much to perspicuity, that Homer has fewer passages unintelligible than Chaucer. The critics, and no others, know the regiments, and valuable quantities, which direct and confine the choice. There are commonly more manuscripts than one; and they do not often conspire in the same mistakes. Yet Scaliger could confess to Salmasius how little satisfaction his emendations gave him. Hilaudit nobis conjectura nostrae, quarum non pudet, post quem non medicum. And he also avowed, that critics were making faults, by trying to remove them, Ut alia vitii, ha nume remediis laborator. And indeed, when mere conjecture is to be used, the emendations of Scaliger and Lipsius, notwithstanding their wonderful sagacity and erudition, are often vague and disputable, like mine or Theobald’s.

Perhaps I may not be more censured for doing wrong, than for doing little; for raising in the public expectations, which at last I have not answered. The expectation of ignorance is indefinite, and that of knowledge is often tyrannical. It is hard to satisfy those who know not what to demand, or those who demand by design what they think impossible to be done. To excite a novel and unexhausted curiosity more than my own; yet I have endeavoured to perform my task with no slight solicitude. Not a single passage in the whole work has appeared to me corrupt, which I have not attempted to restore; or obscure, which I have not endeavoured to illustrate. In many I have failed like others; and from many, after all my efforts, I have retreated, and confessed the pulse and I have not passed over, with affected superiority, what is equally difficult to the reader and to myself, but where I could not instruct him, have owned my ignorance. I might easily have accumulated a mass of seeming learning upon easy scenes; but it ought not to be imputed to negligence, that where nothing was necessary, nothing has been done, or that, where others have done, I have said no more.

Notes are often necessary, but they are necessary evils. Let him, that is yet unacquainted with the powers of Shakespeare, and who desires to feel the highest pleasure that the drama can give, read every play from the first scene to the last, with utter negligence of all his commentators. When he has once on the wing, let it not stop at correction or explanation. When his attention is strongly engaged, let it disdain alike to turn aside to the name of Theobald and of Pope. Let him read on through brightness and obscurity, through integrity and corruption; let him proceed in the direction of his taste and his interest in the fable. And when the pleasures of novelty have ceased, let him attempt exactness, and read the commentators.

Particular passages are cleared by notes, but the general effect of the work is weakened. The mind is refrigerated by interruption; the thoughts are diverted from the principal subject; the reader is weary, he suspects not why; and at last throws away the book which he has so diligently studied.

Farts are not to be examined till the whole has been surveyed; there is a kind of intellectual remoteness necessary for the comprehension of any great work in its full design and in its true proportions; a close acquaintance degenerating into censure, his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him; no man can say, he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets.

It is to be lamented, that such a writer should want a commentary; that his language should become obsolete, or his sentiments obscure. But it is vain to carry wishes beyond the condition of human things; that which must happen to all, has happened to Shakespeare, by accident and time; and more than has been suffered by any other writer since the use of types, has been suffered by him through his own negligence of fame, or perhaps by that superiority of mind, which despised its own performances, when it compared them with its powers, and judged those works unworthy to be preserved, which the critics of following ages were to contend for the fame of restoring and explaining.

Among these candidates of inferior fame, I am now to stand the judgment of the public: and wish that I could confidently produce my commentary as equal to the encouragement which I have had the honour of receiving. Every work of this kind is by its nature deficient, and I should feel little solicitude about a work of which it is to be pronounced only by the skilful and the learned.

THE TEMPEST.

There was an edition of this play previous to the first folio of the Author's works, in 1623—it was one of the very latest of his productions. Mr. Malone supposes it to have been written in the year 1611—but it was most probably produced in the far-off distance of the year 1610, as we find from Mr. Verne's MSS, that it "was acted by John Hemmings and the rest of the King's Company, before Prince Charles, the Lady Elizabeth, and the Prince Palatine Elector, in the beginning of the year 1613."—The Prince Palatine was married to the Lady Elizabeth, and the scene of the action of the romance is laid on an imaginary island. The poem, which relates the love of a young prince and princess, and introduces aagogue of spirits to crown them with Honour, riches, carriage-Messing, Long continuance, and increasing, was not improbably composed on the occasion of their royal nuptials; as we know that it made a part of the splendid festivities in celebration of them. Mr. Malone imagines in this play a reference to the shipwreck of Sir George Somers on the Island of Bermuda. I cannot follow him in tracing the resemblance. It is difficult to perceive the connection between a tempest in the Mediterranean and a hurricane in the Atlantic—or between the wreck of an English ship, with her crew of adventurous navigators, on the coast of Bermuda, and the loss of an Italian vessel, conveying the king of Naples and the Duke of Milan from a royal marriage in Tunis, on an imaginary island, near the coast of Africa. The only circumstance I can discover in the accounts of Sir George Somers's shipwreck, which Shakespeare appears to have had in his mind in writing this play, is the only circumstance that none of the commentators have noticed, though it is related in a volume, to which they have all referred, viz. Smith's History of the World.—In this connection, we may observe, that the scenes between that character and Caliban and Trinculo, may have been suggested by the event related in the following passage:—When Sir George Somers left the Island of Bermuda in the year 1609, "Christopher Carter, Edward Walters, and Edward Edsell, remaining behind, Sir George's vessel being once out of sight, these three lords, and several of their ladies, having landed, began to erect them little commonwealth, with equal power and brotherly regency, building a house, preparing the ground, planting their corn, and such seeds and fruits as they had, and providing other necessaries and conveniences. Thus making search among the canaries and cormorants of these craggy rocks, what the ocean, from the world's creation, had thrown up among them, besides divers smaller pieces, they happened upon the largest block of Amphibgers that had ever been seen or heard of in one lump, but watched four score pounds, and is said, itself alone, besides the others, to have been then worth one hundred thousand pounds. But the new-born Gorgone, now grown so rapturous and ambitious, that these three born men, above three thousand crowns, though they disowned one another, and with little probability of ever seeing it again, fell out for the superiority and rule; and their contestion and quarrel grew so hot, that Carter wisely, after a great heat and hot argument, pretended to decide the matter in the field. But Carter wisely stepped their arms, choosing rather to bear with such troublesome evils, than, by being rid of them, to live alone."—Shakespeare in composing his play had any recollection of the above event, The Tempest could not have been written till after the year 1612, when the story was brought to England by Captain Matthew Somers. This gentleman was nephew of Sir George Somers; he accompanied his uncle both in his first and second visit to the Bermudas, and, after his death on the island, returned to England with the body.

Collins the poet informed Thomas Warton, that the subject of this play was taken from a novel called Aurelio and Isabella; but this information has proved to be incorrect.—The memory of Collins became confounded in his last melancholy illness, and he probably gave the name of one novel for another—A circumstance which, he may perhaps lead to the discovery of the real tale—the principal character of the romance, answering to Shakespeare's Prospero, was a chemical Tencronomer, who had bound a spirit, like Ariel, to perform his services.—Mr. Boswell relates, that a friend of his had met with an Italian novel which corresponded with Collins's description of the machinery of the Tempest.

Malone, Steevens, and Blackstone have discovered, in the following words from the Induction to the New Jonson, presented to the Duke, another fair:—"If there be never a servant-monster in the fair, who can help it?" an allusion to the character of Caliban, and another proof that of malice against our Author, which they have chosen to impeach to the great contemporary and personal abuse of Shakespeare—these, which have been so disgracefully concealed in the Life prefixed to Harbage's edition, and only mentioned here, to shew on how slight authorities this absurd falsehood has been propagated: and as another instance to prove, that to the theories of a commentator, as to the dreams of imagination; as the light as air, are confirmatory strong as proofs of holy writ.'

SCENE.—The Sea, with a Ship; afterwards an uninhabited Island.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a Ship at Sea.—A Storm with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter a Ship-master and a Boatswain.

Master. Boatswain—

Boats. Here, master: What cheer? Most. Good. Speak to the mariners: fall to't rally or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir. [Exit Enter Mariner.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts; cheerily, cheerily, my hearts; yare, yare: take in the top-sail: Tend to the master's whistle.—Blow till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, Sébastien, Antonio, Ferdinand, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good Boatswain, have care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Ant. Why, dost thou mean to be so pale, Boatswain? Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour; Keep your cabins: you do assist the storm. Gon. Nay, good, be patient. Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these roarers for the name of king? To cabin: silence: trouble us not.

Gon. Good; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority. If you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap.—Cheerly, good hearts.—Out of our way, I say. [Exit.

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Stand fast, good fate, to his hanging! make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage! If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserably unfortunate. [Exit.
TEMPEST.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the topmast! yare; lower, lower; bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather, or our office.

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Yet again? what do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o' your thought! you bawling, blasphemous, incalculable dog!

Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, hang, hang! you whoreson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Con. I'll warrant him from drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nut-shell, and as leaky as an unshasted wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold: set her two courses off; to sea again, lay her off.

Enter Mariners yet.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Exit.

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Con. The king and prince at prayers! let us as—

For our case is as theirs. [sigh them,

Seb. I am out of patience. [drunkards.——

Ant. We are merely cheated of our lives by this wide-chapped rascal;—Would, thou might'st

The washing of teak tides! [The drowning,

Though every drop of water swear against it,

And gape at wid'st to glut him. [A confused noise within.]—Mercy on us! We split, we split!—Farewell, my wife and children! Farewell, brother! We split, we split, we split!

Ant. Let's all sink with the king. [Exit.

Seb. Let's take leave of him. [Exit.

Con. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; long heath, brown furze, any thing: The wins above be done! but I would fain die a dry death. [Exit.

SCENE II.

The Island: before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them:

The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,

But that the sea, mounting to the wilkin’s cheek,

Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffer’d

With those that I saw suffer! a brave vessel,

Who had no doubt some noble creatures in her,

Dash’d all to pieces. O, the cry did knock

Against my very heart! Poor souls! they perish’d.

Had I been any god of power, I would

Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e’er

It should have good ship so have swallowed, and

The frightening souls within her.

Pros. Be collected; No more amazement: tell your piteous heart,

There’s no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day!

Pros. No harm.

I have done nothing but in care of thee,

( Of thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter! who

Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing

Of whence I am; nor that I am more better

Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,

And thy no greater father.

Mir. More to know

Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Pros. "Tis time

I should inform thee further. Lend thy hand,

And pluck my magic garment from me.—So;

[Lays down his mantle.

Lie there my art.—Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.

The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch’d

The very virtue of compassion in thee,

I have with such provision in mine art

So safely order’d, that there is no soul—

No, not so much perdition as a hair,

Betid to any creature in the vessel

Which thou hast’st cry, which thou saw’st sink.—

For thou must now know further. [Sit down;

Mir. You have often

Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp’d

And left me to a bootless inquisition;

Concluding, stay, not yet.—

Pros. The hour’s now come,

The very minute bids thee ope thine ear;

Obey, and be attentive. Can’t thou remember

A time before we came unto this cell?

I do not think thou can’st; for thou them wast not

Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pros. By what! by any other house, or person?

Of any thing the image tell me, that

Hath kept with thine remembrance.

Mir. "Tis far off;

And rather like a dream than an assurance

That my remembrance warrants: Had I not

Four or five women once, that tended me? [Is it,

Pros. Thou hadst, and more, Miranda: But how

That under lives in thy mind? What see’st thou else

In the dark backward and abysm of time?

If thou remember’st aught, ere thou canst here,

Now thou canst here, thou may’st.

Mir. But that I do not.

Pros. Twelve years since, Miranda, twelve years

Thy father was the duke of Milan, and [since,

A prince of power.

Mir. Sir, are not you my father?

Pros. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and

She said—thou wast my daughter; and thy father

Was duke of Milan; and his only heir

A princess, no worse issued.

Mir. O, the heavens!

What foul play had we, that we came from thence;

Or blessed wist, we did?

Pros. Both, both, my girl; By foul play, as thou say’st, we were heaw’d thence; But blessedly holp hither.

Mir. O, my heart bleeds

To think o’ the teen that I have turn’d you to, [ther. Which is from my remembrance! Please you, far

Pros. My brother, and thy uncle, call’d Antonio,—

I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should

Be so perfidious!—he whom, now thyself,

Of all the world I lov’d, and to him put

The manage of my state; as, at that time,

Through all the signiorities it was the first,

And Prospero the prime duke; being so reputed

In dignity, and, for the liberal arts,

Without a parallel: those being all my study,

The government I cast upon my brother,

And to my state grew stranger, being transported,

And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle—

Dost thou attend me!

Mir. Sir, most heedfully.

Pros. Being once perfected how to grant suits,
Prospero: Come away, servant, come.

Act 1, Sc. 2.
How to deny them; whom to advance, and whom
To trasb for over-topping; new created
The creatures that were mine; I say, or chang'd them,
Or else now form'd them; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts in th' state
To what tune pleas'd his ear; that now he was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suck'd my verdure out on 't.

Thou attend'st
I pray thee, mark me.

[not:]

Mira. O good sir, I do.

Pro. I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicate
To cloensness, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which, but by being so retired,
O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false brother
Awak'd an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood, in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit.
A confidence sans bound. He being thus loaded,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact.—like one,
Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a snare of his memory,
To credit his own lie,—he did believe
As much of it, as he could, and so perform'd
And executing the outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative:—Hence his ambition Growing.

—Ost hear?

Mira. Thy tale, sir, would c lure deafness.

Pro. To have no screen between this part he play'd,
And him he play'd it for, he needs will be Ariel: Milan: Die; poor Milan: my library
Was dukedom large enough; of temporal royalties
He thinks me now incapable: confederates
(So dry he was for sway) with the king of Naples,
To give our annual tribute, do him homage;
Subject his coronet to his crown, and bend
The dukedom, yet unbowed, (alas, poor Milan!)
To most inglorious stop.

Mira. O the heavens!

Pro. Mark his condition, and the event; then tell
If this might be a brother.

Mira. I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother:
Good worms have borne bad sons.

Pro. But now the condition.

This king of Naples, being an enemy
To me inveterate, heartens my brother's suit;
Which was, that he in lieu of the premises,—
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,—
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom; and confer fair Milan,
With all the honours, on my brother: Whereon,
A treacherous army levied, on my midnight
Paled to the purpose, did Antonio open
The gates of Milan; and, 't the dead of darkness,
The ministers for the purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying self.

Ariel. Alack, for pity!

I, not remembering how I cry'd out thee,
Will cry it o'er again: it is a hint,
That wrings mine eyes to 't.

Pro. Hear a little farther,
And then I'll bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon us; without which, this story
Were most impertinent.

Mira. Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?

Pro. Well demanded, wench;
My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not;
(So dear the love my people bore me) nor set
A mark so bloody on the business; but
With colours fairer paint the soul ends.
In few, they hurried us aboard a bark;
Bore us some leagues to sea; where they prepar'd
A rotten carcass of a boat, not rigged,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively had quit it: there they hoist us,
To cry to the sea that roar'd to us; to sigh
To the winds, whose pity, sighing back again,
Did us but loving wrong.

Mira. Alack! what trouble
Was I then to you?

Pro. O! a cherubin
Thou wast, thou dost preserve me! Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,—
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt;
Under my broad gown'd, which rais'd in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up
Against what should ensue.

Mira. How came we ashore?

Pro. By Providence divine.

Some food we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan, Gonzalo,
Out of his charity, (who being then appointed Master of this design,) did give us; with Rich garnitures, linens, and necessaries,
Which since we steedned much; so, of his gentleness,
Knowing I lov'd my books, he furnish'd me,
From my own library, with volumes that
I prize above my dukedom.

Mira. Would I might
But ever see that man!

Pro. Now I arise:

Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.

Here in this island we arrived; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful. [You, sir,
Mira. Heavens thank you for it! And now, I pray
(For still 'tis beating in my mind,) your reason
For raising this sea-storm?

Pro. Know thus far forth,—
By accident most strange, bountiful fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore: and by my prescience
I find my zeal most doth depend upon
A most auspicious show, the more.

If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after drop.—Here cease more questions;
Thou art inclin'd to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way;—I know thou canst not choose.

[MIRANDA SLEEPS.]

Come away, servant, come: I am ready now;
Approach, my Ariel; come.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail! I come
To answer thy best pleasure; he 't to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl'd clouds; to thy strong bidding, task
Ariel, and all his quality.

Pro. Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?
Ari. To every article.

I boarded the king's ship; now on the beak,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd an amazement: Sometimes, I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmost
The yards and boomsprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet, and join: Jove's lightnings, the precursors
O the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary
And sight-out-running were not: The fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune
Seem'd to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.
Pro. My brave spirit!
Who so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?
Ari. Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd
Some tricks of desperation: All, but mariners,
Plung'd in the shining brine, and quit the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me. The king's son, Ferdinand,
With hair up-staring, (then like reeds, not hair,) was
The first man that leap'd; cried, He is empty,
And all the devils are here.
Pro. Why, that's my spirit!
But was not this nigh shore?
Ari. Close by, my master.
Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?
Ari. Not a hair perish'd;
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before: and, as thou bad'st me,
In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the isle:
The king's son I have landed by himself;
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs,
In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.
Pro. Of the king's ship,
The mariners, say, how thou hast dispos'd,
And all the rest of the fleet?
Ari. Safely in harbour
Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where once
Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still ooze'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:
The mariners all under hatches now;
Whom, with a charm I did to their suffer'd labour,
I left asleep; and for the rest of the fleet,
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again;
And are upon the Mediterranean fote,
Bound sadly home for Naples;
Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd,
And his great person perish.
Pro. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work:
What is the time of the day?
Ari. Past the mid season.
Pro. At least two glasses: Tho' time 'twixt six and Must by us both he spent most preciously. [now]
Ari. Is there more toil?—Since thou dost give me pains,
Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd,
Which is not yet perform'd me.
Pro. How now! moody?
What is 't thou can'st demand?
Ari. My liberty.
Pro. Before the time be out? no more.
Ari. Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
Told thou no lies, made no mistakes, serv'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings: thou didst pro-
To bear me a full year.
[raise
Dost thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?
Ari. No.
Pro. Thou dost; and think'st it
Much to tread the ooze of the salt deep;
To run upon the sharp wind of the north;
To do me business in the veins of the earth,
When it is bak'd with frost.
Ari. I do not, sir.
Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?
Ari. No, sir.
ACT I.—SCENE II.

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself
Upon thy wicked dam, come forth! —

Enter CALIBAN.

Cal. As wicked dew as e'er my mother brew'd
With raven's feathers from unwholesome fen,
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er. —

Pro. For this, be sure, to-night shall have Sidestitches that shall pen the breath up; urchins shall,
That for most that night of which they may work,
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made them.

Cal. This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou took'st from me. When thou camest first,
Then I lov'd thee, and mad'st much of me; would'st
Water with berries in't; and teach me how I might
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd thee,
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' the isle.
The fresh springs, brine pits, barren place, and fertile; —
Cursed be I that I did so! — All the charms
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which first was mine own king; and here you stye me
In this hard rock, while you do keep from me
The rest of the island.

Cal. Thou most lying slave, [thee],
Whom stripes may move, not kindness: I said
Fitst as thou art, with human care; and loy'd thee
In mine own cell, till thou did'st seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Pro. O ho, O ho!—would it had been done!
Thou did'st prevent me; I had pleased else
This isle with Calibans.

Pro. Abhorred slave;
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thee with sense.
With words that made them known: But thy vile race,
Though thou did'st learn, had that in 't which good Natures
Could not abide to be with: therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin'd into this rock,
Whose desert more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language; and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language!

Pro. Hag-seed, hence! —

Fetch us in fuel; and be quick, thou wert best,
To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, malice? —
If thou neglect'st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches: make thee roar
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, pray thee! —

I must obey: his art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Setebos,
And make a vassal of him.

Pro. So, slave! hence! — [Exit CALIBAN

Re-enter ARIEL invisibly, playing and singing;
Ferdinand following him.

ARIEL'S Song.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:

Court'sied when you have, and kiss'd,
(The wild waves whist.)

Pro. Fost it fealty here and there;
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.

Hark, hark! —

Bar. Bowgh, wowgh. [dispersely.]

The watch-dogs bark! —

Bar. Bowgh, wowgh. [dispersely.]

Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strutting charictere
Cry, Cock-a-doodle-dow.

Fer. Where should this music be! 'tis the air, or the
It sounds no more:—and sure it waits upon earth?
Some god of the island. Sitting on a bank
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters;
Allaying both their fury, and my passion,
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather;—But 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.

ARIEL sings.

Full fathoms five thy father lies:
Of his bones are coral made;
Those pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark! now I hear them,—ding-dong, bell.

[Pro. Barden, ding-dong.

Fer. The ditty doth remember my drown'd father:—
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes:—I hear it now above me.

Pro. The fringed curtain of thine eye advance
And say, what thou seest yond?

Mira. What is 't? a spirit?

Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form.—But 'tis a spirit.

Pro. No, wench; it eats and sleeps, and hath such senses
As we have, such: This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck; but he's something staid
With grief—that's beauty canker; thou might'st call
A goodly person. He hath lost his fellows, [him
And strays about to find them. I might call him
A thing divine; for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pro. It goes on, I see, [Aside.

As my soul prompts it:—Spirit, fine spirit! I'll free
Within two days for this. — [thee

Fer. Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend!—Vouchsafe, my prayer
May know, if you remain upon this island;
And that you will some good instruction give;
How I may bear me here: My prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid or no; —

Mira. No wonder, sir; —

But, certainly a maid.

Fer. My language! heavens!—
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro. How! the best?

What worth thou, if the king of Naples heard thee?

Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonder's
To hear thee speak of Naples: He does hear me;
And, that he does, I weep: myself am Naples;
Who with mine eyes, ne'er since at ebb, beheld
The king my father wreck'd.
TEMPEST.

Miro. Alack, for mercy! Yes, faith, and all his lords; the duke of Milan, and his brave son, being twain. [Exeunt.]

Pro. The duke of Milan, and his more braver daughter, could control thee, if now 'twere fit to do:—At the first sight! They have chang'd eyes,—Delicate Ariel, I'll set thee free for this!—A word, good sir; I fear you have done yourself some wrong: a word. Mira. Why speaks my father so ungently? This is the third man that e'er I saw; the first that e'er I sigh'd for: pity move my father To be inclin'd my way. Fer. O, if a virgin, and your affection not gone forth, I'll make you The queen of Naples.

Pro. Soft, sir; one word more;—they are both in either's powers; but this swift business, I must uneasy make, lest too light winning Make the prize light.—One word more; I charge That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp [thee, The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself Upon this island, as a spy, to win it From me, the lord on't. Fer. No, as I am a man. Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple; Good things will strive to dwell with't. [Aside. Pro. Follow me. [To Fer. Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge. Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so. Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; By and by it will strike. Gen. Sir,—[Aside. Gen. One.—Tell. Gen. When every grief is entertain'd that's offer'd, Comes to the entertainment—

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others. Gen. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause. (So have we all) of joy; for our escape is much beyond our loss: Our hint of woe is common; every day, some sailor's wife, The masters of some merchant, and the merchant, Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle, I mean our preservation, few in millions Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh Our sorrow with our comfort. Alon. Pr'ythee, peace. Seb. He will come comfort like cold porridge. Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so. Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; By and by it will strike. Gen. Sir,—

Seb. The old cock.

Ant. The cockeel.

Seb. Done: the wager?

Ant. A laughter.

Seb. A match.

Ant. Though this island seem to be desert,—

Seb. Ha, ha, ha! Ant. So, you've pay'd.

Ant. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,—

Seb. Yet, Ant. Yet—

Ant. He could not miss it. Ant. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench. [Jivered. Seb. Ay, and a subtle; as he most learnedly do. Ant. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly. Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotten ones. Ant. Or, as 'twere perfumed by a fen. Gen. Here is everything advantageous to life.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Ant. True; save means to live.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little. [green!

Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks! how

Ant. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of green in't.

Ant. He misses not much.

Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is (which is indeed almost beyond credit)—

Seb. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, hold, notwithstanding, their freshness, and glosses; being rather new dy'd, than stain'd with salt water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribell to the king of Tunis.

Seb. This is a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

Adr. Tunis was never grace before with such a paragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.

Ant. Widow? a pox o' that! How came that widow in? Widow Dido?

Seb. What if he had said, widow Exenea too?
good lord, how you take it!

Adr. Widow Dido, said you? you make me study of that: She was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

Adr. Carthage?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage.

Ant. A word is more than the miraculous harp.

Seb. He hath rais'd the wall, and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easiest?

Seb. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

Ant. And, sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Gon. Ay?

Ant. Why, in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

Ant. And the rarest that e'er came there.

Seb. 'Tis late, I beseech you, widow Dido.

Ant. O widow Dido.

Seb. Is not sir, my douillet as fresh as the first day I wore it! I mean, in a sort.

Ant. That sort was well fish'd for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughter's marriage?

Adr. You cram these words into mine ears, against
The stomach of my sense: 'Twould I had never Married my daughter there! for, coming thence,
My son is lost; and, in my rate, she too,
Who is so far from Italy renown'd,
I ne'er again shall see her. 'O thou mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee!

Seb. Sir, he may live:

Ant. I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose eminence he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most sown that met him; his bold head
'bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore, that o'er his ware-worn basis bow'd,
As stooping to relieve him; I not doubt,
He came alive to land.

Adr. No, no, he's gone.

Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss;
That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,
But rather lose her to an African;
Where she, at least, is banish'd from your eye,
Who hath cause to wet the grief on it.

Ant. Pr'ythee, peace.

Seb. You were kneel'd to, and importun'd otherwise
By all of us; and the fair soul herself
Weigh'd, between loftiness and obedience, at Which end o' the beam she'd bow. We have lost
I fear, for ever; Milan and Naples have [your son,]
More widows in them of this business' making,
Then we bring men to comfort them. The fault's
Your own.

Ant. So is the dearest of the loss.

Gon. My lord Sebastian,
The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness,
And time to speak it in; you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.

Adr. And most chirurgically.

Gon. It is foul weather in us all, good sir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb. Foul weather?

Ant. Very foul.

Gon. Had I a plantation of this isle, my lord,—

Ant. He'd sow it with nettles and sow Dido.

Seb. Or docks, or mallowes.

Gon. And were the king of it, What would I do?

Seb. 'Scap'e being drunk, for want of wine.

Gon. The commonwealth, I would by contraries
Execute all things: for no kind of traffic
Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
Letters should not be known; no use of service;
Of riches, none; of poverty, none;
Successions; bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none:
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil:
No occupation; all men idle, all;
And women too; but innocent and pure:
No sovereignty:

Seb. And yet he would be king on't. [beginning.

Ant. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the Gon. All things in common nature should produce
Without sweat or endeavour: treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,
Would I not have; but nature should bring forth,
Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.

Seb. But no marrying more his subjects?

Ant. No one, man: all idle; whores and knaves.

Gon. I would with such perfection govern, sir,
To excel the golden age.

Seb. 'Save his majesty!

Ant. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. And, do you mark me, sir?—

Ant. Pr'ythee, no more; thou dost talk nothing
Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am noting to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given?

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle; you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter ARIEL, invisible, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.
Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you: I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy?

Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.

[All sleep but ALON. SED. and ANT.

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes
Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts! I
They are inclin'd to do so.

Ant. Please you, sir, Do not let the heavy offer of it
It often visits sorrow; when it doth,
It is a comforter.

We, two, my lord,
Will guard your person while you take your rest,
And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you: wondrous heavy.

[ALON SLEEPS. Exit ARIEL.

Sed. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Ant. It is the quality o' the climate.

Why

Doth it not then our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself dispos'd to sleep.

Ant. Nor I; my spirits are nimble.
They fell together all, as by consent;
They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian?—O, what might?—No more:
And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face,
What thou should'st be: the occasion speaks thee;
My strong imagination sees a crown
Dropping upon thy head.

Sed. What, art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?
I do; and, surely,
It is a sleepy language; and thou speak'st
Out of thy sleep: What is it thou did'st say?
This is a strange repose, to be asleep
With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving,
And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,
These let's thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink'st
Whiles thou art waking.

Sed. Thou dost snore distinctly;
There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do
Troubles thee o'er.

Sed. Well; I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Do so: to ebb,

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. O,
If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish,
Whiles thus you mock it! how, in stripping it,
You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,
Most often do so near the bottom run,
By their own fear, or sloth.

Sed. Prythee, say on:
The setting of thine eye, and cheek, proclaim
A matter; and a birth, indeed,
Which threses thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir.
Although this lord of weak remembrance, this (Who shall be of as little memory,
When he is earth'd), hath here almost persuaded
(For he's a spirit of persuasion only)
The king, his son's alive: 'tis as impossible
That he's undrown'd, as he that sleeps here, swims.
Sed. I have no hope
That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that no hope,
What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,
But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me,
That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Sed. He's gone.

Ant. Then, tell me,
Who's the next heir of Naples?

Sed. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis: she that dwells
Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the sun were post,
(Theman! the moon's too slow,) till new-born chins
Be rough and razonable; she, from whom
We were all sea-swallow'd, though some cast again;
And, by that, destin'd to perform an act,
Whereof what's past is prologue; what to come,
In yours and my discharge.

Sed. What stuff is this?—How say you?
'Tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis:
So is she heir of Naples; 'twixt which regions
There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit
Seems to cry out, How shall that Claribel
Measure us back to Naples?—Keep in Tunis,
And let Sebastian wake!—Say, this was death
That now hath seiz'd them; why, they were no worse
Than now they are: There be, that can rule Naples,
As well as he that sleeps; lords, that can prate
As amply and uncessarily, as this Gonzalo; I, myself could make
A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore
The mind that I do! what a sleep were this
For your advancement! Do you understand me?
Sed. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content
Tender your own good fortune?

Sed. I remember,
You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. Why, and look, how well my garments sit upon me;
Much feater than before: My brother's servants
Were then my fellows, now they are my men;
Sed. But, for your conscience—
Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if it were a kybe,
'Twould put me to my slipper: But I feel not
This deity in my bosom; twenty consciences,
That stand 'twixt me and Milan, candied be they,
And melt, ere they molest! Here lies your brother,
No better than the earth he lies upon.
If he were that which now he's like: whom I,
With this abominable steel, three inches of it,
Can lay to bed for ever: whilsts you, doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for aye might put
This ancient morsel, this sir Prudence, who Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest,
They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk;
They'll tell the clock to any business that,
We say befits the house.

Sed. Thy case, dear friend,
Shall be my precedent: as thou got'st Milan,
I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou pay'rst;
And I the king shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together:
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo.

Sed. O, but one word.

[They converse apart.

Music. Re-enter ARIEL, invisible.

Ari. My master through his art foresees the danger
That these, his friends, are in; and sends me forth,
ACT II.—SCENE II.

(For else his project dies,) to keep them living.

[In GONZALO's ear,]

While you here do roaring lie

Open—ey'a conspiracy,

His time doth take:

If of life you keep a care,

'State off' slumber, and beware:

Awake! Awake!

Ant. Then let us both be sudden.

Gon. Now, good angels, preserve the king!

[They awake.]

Alon. Why, how now, ho! awake! Why are you
Wherefore this ghastly looking?

[Drawn.]

Gon. What's the matter?

Sekh. While we stood here securing your repose,
Even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing
Like bulls, or rather lions; did it not wake you?
It struck mine ear most terribly

Alon. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;
To make an earthquake! sure it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions.

Gon. Heard you this, Gonzalo?

Gon. Upon mine honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me:
I shak'd you, sir, and cry'd; as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn:—there was a noise,
That's verity: 'Tis best we stand upon our guard;
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Alon. Lead off this ground; and let's make farther
For my poor son. [Search]

Gon. heavens keep him from the beasts!
For he is, sure, i'th island.

Alon. Lead away.

Artl. Prospero, my lord, shall know what I have done:

So, king, go safely on to seek thy son.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another part of the Island.

Enter CALIBAN, with a burden of wood.

A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun sucks up
From boys, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin shows, pitch me i' th' mire,
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid them; but
For every tryde are they set upon me:
Sometimes like apes, that moe and chatter at me,
And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie trembling in my barefoot way, and mont
Their pricks at my foot-fall; sometime am I
All wound with adders, who, with eleven tongues,
Do hiss me into madness.—Lo! now! lo! lo!

Enter TRINCULO.

Here comes a spirit of his; and to torment me,
For bringing wood in slowly: 'T will fall flat;
Perchance, he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing i' th' wind: yond' same black cloud, yond' huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head; yond' same cloud cannot choose but fall by painfull,—What have we here! a man or a fish? Dead or alive! A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of, not of the newest, Poor-John. A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as oace I was,) and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man; any strange beast there makes a man: when they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Legg'd like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, o! my truth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt.
[Thunder.] Alas! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Misery acquaints a man with strange bed-fellows. I will here shroud, till the drugs of the storm be past.

Enter STEFANO, singing; a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die a-shore.

This is a very scurry tune to sing at a man's funeral:
Well, here's my comfort.

[Drinks.]

The master, the swabber, the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his mate,
Lou'd Mall, Meg, and Mariana, and Margery,
And none of us car'd for Kate:
For she had a tongue with a tang,
She could cry to a sailor, Go hang.

She lou'd not the savour of tar nor pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where-o'er she did itch:
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

This is a scurry tune too: But here's my comfort.

[Drinks.]

Cal. Do not torment me: O!

Ste. What's the matter! Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon us with savages, and men of Inde? Ha! I have not 'scap'd drowning, to be afraid now of your four legs; for it hath been said, As proper a man as ever went on four legs, cannot make him give ground: and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me: O!

Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with four legs; who hath got, as I take it, an agrue: Where the devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief, if it he but for that: If I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, p'rtysee;
I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit: if I can recover him and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Then dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt
Anon, I know it by thy trembling;
Now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways; open your mouth: here is that which will give language to you, cat; open your mouth: this will shake your shakings, I can tell you, and that soundly; you cannot tell who's your friend; do you know that? I say again.

Trin. I should know that voice: It should be—
But he is drowned; and these are devils: O! defend me!

Ste. Four legs, and two voices; a most delicate monster! His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to diversify all the rest. If the bottle will recover him, I will help his ague: Come—Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

C 2.
TEMPEST.

Trin. Stephano,—

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy! mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no more speech in me, so will I go. Will thou go with me?

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me; for I am Trinculo;—be not afraid,—thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth; I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed: How can'st thou be the siege of this moon-calf? Can I be not Trinculo?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke:—But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now, thou art not drowned. Is the storm blown over? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaber-due, for fear of the storm: And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans'seap'ld!

Cal. Hast thou not dropped from heaven?—

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee;

My mistress shewed me thee, thy dog, and bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents: swear to that. The sun's a brillant light, this is a very shallow monster:—I afraid of him a very weak monster:—The man I' the moon?—a most poor credulous monster: Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll shew thee every fertile inch o' the island; And kiss thy foot: I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perilous and drunken monster;—when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on then; down and swear.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster: a most scarry monster! I could find in my heart to beat him.—

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —but the poor monster's in drink;—An abominable monster! [berries.]

Cal. I'll shew thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster! to make a wonder of me!—

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow; And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts;—

Shew thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how To scrape the nimble marmozet; I'll bring thee To clust'ring filibinis, and sometimes I'll get thee Young sea-mussels from the rock. Will thou go with me?

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talking.—Trinculo, the king and all our company else being draw'd, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle. Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. Farewell, master: farewell, farewell.

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish; Nor fetch in being At requiring, Nor scrape treacherous, nor wash dish; 'Ban' Ban, Cal.—Caliban, Heav' a new monster—Get a new man.

Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom, hey-day, freedom!

Ste. O brave monster! lead the way. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Fer. There be some sports are painful; but their labour Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters Point to rich ends. This my mean task would be To come hence with this log, as 'tis odious; but The mistress, which I serve, quickens what's dead, And makes my labours pleasures: O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's grabbed; And he's compos'd of harshness. I must remove Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up, Upon a sore injunction: My sweet mistress Weeps when she sees me work; and says, such base-Had ne'er he like executor. I forget; [ness But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labours; Most busy-less, when I do it.

Enter Miranda, and Prospero at a distance.

Mir. Alas, now! pray you, Work not so hard; I would the lightning had Burst up those logs, that you are enjoind to pile! Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns, Twill weep for having wearied you: My father Is hard at study; pray now, rest yourself; He's safe for these three hours.

Fer. O most dear mistress, The sun will set, before I shall discharge What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you'll sit down, I'll bear your logs the while: Pray, give me that; I'll carry it to the pile.

Fer. No, precious creature: I had rather crack my sinews, break my back, Than you should such dishonour undergo, While I sit lazy by.

Mir. It would become me As well as it does you: and I should do it With much more ease; for my good will is to it, And yours it is against.

Pro. Poor worm! thou art infected; This visitation shews it.

Mir. You look wearily.

Fer. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me, When you are by at night. I do beseech you,
Miranda. — O my father, I have broke your best to say so!

Fer. — Adm'rd Miranda! Indeed, the top of admiration; what’s dearest to the world! Full many a lady I have ey’d with best regard; and many a time the harmony of their tongues hath into bondage brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues Have I lik’d several women; never any With so full soul, but some defect in her Did quarel with the noblest grace she ow’d. And put it to the foil: But you, O you, So perfect, and so peerless, are created Of every creature’s best.

Mira. — I do not know One of my sex; no woman’s face remember. Save, from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen More that I may call men, than you, good friend, And my dear father: how features are abroad, I am skill-less of; but, by my modesty, (The jewel in my dover,) I would not wish Any companion in the world but you; Nor can imagination form a shape, Beside yourself, to like of; But I prattle Something too wildly, and my father’s precepts I therein do forget.

Fer. — I am, in my condition, A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king; (I would, not so!) and would no more endure This wooden slavery, than I would suffer The flesh-fly blow my mouth.—Hear my soul speak.— The very instant that I saw you, did My heart fly to your service; there resides, To make me slave to it; and for your sake, Am I this present log-man.

Mira. — Do you love me?

Fer. — O heaven, O earth, bear witness to this sound, And crown what I profess with kind event, If I speak true; if hollowly, invert What best is bodied me, to mischief! I, Beyond all limit of what else in the world, Do love, prize, honour you.

Mira. — I am a fool, To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. — Fair encounter Of two must rare affections! Heavens rain grace On that which breeds between them!

Fer. — Wherefore weep you?

Mira. — At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer What I desire to give; and much less take, What I shall die to want: But this is trudging; And all the more it seeks to hide itself, The bigger bulk it shews. Hence, hateful cunning! And prompt me, plain and holy innocence! I am your wife, if you will marry me; If not, I’ll die your maid; to be your fellow You may deny me; but I’ll be your servant, Whether you will or no.

Fer. — My mistress, dearest, And I thus humble ever.

Mira. — My husband then?

Fer. — Ay, with a heart as willing As bondage e’er of freedom: here’s my hand.

Mira. — And mine, with my heart in’t: And now Till half an hour hence. [Farewell,]

Fer. — A thousand! A thousand! [Exit Fer. and Min.

Pro. — So glad of this as they, I cannot be, Who are surpris’d with all: but my rejoicing At nothing can be more. I’ll to my book;

For yet ere supper time, must I perform Much business appertaining. [Exit.

ACT III.—SCENE II.

Enter STEPHANO and TRINCULO; CALIBAN following with a bottle.

Ste. Tell not me; — when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board ’em: Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster! the folly of this island! They say, there’s but five upon this isle; we are three of them; if the other two be brained like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee; thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his hull.

Ste. My man monster hath drowning his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swear, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light.—Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he’s no standard.

Ste. We’ll not run, monsieur monster.

Trin. Nor go neither: but you’ll lie, like dogs; and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-call, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-call.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoe: I’ll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou hast, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justle a constable: why, thou deboshed fish thou, was there ever a man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord!

Trin. Lord, quoth he! — that a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again I bite him to death, I pr’ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head; if you prove a mutineer, the next tree.—The poor monster’s my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased To bearken once again the suit I made thee?

Ste. Marry will I: kneel and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter ARIEL, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee
Before I am subject to a tyrant;
A sorcerer, that by his cunning hath Cheated me of this island.

Ari. Thou hast.

Cal. Thou hast, thou jesting monkey, thou; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee: I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum then, and no more.—[To CALIBAN.] Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle:
From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him—for, I know, thou darst;
But this thing dare not.

Ste. That’s most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I’ll serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?
Ariel. Tune, tune, then; Thou canst not. —
Cal. What a pied ninny's this? Thou sev'ry
I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows,
And take his bottle from him: when that's gone,
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew
Where the quick freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing; I'll go further off.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Strikes him.] As Thy kind, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give thee the lie: —Out of your wits, and bearing too! A posy of your bottle! this can sack and drinking do: A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cat. Ha, ha, ha!

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee stand
further off.

Cal. Beat him enough; after a little time,
I'll beat him too.

Ste. Stand farther. —Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him
I the afternoon to sleep: there thou may'st brain him,
Having first seiz'd his books; or with a log
Batter his skull, or pounce him with a stake,
Or cut his weand with thy knife: Remember,
First to possess his books; for without them
He is but a sot, as I am, but hath not
One spirit to command: They all do hate him,
As rootedly as I: Burn but his books;
He has brave utensils, (for so he calls them,) the
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.
And that most deeply to consider, is
The beauty of his daughter; he himself
Calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman,
But only Sycorax my dam, and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax,
As greatest does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant,
And lirng thee forth brave brood.

Ste. A Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter
And I will be king and queen; (save our graces!) and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys: —Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee;
but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep,
Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.
Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure;
Let us be jocund: Will you taw the catch
You taught me but while-ere! —
Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason: Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings.
Plout'em, and shout'em; and shout'em, and Thought is free. [Shout'em; Cats. That's not the tune.

Ariet. plays the tune on a tabor and pipe.

Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

(For, certes, these are people of the island.)

Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note,
Their manners are more gentle-kind, than of
Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Honest lord,
Thou hast said well; for some of you there present,
Are worse than devils. [Aside.]

Alon. I cannot too much muse,
Such shapes, such gesture, and such sound, expressing
(Although they want the use of tongue) a kind
Of excellent dumb discourse.

Fran. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since they have left their viands behind; for we have Will't please you taste of what is here? [stomachs —

Alon. Not I. [boys.

[Exit.]

Gu. Faith, sir, you need not fear: When we were
Who would believe that there were mountaineers, Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at them
Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men, Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we Each putter out on five for one, will bring us [find,
Great warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed,
Although my last: no matter, since I feel,
The best is past:—Brother, my lord the duke,
Stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table, and with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny
(That hath to instrument this lower world,
And what is in't,) the never-surfetted sea
Hath caused to be hel'd; and on this island
Where man doth not inhabit! you 'mongst men
Being most unfit to live,
I have made you mad: [Seeing Alon. Sen. Se. draw their swords.
And even with such like valour, man hang and drown
Their proper selves. You fools! I and my fellows
Are ministers of fate; the elements,
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the fowl winds, or with bemock'd at stabs
Kill the still-clasping sea, as diminish
One doule that's in my plume: my fellow ministers
Are like invulnerable: if you could hurt,
Your swords are now too massey for your strengths,
And will not be uplifted: But, remember,
(For that's my business to you,) that you three
From Milan did supplant good Prospero;
Expos'd unto the sea, which hath repay'd it,
Him, and his innocent child: for which foul deed
The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Inced'd the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures,
Against your peace: Thee, of thy son, Alonso,
They have bereft; and do pronounce by me,
Ling'rend perdition (worse than any death
Can be at once) shall step by step attend
You, and your ways; whose wrath's to guard you from (Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls Upon your heads,) is nothing, but heart's sorrow,
And a clear life ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder: then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance with mops and mowers, and carry out the table.

Pro. [aside.] Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou
Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring:
Of my instruction hast thou nothing bated,

[In what thou hast to say: so, with good life,
And observation strange, my meaner ministers
Their several kinds have done: my high charms work,
And these, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they now are in my power;
And in these fits I leave them, whilst I visit
Young Ferdinand, (whom they suppose is drown'd,) and His and my loved darling.

[Exit Prospero from above.

Gu. I the name of something holy, sir, why stand
In this strange state this night? [you

Alon. O, it is monstrous! monstrous! Methought, the bells spoke, and told me of it;
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounce'd
The name of Prosper; it did lass my trespass.
Therefore my son I the o'er is bedded; and I'll seek him deeper than ever plummet sounded,
And with him there he muddied. [Exit. Seb.

But one need at a time,
I'll fight their legions o'er.

Ant. I'll be thy second. [Execut. Sen. and Ant.

Gu. All three of them are desperate; their great Like poison given to work a great time after,
[guilt,
Now 'gins to take the, now to beseach you
That are of suppliants, follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to.

Atr. Follow, I pray you. [Execut.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too austerity punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends; for I
Have given you here a thread of mine own life.
Or that for which I live; whom once again
I tender to thy hand: all thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou
Hast strangely stood the test: here, afore Heaven,
I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand,
Do not smile at me, that I boast her off.
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
And make it faint behind her.

Fer. I do believe it,
Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchase'd, take my daughter: But
If thou dost break her virgin knot before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy rite be minister'd,
No sweet aspersions shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow: but barren hate,
Sour-cly disdain, and discord, shall bestrew
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it both: therefore take heed,
As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope
For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With such love as 'tis now: the markiest den,
The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion
Our worser Genius can, shall never melt
Mine honour into lust; to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Phoebus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below.

Pro. [aside.] Fairly spoke:
Sit then, and talk with her, she is thine own.—
What, Ariel! my industrious servant Ariel!
Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am. Pro. Thon and thy messenger follow your last service Did worthily perform; and I must use you In such another trick: go, bring the rabble, O'er whom I give thee power, here, to this place: Invite them to quick motion; for I must Borrow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art; it is my promise, And they expect it from me. Pro. Presently? Ari. Present. Pro. Aye, with a twink. Ari. Before you can say, Come, and go, And breathe twice; and cry, see, see; Each one, tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop and move: Do you love me, master? no. Pro. Dearly, my delicate Ariel: Do not approach, Till then dost hear me call.

Ari. Well I conceive. [Exit. Pro. Look, then be true: do not give dalliance Too much the reins: the strongest oaths are straw To the power of the blood: be more abstinent, Or else, good night, your vow! Fer. I warrant you, sir, The white cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the armour of my liver. Pro. Well.— Now come, my Ariel: bring a corollary, Rather than want a spirit: appear, and partly— No tongue; all eyes; be silent. [Soft music. A Masque. Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich lease Of wheat, rye, barley, vetcheats, oats, and pease; Thy tory mountains, where live nibbling sheep, And flat meads thatch'd with stover, thine to keep; Thy banks with peonied and lilled brims, With spongy April at thy best betrims, [groves, To make cold nymphs chaste crowns; and thy broom Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves, Being lass-born; thy pole-clivey vineyard; And thy sea-margin, stirl, and rocky-hard, Where thou thyself dost mount: This heaven o' the sky, Whose watery arch, and messenger am I, Bids thee leave these; and with her sovereign grace, Here on this grass-plot, in this very place, To come and sport: her peacocks fly again; Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Cer. Hail many-colour'd messenger, that o'er Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter; Who, with thy saffron wings, upon my flowers Diffusest honey-drops, refreshing showers; And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down, Rich scar'd to my proud earth! Way hath thy queen Summon'd me better, to this short grass-gren'd! Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate; And some donation freely to estate On the bless'd lovers. Cer. Tell me, heavenly bow, If Venus, or her son, as thou dost know, Do now attend the queen? since they did plot The means, that dusky Dis my daughter got, Her and her blind boy's ascendant company I have forsworn. Iris. Of her society Be not afraid; I met her deity Cutting the clouds towards Paphos; and her son Dove-drawn with her: here thought thou to have done Some wants charm upon this man and maid, Whose vows are that no bed shall be paid Till Hyamn's torch be lighted: but in vain; Mars's hot minioa is return'd again; Her waspish-head'd son has broke his arrows, Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrings, And be a boy right out. Cer. Highest queen of state, Great Juno comes: I know her by her gait. Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me, To bless this twain, that they may prosperous be And honour'd in their issue.

SONG.

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing, Long continue, and increasing, Hourly lours be still upon you! Juno sings her blessings on you. Cer. Earth's increase, and joilliant plenty, Bars and garners never empty; Vine, with clusters growing! Plants, with goodly burden bowing! Spring come to you, at the farthest, In the very end of harvest! Scarity and want shall shun you; Ceres' blessing so is on you. Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly: May I be bold To think these spirits? Pro. Spirits, which by mine art I have from their confines called to enact My presentancies. Fer. Let me live here ever; So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife, Make this place Paradise. [Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment. Pro. Sweet now, silence; Juno and Ceres whisper seriously; There's something else to do: hush, and be mute, Or else our spell is mar'd. [brooks, Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wand'ring With your sedg'd crowns, and even harmless looks, Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land Answer your summons: Juno does command; Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate A contract of true love; be not too late. Enter certain Nymphs. You sun-burn'd sicklemen, of August weary, Come hither from the farrow, and be merry; Make holy-day: your rye straw hats put on, And these fresh nympha encounter every one In country footing. Enter certain Reapers, properly habited; they join With the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish. Pro. [aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates, Against my life; the minute of their plot Is almost come.—[To the Spirits.] Well done;— avoid;—no more. Fer. This is most strange: your father's in some That works him strongly. [passion Mira. Never till this day, Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd. Pro. You do look, my son, in a mad's sort As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir;
Our revels now are ended: these our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp’d towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind: We are such stuff
As dreams are made of, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.—Sir, I am vex’d;
I bear with my weakness: my old brain is troubled.
I do not distrust with my intimacy:
If you be pleas’d, retire into my cell,
And there reposè; a turn or two I’ll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Fer. Mira. We wish your peace. [Exeunt.]

Pro. Come with a thought:—I thank you—
Ariel, come.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I leave to: What’s thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit,
We must prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ari. Ay, by my command; when I presented Ceres,
I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear’d,
Lest I might anger thee.

Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinks
To full of valour, that they smote the air [log
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Towards their project: Then I beat my tailor,
At which, like unack’d colts, they prick’d their ears.
Advance’d their eye-lids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt music; so I charm’d their ears.
That, calf-like, they my following, through Tooth’d driers, sharp furzes, prickling goss, and thorns.
Which enter’d their trail skins: at last I left them
I’ll the filthy mantled pool beyond your cell.
There dancing up to the chins, that the foul lake
O’turst their feet.

Pro. This was well done, my bird;
Thy shape invisible retain thou still;
The trumpery in my house, go, bring it hither,
For state to catch these thieves.

Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.]

Pro. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains,
Humanly taken, all, all lost, quite lost:
And as, with age, his body uglier grows,
So his mind cakens: I will plague them all,
Re-enter Ariel, loaded with glittering apparel, &c.
Even to roaring:—Come, hang them on this line.

Prospero and Ariel remain invisible. Enter Calilan, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole may Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell. [act
Ste. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss; at which my nose is in great indignation.

Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you; look you,—

Trin. Thou wert but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my lord, give me thy favour still:
the patient, for the price I’ll bring thee to Shall hold wink this mischance: therefore speak
All his hush’d as midnight yet. [softly.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,—

Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That’s more to me than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o’er ears for my labour.

Cal. Prythee, my king, be quiet: Seest thou here,
This is the mouth o’ the cell: no noise, and enter.
Do that good mischief, which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban.
For ay a thy foot licking.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy
Stephano! look, what a wardrobe here is for thee!

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool; it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster; we know what belongs to a frippery:—O king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo; by this hand,
I’ll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it. [mean.

Cal. The droppy drown this fool! what do you
To doth thus on such luggage? Let’s along,
And do the murder first: if he awake;
From toe to crown he’ll fill our skins with pinches;
Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster,—Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now this is the jerkin under the line:
now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.

Trin. Do, do: We steal by line and level, an’t like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for this jest: here’s a garment for’t: wit shall not go unrewarded, while I am king of this country: Steal by line and level, is an excellent pass of pate; there’s another garment for’t.

Trin. Monster, come, some time line upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on’t: we shall lose our time,
And all be turn’d to barnacles, or to apes
With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay-to your fingers; help to bear this away, where my hoghead of wine is, and I’ll turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

A voice of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of hounds, and hunt them about. [Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver! [hark!

Pro. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark!

[Cal. Ste. and Trin. are driven out.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps; and more pinch-spotted make
Than paid, or cat o’ mountain.

Ari. Hark, they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly: At this hour
Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou
Shalt have the air of freedom: for a little,
Follow, and do me service. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes; and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head:
My charms crack not; my spirits obey; and time
TEMPEST.

Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day? Aria. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord, You said our work should cease.

Pro. Indeed it is so.

When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit, How fares the king and his?

Aria. Confid'mt together
In the same fashion as you gave the charge; Just as you left them, sir, all prisoners
In the towering phaen which weather-fends your cell; They cannot budge, till your release. The king, His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted;
And the remainder mourning over them, Brim-ful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly Him you term'd, sir. The good old Gonzalo;
His tears ran down his beard, like winter's drops From eaves and cornicks; their charm so strongly works That they now beheld them, your affections; them
Would become tender.

Pro. Dest thou think so, spirit?

Aria. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pro. Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling Of their afflictions? and shall not myself, Once their kind, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindlier mov'd than thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the Yet, with my nobler reason 'gainst my fury, would, Do I take part: the rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance: they being pentient, The sole drift of my purpose doth extend Not from a gentle parent, but a th'infant:
Go, release them, Aria; My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore, And they shall be themselves.

Aria. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.

Pro. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and ye, that on the sands with printless foot, [groves; Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him, When he comes back; ye demi-puppets, that By moon-shine do the green-sour ringlets make, Whereof the eves not bites; and you, whose pastime Is to make midnight-mushrooms; that rejoice To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid Weak masters though ye be, I have been bidd'n The noon-tide sun, curl'd with the matin winds, And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault Of the broad war: to the dread rattling thunder Have I given fire, and ripted Jove's stout oak With his own bolt: the strong bar'd promontory I have made shake; and by the spurs pluck'd up The pine and cedar: graves, at my command, Have waked their sleepers, oped, and let them forth By my so powerful magic
I have abjur'd: and, when I have requir'd
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do,) To work mine end upon their senses, that This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff, Bury it certain fathom in the earth, And, deeper than did ever plummet sound, I'll drown my book. [Solemn music.

Re-enter Ariel: after him, Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.

A solemn air, and the best comforter To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains, Now useless, boil'd within thy skull! There stand, For you are spell stopp'd.—

Holy Gonzalo, honourable man

Mine eyes, even sociable to the shew of thine, Fall fellow drops.—The charm dissolves apiece; And as the morning shalts upon the night, Melting the darkness, so their rising sensens
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mandate Their clearer reason. —O my good Gonzalo, My true preserver, and a loyal sir
To him thou follow'st; I will pay thy graces Home, both in word and deed. —Most cruelly Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter? Thy brother was a wrothier in the act: — [blood, Thou'rt pinch'd for't now, Sebastian. —Flesh and
You brother, mine, that entertain'd ambition, Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian, (Which would have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee, Unnatural though thou art!—Their understanding Begins to swell; and the approaching tide Will shortly fill the reasonable shores, Ariel enter'st, singing, and helps to attire PROSPERO.

Aria. Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
Through the green-persimmon, do I fly,
When the swift morn, or ere the sun do rise,
After summer, merriest,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough,

Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee; But yet thou shalt have freedom: so, so, so.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
Under the hatchets; the master, and the boatswain,
Being awake, enforce them to this place;
And presently, I pray thee,
The king, And make I drink the air before me, and return Or ever your pulse twice beat.

Aria. Behold, sir king, The wronged Duke of Milan, Prospero:
For more assurance that a living prince Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Pros. Where's he that beest he, or no; Or some enchanted sprite to abuse me,
As late I have been, I know not: 'tis pulse
Beats, as of flesh and blood; and, and, and, since saw thee,
The affliction of my mind admits, with which, I fear, a madness held me: this must crave (And if this be all at a) most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign; and do entreat
Prospero
Thou pardon me my wrongs:—but how should I
Be living, and be here?

Aria. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age; whose honour cannot
Be measur'd, or confin'd.

Pros. Whether this be,
Or be not, I'll not swear. —

Pros. Do you yet taste
Some of the substances' o' the isle, that will not let you
Preve things certain:—Welcome, my friends all!—
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,

[Aside to Sen. and Aria.]}
ACT V.--SCENE I.

here could pluck his highness' brow upon you, and justify you traitors; at this time I'll tell no tales.

Seb. The devil speaks in him.

No:—
or you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother

Prospero. Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive thy rankest fault; all of them, and require thy dukedom of thee, which, perchance, I know, you must restore.

If thou bested Prospero, give us particulars of thy preservation: now thou hast met us here, who three hours since were wreck'd upon this shore; where I have lost, now sharp the point of this remembrance is! I fear so, sir Ferdinand.

Pro. I am woeful, sir.

Alon. Irreparable is the loss; and patience says it past her cure.

Pro. I rather think, on have not sought her help; of whose soft grace or the like love, I have her sovereign aid, and rest myself content.

Alon. You the like loss?

Pro. As great to me, as late; and, supportable to make the dear loss, have I means much weaker than you may call to comfort you; for I have lost my daughter.

Alon. A daughter? heavens! that they were living both in Naples, he king and queen there! that they were, I wish myself were muddied in that oozy bed! where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords t't encounter do so much admire, that they devour their reason; and scarce think their eyes do offices of truth, their words re natural breath: but, howsoever you have con justiced from your senses, know for certain, that I am Prospero, and that very duke which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely pon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed, o be the lord on't. No more yet of this; or 'tis a chronicle of day by day, not a relation for a breakfast, nor setting this fine scene. Welcome, sir; this cell's my court: here have I few attendants, and subjects none abroad: pray you, look in, my dukedom since you have given me again, will requite you with as good a thing; at least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye, as much as me my dukedom.

The entrance of the Cell opens, and discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.

Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false, sir.

Fer. No, my dearest love, you would not for the world.

Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should and I would call it fair play.

Pro. If this prove a vision of the island, one dear son hall I twice lose.

Seb. A most high miracle! Fer. Though the seas threaten they are merciful: have curs'd them without cause.

Fer. I kneels to Alon.

Alon. Now all the blessings Of a glad father compass thee about! Arise, and say how thou canst here.

Mira. O! wonder! How many goodly creatures are there here!

How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world, That has such people in't!

Pro. 'Tis new to thee. [play? wid]

Alon. What is this maids, with whom thou wast at your eld'acquaintance cannot be three hours: Is she the goddess that hath sved'us, And brought us thus together?

Fer. Sir, she's mortal; But, by immortal providence, she's mine; I chose her when I could not ask my father For his advice: nor thought I had one: she Is daughter to this famous Duke of Mila, Of whom so often I have heard renown, But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers: But O, how oddly will it sound, that I Must ask my child forgiveness!

Pro. There, sir,'stop; Let us not burden our remembrances With a heaviness that's gone.

Con. O, I have inly wept, Sir, or should have spoke e'er this. Look now, ye gods, And on this couple drop a blessed crown; For it is you, that have chalk'd forth the way Which brought us hither!

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo! Gonz. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue Should become kings of Naples? O, rejoice Beyond a common joy; and set it down With gold on lasting pillars: in one voyage Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis; And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife, Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom, In a poor isle; and all of us, ourselves, When no man was his own.

Alon. Give me your hands: [To Fer. and Min. Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart, That doth not wish you joy!

Gon. Do'st not! Amen! Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazedly following. O look, sir, look, sir; here are more of us! I prophesied, if a gallow's were on land, This fellow could not deserve to drop: Welcome, sir; this cell's my court: here have I few attendants, and subjects none abroad: pray you, look in, my dukedom since you have given me again, will requite you with as good a thing; at least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye, as much as me my dukedom.

Ari. Sir, all this service Have I done since I went.

Gonz. My tricksy spirit!

Pro. These are not natural events; they strengthen, From strange to stranger:—Say, how came you hither? Ari. If I did think, sir, I were well awake, I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep, And (how, we know not) all clapp'd under hatches, Where, but even now, with strange and several noises Of roaring, shrieking, howling, gingling chains, And more diversity of sounds, all horrible, We were awak'd; straightway, at liberty: Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld Our royal, good, and gallant ship: our master Capering to eye her: On a trice, so please you, Even in a dream, were we divided from them, And were brought moping hither.

Ari. Was't well done?

Fer. Sir, all this service Have I done since I went.

Pro. Bravely, my diligence. Thou shalt be Tempest.

Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod: And there is in this business more than nature Was ever hap'ned of: some oracle Must rectify our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my liege, Do not infest your mind with beating on The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure, Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you (Which to you shall be a painless grief), of every That happens henceforth; till when, be cheerful, And think of each thing well.—Come hither, spirit;

[Aside.

Set Caliban and his companions free: [cioussir? Unte the spell, [Exit Ariel]. How fares my gra-
There are yet missing of your company.

Some few odd lads that you remember not.

Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, in their stolen Apparel.

Stee. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune: Coragio, bully-monster, Coragio!

Trin. If these be true spics which I wear in my head, they'll weigh the best ague.

Cal. O Schedos, these be brave spirits, indeed! How fine my master is! I am afraid He will chastise me.

Seb. Ha, ha.

What things are these, my lord Antonio? Will money buy them?

Aron. Very likely; one of them Is a plain hand, and, no doubt, marketable.

Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords, Then say, if they be true: This mis-shapen knave,— His mother was a witch; and one so strong That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs, And devil in her command, without her power: These three have robbed me; and this devil (For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them To take my life: two of these fellows you Must know and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledge mine.

Cal. I shall be pitch'd to death.

Aron. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Seb. He is drunk now: where had he the wine?

Epilogue.

Now my charms are all o'errawen, And what strength I have 's mine own And which is most fairest? No, true, I must be here conf'red by you, Or sent to Naples: Let me not, Since I have my dukedom got, And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell In this bare island, by your spell; But release me from my bands, With the help of your good hands.

Aron. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: Where should Find this grand liquor that hath gild'd them? — [they Then have his pick's one then.

Trin. I have been in such a pickle since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly blowing.

Seb. Why, how now, Stephano? [cramp. Ste. 0, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a Pro. You'd be king of the isle, sirrah? Seb. As I should have be pick's one then.

Aron. This is as strange a thing as e'er I look'd on; [Footing to Caliban. Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners, As in his shape: — Go, sirrah, to my cell; Take with you your companions; as you look To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter, And seek for grace: What a thrice-double ass Was I, to take this drunkard for a god, And worship this dull fool?

Pro. Go to; away! [Found it.

Aron. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you Seb. Orstole it, rather. [Exit Cal. Seb. and Trin. The ship's company have been a sore occasion to my poor cell: where you shall take your rest For this one night; which (part of it) I'll waste With such discourse, as, I not doubt, shall make it Go quick away: the story of my life, And the particular accidents, gone by, Since I came to this isle: And in the mean time, I'll sing you to our ship, and so to Naples, Where I have hope to see the nuptial Of these our dear-beloved solomini'd; And thence reit me to my Nilan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Aron. I long To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I'll deliver all; And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales, And sail so expeditious, that shall catch Your royal fleet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,— That is thy charge; then to the elements Be free, and fare thou well:—[Aside. Please you draw near.

By Prospero.

Gentle breath of yours my sails Must fill, or else my project fails, Which was to please: Now I want Spirits to enforce, art to enchant; And my ending is despair, Unless I reliev'd by prayer, Which pierces so, that it assaults Mercy itself, and frees all faults, As you from crimes would pardon'd be. Let your indulgence set me free.

It is observed of The Tempest, that its plan is regular; this the author of The Italian Vagabonds, what I think to be, an accidental effect of the story, not intended or reckoned by our author. But, whatever may be Shakespeare's intention in forming or adapting this part, it never fails to make the production of many characters, diversified with boundless invention, and preserved with profound skill in nature, extended knowledge of opinions, and accurate observation of life. In a single drama are here exhibited princes, courtiers, and soldiers, all speaking in their real characters. There is the infancy of princes, and of an earthly godkin. The operations of magic, the terrors of a tempest; the wildness of the desert island, the native sullenness of uncultivated affection, the punishment of guilt, and the final happy issue of all things: here our passions and reason are equally interested. — Johnson.

The unity of time is strictly observed in this play. The tale scarcely takes up a greater portion of hours than are employed in the representation: and from the very particular care which our author takes to point out this circumstance in so many pass- sages, it should seem that it was not accidental; but designed to show the quickness of the time, that he too could write a play within the strictest laws of regularity, when he chose to load himself with the critic's fetters. — Alonso says, "If thou bested Prospero, Give us particulars of thy preservation; How thou hast met us here, who three hours since/ And since, how's the ship?" — Prospero answers, "Which but three glasses, sir;" — Sev. At the beginning of the fifth act the duration of the time employed on the stage is particularly ascertained; "You three hours since," — Prospero. "What! How's the ship?" — Sev. "Ari. On the sixth hour." — And they again refer to a passage in the first act: "Pros. How's the ship by the clock of the day?" — Ari. "Ari. Pass me the madmuset, and return two glasses." — Stive. It has further added to the above observation of Steevens, that the manner of acting and play are as exactly observed as the unity of time. — In this play, says Dr. Watson. Adventures in the Island, the conduct of the characters is one of the things that has been most admired by all who have examined the story of Prospero's to his dukedom; this business is trans- acted in the compass of a small island, and in or near the cave of Prospero."
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

There was no edition of this play, till that of the year 1623; but it has been printed much earlier, and it is mentioned in his Visits Dictionary, which was published in 1608. Mr. Malone considers this play as Shakespeare's first production. The internal evidence is insipid such a supposition, and has neither the beauties or the faults—the exuberance or the Jonsonian geniality of the language, nor the considerable parts of a rich and original genius—the general tone of the comedy, occasionally relieved by passages of much force and sweetness, is that of smooth, elegant, dull melody. It is repeated in entirely different manners by H Donne and Shadman, the latter of whom, I some delightful lines scattered here and there in the seri- ous scenes of the play, are so perfectly in the manner of Shak- espeare, as to convince the reader that it had undergone his own revision and improvement. I cannot help thinking it impossible that our great Dramatist could have been the author of the 76, in which the characters are so entirely devoid of individuality, the dialogue so elaborately heavy, so smoothly tame, so little varied with the changes of situation. Dr. John- son thinks differently, and says, "When I read this play I cannot but think that I find, both in the serious and ludicrous scenes, the language and sentiments of Shakespeare. It is not, indeed, one of his most powerful effusions; it has neither any diversities of character, nor striking delineations of life; but it abounds in yonions beyond most of his plays, and few have more' lines or passages, which, through tenderness, are caul- nendly beautiful. I am yet inclined to believe that it was not very successful, and suspect that it has escaped corruption, only because, being seldom played, it was less exposed to the hazards of transcription."

The story of Proteus and Julia has been resuscitated in a story in the Diana of Teviot, and Montpensier, which, according to Mrs. Lennox, was translated in Shakespeare's time. The incident of Valentine's joining the robbers is also supposed to have taken from the Arcadia of Sir Philip Sidney, book 1, chaps. 6 where Pyro-losed contents to lead the lads. Both these adventures are common in tale and history, and are not already prepared to the author's hand; but have been invented without any great stretch of invention.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

ACT I.

SENE. — An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus; one-keeping youth have ever homely vits; aren't not, affection chains thy tender days till the sweet glance of thy honour'd love, father would outstak thy company, to see the wonders of the world abroad, an living dully sluggardiz'd at home, rear out thy youth with shapless idleness, yet, since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein, en as I would, when I to love begin. Proteus. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu! ink on thy Proteus, when thou, haply, seest some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: wish me partaker in thy happiness, when thou dost meet good hap: and, in thy danger, ever danger do environ thee, commend thy grievance to my holy prayers, I will be thy head's-man, Valentine. Proteus. And on a love book pray for my success. Valentine. That's a poor shallow story of deep love, now young Leander cross'd the Hellespont. Proteus. That's a deep story of a deeper love; he was more over shoes in love of.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Pro. But now he parted hence, to embark for Milan.
Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipped already; and I have play'd the sheep, in losing him.
Pro. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray, and if the shepherd be awhile away.
Speed. You conclude that my master is a shepherd.
Pro. I do; and, I a sheep?
Speed. Why then my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.
Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.
Speed. This proves me still a sheep.
Pro. True; and thy master a shepherd.
Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.
Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.
Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.
Pro. The shepherd for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep; though for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep.
Speed. Such another proof will make me cry baas.
Pro. But dost thou hear? guat's thy thought to Juliana.
Speed. Ay, sir; I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour!
Pro. Here's too small a pasture for such a store of muttons.
Speed. If the ground be overcharged, you were best stick her.
Pro. Nay, in that you are astray; 'twere best round you.
Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.
Pro. You mistake; I mean the pound, a pinfold.
Speed. From a pound to a pin! fold it ever and over, this threefold too little for carrying a letter to your master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.

Speed. 1.

Pro. Nod, 1; why, that's noddy.
Speed. You mistook, sir; I say, she did nod: and you ask me, if she did nod; and I say, 1.
Pro. And that set together is noddy.
Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.
Pro. No, no, you shall have it for having the letter.
Speed. Well, I perceive, I must be fain to bear with you. Why, sir, how do you bear with me? you, Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly; having rested the word, noddy, for my pains.
Pro. Beshrew me, but you have a quick wit.
Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.
Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brief: What said she?
Speed. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter, may be both at once delivered.
Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains: What said she?
Speed. Truly, sir, I think you'll hardly win her.
Pro. Why? Could'th thou perceive so much from her?
Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her; no, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter; And being so hard to me that brought your mind to fear, she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Give her no token but stones; for she's as hard as steel.
Pro. What, said she nothing?
Speed. No, not so much as—take this for thy pains.
To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have teste'd me in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letter yourself: and so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.
Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck; Which cannot perish, having thee aboard,
Being destined to a drier death on shore — I must go send some better messenger; I fear, my Julia would not deign my lines,
Receiving them from such a worthless post.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Garden of Julia's House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone, What didst thou see, because I fall to love in love?
Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheedfully.
Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen, That every day with parte encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthiest love?
Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll shew my According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. But say the thought of the — Sir Egremont?
Luc. As a knight well-spoken, neat and fine; But, were I you, he, should never be mine.
Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?
Luc. Well, of his wealth; but of himself, so, so.
Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?
Luc. Lord, lord! to see what folly reigns in us!
Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?
Luc. Pardon, dear madam; 'tis a passing shame, That I, unworthy body as I am, Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.
Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?
Luc. Then thus,—of many good I think him best.
Jul. Your reason?
Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason; I think him so, because I think him so.
Jul. And would'st thou have me cast my love on him?
Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.
Jul. Whv, he of all the rest hath never mov'd me.
Luc. Yet he of all the rest, I think, best loves ye. Jul. His little speaking shews his love but small.
Luc. Fire, that is closest kept, burns most of all.
Jul. pray, do not love, that do not shew their love.
Luc. O, they love least, that let men know their love.
Jul. I would, I knew his mind.
Luc. To perseue this paper, madam.
Jul. To Julia;—Say, from whom?
Luc. That the contents will shew.
Jul. Say, say; who gave it thee? Proteus: Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from He would have given it you, but, I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it; pardon the fault, I pray.
Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker! Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines? To whisper and conspire against my youth? Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth, And you an officer fit for the place.
Luc. You take the paper, see it be return'd:
Or else return no more into my sight.
Jul. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate
Jul. Will you be gone?
Luc. [aside.] That you may ruminate. [Exit.
Jul. And yet, I would, I had o'erlook'd the letter. It were a shame to call her back again, To pray her to a favour for their child her. What fool is she, that knows I am a maid, And would not force the letter to my view? Since maids, in modesty, say No, to that Which they would have the profferer construe, Ay, Fie, fie! how wayward is the foolish love,
ACT I.—SCENE III.

Luc. What would your ladyship be?

Jul. Is it near dinner time?

Luc. I would it were; that you might kill your stomach on your meat, and not upon your maid.

Jul. What's it you took up o' gingerly?

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stoop then?

Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall.

Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns, unless it have a false interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune: give me a note; your ladyship can set.

Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible: best sing it to the tune of L'isile de L'Amant.

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

Jul. Heavy? belike, it hath some burden then.

Luc. Ay; and melodious it was, would you sing it.

Jul. And why not you?

Luc. I cannot reach so high.

Jul. Let's see your song:—How now, minion?

Luc. Keep tune there still, so will you sing it out;

Jul. And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.

Jul. You do not?

Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp.

Jul. You, minion, are too saucy.

Luc. Nay, now you are too flat, and mar the concord with too harsh a descent: here's war受th such a mean to fill your song.

Jul. The mean is drown'd with your unruly base.

Luc. Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus.

Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.

Luc. Here is a coil with protestation,—[Tears the letter.]

Jul. To get you gone; and let the papers lie:

Luc. You would be fingering them, to anger me.

Jul. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleas'd.

Jul. To be so angry'd with another letter.

Luc. Nay, would I were so anger'd with the same!

Jul. Hateful hands, to tear such loving words! Injurious wasps! to feed on such sweet honey, and kill the bees, that yield it, with your stings! 'Tis kiss each several paper for amends.

Luc. And, here is writ—kind Julia:—'Ask'd Julia! in revenge of thy ingratitude, throw thy name against the bruising stones, ramping contemptuously on thy disdain.

Jul. Here, here is writ—devounded Proteus:—

Luc. Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed, shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd; and thus I search it with a sovereign heart.

Jul. But twice, or thrice, was Proteus written down:

Luc. Calm, good wind, blow not a word away;

Jul. I'll have found each letter in the letter.

Except mine own name; that some whirlwind bear down a ragged, fearful, hanging rock

And throw it thence into the raging sea!

Jul. Here, in one line is his name twice writ,—

Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus,

To the sweet Julia:—that I'll tear away;

And yet I will, still so prettily

He couples it to his complaining names;

Thus will I fold them one upon another;

Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam, dinner's ready, and your father stays.

Jul. Well, let us go.

Luc. What shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?

Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.

Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:

Jul. Yet here they shall not lie, nor be thrown cold.

Jul. I see you have a month's mind to them.

Luc. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;

Jul. I see things too, although you judge I wink.

SCENE III.—The same. A room in Antonio's House.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that,

Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?

Pan. 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.

Ant. Why, what of him?

Pan. He wond'rd, that your lordship

Would suffer him to spend his youth at home;

While other men, of slender reputation,

Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:

Some, to the wars, to try their fortune there;

Some, to discover islands far away;

Some, to the studious universities.

For any, or for all these exercises,

He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet:

And did request me, to implore you,

To let him spend his time no more at home,

Which would be great impeachment to his age,

In having known no travel in his youth.

Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that Whereon this month I have been hammering.

I have considered well his loss of time;

And how he cannot be a perfect man,

Not being try'd, and teter'd in the world:

Experience is by industry achiev'd,

And perfected by the swift course of time:

Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him?

Pant. I think, your lordship is not ignorant,

How his companion, youthful Valentine,

Attends the emperor in his royal court.

Ant. I know it well.

Pan. 'Twere good, I think, your lordship sent him

There shall be practise tilts and tournaments,

Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen;

And be in eye of every exercise,

Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advis'd:

And, that thou mayst perceive how well I like it,

The execution of it shall make known;

Even with the quickest execution

I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.

Pan. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,

With other gentlemen of good esteem,

Are journeying to salute the emperor,

And to commend their service to his will.

Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go:

And, in good time,—how will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!

Here is her hand, the agent of her heart!
ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Val. Sir, your glove.

Speed. Not mine; my gloves are on.

Val. Why then this may be yours, for this is but

Val. Ha! let me see: ay, give it me, it’s mine: —

Sweet ornament that deck’s a thing divine!

Ah Silvia! Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! madam Silvia!

Val. How now, sirrah?

Speed. She is not within hearing, sir.

Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?

Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.

Val. Well, you’ll still be too forward.

Speed. And yet I was last childen for being too slow.

Val. Go to, sir; tell me, do you know madam Silvia?

Speed. She that your worship loves?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Speed. Marry, by these special marks: First, you have learned, like sir Proteus, to wreak your arms like a male-content; to relish a love-song, like a Robin-red-breast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school boy that had lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbery; to speak putting, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cock; when you walked, to walk like one of the lions; when you fasted, it was presently after dinner; when you looked sadly, it was for want of money: and now you are metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceived in me?

Speed. They are all perceived without you.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Speed. Without you! nay, that’s certain, for, without you were so simple, none else would: but you are grown so spruce, sir; that all these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an unrivalled; that not an eye, that sees you, but is a physician to comment on your malady.

Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?

Speed. She, that you gaze on so, as she sits at Speed. Hast thou observed that? even she I mean.

Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.

Val. Dost thou know her by your gazing on her, and yet knowest her not?

Speed. Is she not hard favoured, sir?

Val. Not so fair, boy, as well favoured.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?

Speed. That she is not so fair, as (of you) well favoured.

Val. I mean, that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.

Speed. That’s because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

Val. How painted! and how out of count?

Speed. To say, he painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val. How esteemeest thou me? I account of her beauty,

Speed. You never saw her since she was deformed.

Val. How long hath she been deformed?

Speed. Ever since you loved her.

Val. I have loved her ever since I saw her; and still I see her beautiful.

Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.

Val. Why?

Speed. Because love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have, when you chid at sir Proteus for going unmetteth!

Val. What should I see then?

Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity: for he, being in love, could not see to garner his hose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

Speed. True, sir; I was in love with thee: I thank you, you swung me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I would you were set; so, your affection would cease.
ACT II.—SCENE III.

Val. Last night she enjoined me to write some lines to one she loves.

Speed. And have you?

Val. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them;—Peace, here she comes.

Enter Silvia.

Speed. O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! now will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good-morrows.

Speed. O, 'giv you good even! here's a million of manners. [Aside.

Sil. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.

Speed. He should give her interest, and she gives it him.

Val. As you enjoined me, I have writ your letter, Unto the secret, best friend of yours;

Which I was much unwilling to proceed in,

But for my duty to your ladyship. [done.

Sil. I thank you, gentle servant: 'tis very clerkly

Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off;

For, being ignorant to whom it goes,

I writ at random, very doubtfully. [pains?

Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much

Val. No, madam; so it steady you, I will write,

Please you command, a thousand times as much;

And yet,—

Sil. A pretty period! Well, I guess the sequel;

And yet I will not name it:—and yet I care not;

And yet take this again;—and yet I thank you;

Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Speed. And yet you will; and yet another yet.

[Aside.

Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like

Sil. Yes, yes; the lines are very quaintly writ: [it?

But since unwillingly, take them again;

Nay, take them.

Val. Madam, they are for you.

Sil. Ay, ay, you writ them, sir, at my request;

But I will none of them; they are for you:

I would have had them writ more movingly.

Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.

Sil. And when it's writ, for my sake read it over;

And if it please you, so: if not, why, so.

Val. If it please me, madam! what then?

Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour.

And so good morrow, servant. [Exit Silvia.

Speed. O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,

As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple!

[suitor.

My master sies to her; and she hath taught her He being her pupil, to become her tutor.

O excellent device! was there ever heard a better? That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?

Val. How now, sir? what are you reasoning with yourself?

Speed. Nay, I was ryming; 'tis you that have the reason.

Val. To do what?

Speed. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.

Val. To whom?

Speed. To yourself: why, she woes you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Speed. By a letter, I should say.

Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?

Speed. What needs she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?

Val. No, believe me.

Speed. No believing you indeed, sir: But did you perceive her earnest?

Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.

Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.

Speed. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there an end.

Val. I would, it were no worse.

Speed. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well:

For often you have writ to her; and she, in modesty, Or else for want of little time, could not again reply; Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover, lover.—

Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her

All this I speak in print, for in print I found it.—

Why musse you, sir! 'tis dinner time.

Val. I have dined.

Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir; though the cameleon

Love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my virtuous, and would fain have meat; O, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.

Jul. I must, where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.

Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.

[Givea ring.

Pro. Why then we'll make exchange; here, take you this.

Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy;

And when that hour o'er-slips me in the day, Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake,

The next ensuing hour some foul mishap,

Torture me for my love's forgetfulness! My father stays my coming; answer not;

The tide is now: nay, not thy tide of tears;

That tide will stay me longer than I should:

Julia, farewell.—What! gone without a word?

Ay, so true love should do; it cannot speak;

For truth hath better deeds, than words, to grace it.

Enter Pantino.

Pun. Sir Proteus, you are paid for.

Pro. Go; I come, I come:—

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Street.

Enter Launce, leading a Dog.

Laun. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault: I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think, Crab my dog be the sourest-natured dog that lives: my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid bowling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear; he is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog: a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my granam having no eyes, look you, wept himself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll shew you the manner of it: This shoe is my father;—no, this left shoe is my D.
father:—no, no, this left shoe is my mother;—nay, that cannot be so mother:—yes, it is so, it is so; it hath the worser sole: This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father: A vengeance on't! There 'tis: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand: this hat is Nan, our maid; I am the dog:—no the dog is himself, and I am the dog,—O, the dog is me, and I am myself; ay, so, so. Now come I to my father; Father, your blessing; now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping; now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on:—now come I to my mother, (O, that she could speak now!) like a wood woman;—well, I kiss her:—why, there 'tis; here's my mother's b-cath up and down; now come I to my sister; mark the moon she makes: now the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter Panthino.

Pan. Lawns, away, away, abroad; thy master is shipped, and thou art to post after with ears. What's the matter? why weep'st thou, man? Away, ass; you will lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Lawn. It is no matter if the ty'd were lost; for it is the unkindest ty'd that ever man ty'd.

Pan. What's the unkindest tide?

Lawn. Why, he that's ty'd here; Crab, my dog.

Pan. I mean thou'lt lose the flood: and, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master, and, in losing thymaster, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service,—Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Lawn. For fear thou should'st lose thy tongue.

Pan. Where should I lose my tongue?

Lawn. In thy tale.

Pan. In thy tail?

Lawn. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service! The tide! Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pan. Come, come away, man; I was sent to call thee.

Lawn. Sir, call me what thou darst.

Pan. Will thou go?

Lawn. Well, I will go.

SCENE IV.

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Sil. Servant—

Val. Mistress?

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it's for love.

Speed. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress then.

Speed. Twere good, you knock'd him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Thu. Seem you that you are not?

Val. Happily I do.

Thu. So do counterfeit.

Val. So do you.

Thu. What seem I, that I am not?

Val. Wise.

Thu. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thu. And how quote you my folly?

Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Thu. My jerkin is a double.

Val. Well, then, I'll double your folly.

Thu. How?

Sil. What, angry, sir Thurio? do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of cameleon.

Thu. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your arm.

Val. You have said, sir.

Thu. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time.

Val. I know it well, sir; you always end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. 'Tis indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

Sil. Who is that, servant!

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire: sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Thu. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall lose my wit and bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, sir: you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers; for it appears by their bare liverys, that they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more; here comes my father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset.

Sir Valentine, your father's in good health: What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news?

Val. My lord, I will be thankful To the happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

Val. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman To be of worth and worthy estimation, And not without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord; a son, that well deserves The honour and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well?

Val. I knew him, as myself; for from our infancy We have convers'd, and spent our hours together: And though myself have been an idle truant, Omitting the sweet benefit of time, To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection Yet hath sir Proteus, for that's his name, Made use and fair advantage of his days; His years but young, but his experience old; His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe; And, in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow,) He is complete in feature, and in mind, With all good grace to grace a gentleman. Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but, if he makes this good, He is as worthy for an empress' love, As meet to be an emperor's counsellor. Well, sir; this gentleman is come to me, With commendation from great potentates; And here he means to spend his time a-while: I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you. Val. Duke. For Valentine, I need not cite him to it: I'll send him hither to you presently. [Exit Duke.

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship, Had come along with me, but that his mistress Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal locks.
Sil. Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them
Upon some other pawn for fealty.

Val. Nay, sure, I think she holds them prisoners still.

Sil. Nay, then he should be blind; and being
How could he see his way to seek out you? [blind
Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes.

Thu. They say, that love hath not an eye at all.
Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself;
Upon a homely object love can wink.

Enter Proteus.

Sil. Have done, have done; here comes the gentleman.

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus!—Mistress, I beseech you,
Confirm his welcome with some special favour.

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you oft have wish'd to hear from.

Val. Mistress, it is: sweet lady, entertain him
To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant
To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability—
Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed;
Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. No; that you are worthless.

Enter Servant.

Sir. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you.

Sil. I'll wait upon his pleasure. [Exit Servant.

Come, sir Thurio,
Go with me.—Once more, new servant, welcome: I'll leave you to confer of family affairs;
When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady? and how thrives your love?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now:
I have done penance for contamining love;
Whose high imperious thoughts have pleas'd me
With bitter fasts, with penitential groans,
With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs;
For, in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath cha'is'd sleep from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow.
O, gentle Proteus, love's a mighty lord;
And hath so humbled me, as I confess,
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth!
Now, no discourse, except it be of love;
Nor can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
Upon the very naked of my reason's light.

Pro. Enough: I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises.

Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter, pills;
And I must minster the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,
Yet let her be a principality,
Soveraign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any;

Pro. Except thou wilt except against my love.

Val. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too:
She shall be dignified with this high honour,—
To bear my lady's train; lest the base earth
Should from her venture chance to steal a kiss,
And, of so great a favour growing proud,
Disdain to root the summer-swelling flower,
And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine own,
And I as rich in having as inown.
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.
Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes,
Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone with her along; and I must stay.
For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Val. But she loves you?

Val. Ay, we are betroth'd

Nay, more, our marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our flight,
Determin'd of: how I must climb her window;
The ladder made of cords; and all the means
Plotted; and 'greed on, for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. Go on before; I shall inquire you forth:
I must unto the road, to disembark,
Some necessaries that I needs must use;
And then your servant should attend you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will.—

Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine eye, or Valentine's praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless, to reason thus?
She's fair; and so is Julia, that I love;—
That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd;
Which, like a waxen image gainst a fire,
 Bears no impression of the thing it was,
Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold; And that I love him not, as I was wont: O! but I love his lady too, too much;
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her? 'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld, And that hath dazzled my reason's light,
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. [Exit
SCENE V.—The same. A Street.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan.

Laun. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth; for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never undone, till he be hanged; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say, welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-cap, I'll to the ale-house with you presently; where, for one shot of five-pence, thou shalt find five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?

Laun. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Laun. No.

Speed. How then? shall he marry her?

Laun. No, neither.

Speed. Why, are they broken?

Laun. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Laun. Marry, thus: when it stands well with him; it stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou! I understand thee not.

Laun. What a block art thou, that thou canst not.

My staff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Laun. Ay, and what I do, too: look thee, I'll but lean, and my staff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Laun. Ay, but true; and understand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will'st thou be a match?

Laun. Ask my dog: if he say, ay, it will; if he say, no, it will; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt neverget such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how say'st thou, that my master is become a notable lover?

Laun. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Thaas how?

Laun. A notable hubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why thou whoreson ass, thou mistakest me.

Laun. Why fool, I meant not thee, I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Laun. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt go with me to the ale-house, so; if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale with a Christian: Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn;
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn;
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworn;
And even that power, which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury.

Love bade me swear, and love bids me forswear:

O sweet-suggesting love, if thou hast sin'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.

Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken
And the weak wit, that wants resolve will
To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better,
Fye, fye, unneverend tongue! to call her bad.
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast prefer'd With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths,
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I leave to love, where I should love. Julia I love, and Valentine I love. If I keep them, I needs must lose myself;
If I lose them, thus find I by their loss,
For Valentine, myself: for Julia, Silvia.

I to myself am dearer than a friend:
For love is still more precious in itself:
And Silvia, witness heaven, that made her fair!

Shews Julia but a swarthly Ethiop.
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Rememb'ring that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself,
Without some treachery used to Valentine:—
This night, he meaneth with a corded ladder,
To climb the celestial Silvia's chamber-window;
Myself in counsel, his competitor:
Now presently I'll give her farther notice
Of their disguising, and pretended flight;
Who, all enrag'd, will banish Valentine,
For Tharriio, he intends, shall wed his daughter.
But, Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross.
By means of Proteus, Silvia's warder,
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. Couswel, Lucetta! gentle girl, assist me! And, even in kind love, I do conjure thee,—
With me, at the table whereon all my life Are visibly character'd and engrav'd,—
To lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loved Proteus
Luc. Alas! the way is wearisome and long.

Jul. A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps;
Much less shall she, that hath love's wings, to fly;
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

Jul. O, know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
Is joyous for that food so long a time,
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the borders of reason.
Jul. The more thou dam'st it up, the more it burns;
The current, that with gentle murmurs glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But, when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the casam'ld stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge.
He overthrew in his pilgrimage,
And so by many winding nooks he strays,
With willing sport, to the wild ocean.
ACT III.—SCENE I.

Then let me go, and hinder not my course:
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I'll rest, as after much turmoil,
A blessed soul both in Elysium.
Luc. But in what habit will you go along?
Jul. Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men:
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseeem some well-reputed youth.
Luc. Why then your ladyship must cut your hair.
Jul. No, girl; I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots:
To be fantastic, may become a youth.
Of greater tune than the round courser:
"What compass will you wear your farthingale?"
Luc. Why, even that fashion thou best lik'st, Lucetta.
Luc. You must needs have them with a cod-piece.
Jul. Or nothing, Lucetta! that will be ill-fav'rd:
Luc. A round hose, madam, now's worth not a pin.
Unless you have a cod-piece to stick pins on.
Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have
What thou thinkest meet, and is most mannerly:
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me,
For undertaking so unstaied a journey?
Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of tears,
And instances as infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.
Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.
Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect!
But true stars did govern Proteus' birth:
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts to be trusted;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.
Luc. Pray heaven, he proves so, when you come to him!
Jul. Nay, that I will not.
Luc. Then never dream of infamy, but go.
If Proteus like your journey, when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone:
I fear me, he will scarce be pleasures with.
Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of tears,
And instances as infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave. I pray, awhile;
We have some secrets to confer about. — [Exit Thurio.
Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover,
The law of friendship bids me to conceal:
But, when I call to mind your gracious favours
Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.
Know, worthy prince, sir Valentine, my friend,
This night inteds to steal away your daughter;
Myself am one made privy to the plot.
I know, you have determin'd to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be stolen away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus, for my duty's sake, I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended drift,
Than, by concealing it, heap on your head
A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,
Being unprepared, to your timeless grave.
Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care;
Which to requite, command me while I live.
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply, when they have judged me fast asleep;
And oftentimes have purposed to expel
Sir Valentine her company, and my court:
But, fearing least my jealous aim might err,
And so, unworthily, disgrace the man,
(A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd,) I gave him gentle looks; thereby to find
That which myself hast now disclose'd to me.
And, that thou mayst prove as true a friend
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof myself have ever kept;
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.
Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devise'd a mean
How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a corded ladder fetch her down;
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently;
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
That my discovery be not aimed at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretence.
Duke. Upon mine honour, she shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.
Pro. Adieu, my lord; sir Valentine is coming.

Enter Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?
Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to your friends,
And I am going to deliver them.
Duke. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenor of them doth but signify
My health, and happy being at your court.
Duke. Nay, then no matter; stay with me a while,
I am to break with thee of some affairs,
That touch me near, and wherein I must be secret.
Tis not unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend, sir Thurio, to your daughter.
Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities.
Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter:
Cannot your grace win her to fancy him?
Duke. No, trust me; she is peevish, sullen, forward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing me as if I were her father:
And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her,
And, while I thought the remnant of mine age
Should he here be discharged by a child-like duty,
I now am full resolved to take a wife,
And turn her out to whom will take her in:
Then let her beauty be her wedding-dower;
For me and my possessions she esteems not.

Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady, sir, in Milan, here,
Whom I affect; but she is naive, and coy,
And thoughtly esteemed my aged eloquence:
Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
(For long ago I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is chang'd;)
How, and which way, I may bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Duke. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words, do move a woman's mind.

Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman sometimes scorcs what best contents
Send her another; never give her o'er: [her
For scorn at first makes after-love the more.
If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But only to begot her love in return;
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone;
For why, the fools are mad, if left alone.
Take no repulse, whatever she doth say:
For, get you gone, she doth not mean, away:
Flatter, and praise, commend, extol their graces;
Though n'er so black, say they have angels' faces.
That man shall ever be denied, I say, no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duke. But she, I mean, is promis'd by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of worth;
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock'd, and keys kept
Though no man hath recourse to her by night, [safe.

Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?

Duke. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it
Without apparent hazard of his life.

Val. Why then, a ladder, quaintly made of cords,
To be set up with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hermod's tower,
So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder. [that.

Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me
Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That longs for every thing that he can come by.

Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But, hard thee; I will go to her alone;
How shall I best convey the ladder thus?

Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak, that is of any length.

Duke. A cloak as long as thine will serve the turn.

Val. Ay, my good lord.

Duke. Then let me see thy cloak:
I'll get me one of such another length.

Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.

Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?—
I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me.—
What letter is this same? What's here!—To Silius?
And here an engine fit for my proceeding!
I'll tcet no hold, but by the scal lar force. [Reads.
My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly:
And slaves they are to me, that send me flying;
O, could their master come and go as lightly,
Himself would lodge, where senseless they are lying.
My herald thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them;

While I, their king, that thisher them importune,
Do curb the grace that with such grace hath bless'd them.
Because I would not lose my herms' fortune:
I curse myself, for they are bent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord should be.
What's here?

Silva, this night I will enfranchise thee:
'Tis so; and here's the ladder for the purpose.—
Why, Phineas, (for thou art Meropis, son,)—
Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,
And with thy dargio folly burn the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?
Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smoiles on equal mates;
And think my patience, more than thy deserts,
Is privilege for thy departures hence:
Thank me for this, more than for all the favours,
Which, all too much, I have bestow'd on thee.
But if thou linger in my territories,
Longer than swiftest expedition
Will give thee time to leave our royal court,
By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or thyself.
Deceived, I will not hear thy vain excuse,
But, as thou lovest thy life, make speed from hence.

[Exit Duke.

Val. And why not death, rather than living torment?

To die, is to be banish'd from myself;
And Silvia is myself: banish'd from her
Is self from self: a deadly banishment!
With light is light, a shadow she is, not seen?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Unless it be to think that she is by,
And feed upon the shadow of perfection.

Except I be by Silvia in the night,
There is no music in the nightingale;
Unless I look on Silvia in the day.
There is no day for me to look upon:
She is my essence: and I leave to be,
I'll be not by her fair influence
Fester'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive.
I fly not death, to fly this deadly doom:
Tarry I here, but I attend on death;
But, fly hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Proteus and Launce.

Pro. Run, boy, run, and seek him out.

Laun. So-ho! so-ho!

Pro. What see'st thou?

Laun. Him we go to find: there's not a hair on his head, but 'tis a Valentine.

Pro. Valentine?

Val. No.

Pro. Who then? his spirit?

Val. Neither.

Pro. What then?

Val. Nothing.

Pro. Can nothing speak? master, shall I strike?

Pro. Whom wouldst thou strike?

Laun. Nothing.

Pro. Villain, forbear.

Laun. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you,— Pro. Sirrah, I say, forbear: Friend Valentine, a word.

Val. My ears are stopp'd, and cannot hear good news,
So much of bad already hath possessed them.

Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,
For they are both, as I may say, inable, and bad.

Val. Is Silvia dead?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!

Hath she forsown me?

Pro. No, Valentine.
ACT III.—SCENE I.

Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsaken me.—
What is your news?
Lau. Sir, there is a proclamation that they banish'd.
Pro. That thou art banish'd, O, that's the news;
From hence, from Silvia, and from me thy friend.
Val. O, I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excess of it will make me sorfeit.
Doth Silvia know that I am banish'd?
Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer'd to the doom,
(Which, understand, will in effect follow.)
These at her father's churlish feet she tender'd;
With them, upon her knees, her humble self;
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became
As if but now they waxed pale for woe: [them,
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-sheathing tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire;
But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.
Besides, her interestress chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of hiding there. [speak'st,
Val. No more; unless the next word that thou
Hold'st on thine envious lips shall drop upon my life:
If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless dole.
Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,
And study help for that which thou lament'st.
Time is the nurse and breeder of all good.
Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love:
But a step more than that can make a gulf betwixt us.
Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts.
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence:
Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd
Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.
The time now serves not to expostulate:
Come, I'll convey thee through the city gate;
And, ere I part with thee, confer at large.
Of all that may concern thy love-affairs:
As thou lov'st Silvia, though not for thyself,
Regard thy danger, and along with me.
Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north gate.
Pro. Go, sirrah, and seek some Valentine.
Val. O my dear Silvia, hapless Valentine!
Lau. It was my fault, sir; and yet I have the wit to think, my master is a kind of knave: but that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives not now, that knows me to be in love: yet I am in love;
but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me;
nor 'tis I love, and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman. I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milkmaid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips:
yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages. She hath more qualities than a water-spaniel,—which is much in a bare Christian. Here is the cat-log [Pulling out a paper] of her conditions.
Imprimis. She can fetch and carry. Secondly, a horse can do no more; nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore she is better than a jade. Item,
She can milk; look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.
Speed. Why, man, how black? Lau'n. Why as black as ink.
Speed. Thou art read there, then?
Lau'n. Eve on thee; jolt-head; thou canst not read.
Speed. Thou best, I can.
Lau'n. I will try thee: Tell me this: Who begot thee?
Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather.
Lau'n. O, illiterate loiterer! it was the son of thy grandmother: this proves that thou canst not read.
Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy papers.
Lau'n. There; and St. Nicholas be thy speed!
Speed. Imprimis. She can milk.
Lau'n. Ay, that she can.
Speed. Item, She brews good ale.
Lau'n. And thereof comes the proverb,—Blessing of your heart, you brew good ale.
Speed. Item, Lau'n. That's as much as to say, can she so?
Speed. Item, She can knit.
Lau'n. What need a man care for a stock with a wrench, when she can knit him a stock.
Speed. She can wash and scour.
Lau'n. A special virtue; for then she need not be washed and scorched.
Speed. Item, She can spin.
Lau'n. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.
Speed. Item, She hath many nameless virtues.
Lau'n. That's as much as to say bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.
Speed. Item, She follow her vices.
Lau'n. Close at the heels of her virtues.
Speed. Item, She is not to be kissed fastening, in respect of her breath.
Lau'n. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast. Read on.
Speed. Item, She hath a sweet mouth.
Lau'n. That makes amends for her sour breath.
Speed. Item, She doth talk in her sleep. [her talk.
Lau'n. It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in Speed. Item, She is slow in words.
Lau'n. O villain, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words, is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with 't; and place it for her chief virtue.
Speed. Item, She is proud.
Lau'n. Out with that too; it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.
Speed. Item, She hath no teeth. [crusts.
Lau'n. I care not for that neither, because I love Speed. Item, She is erect.
Lau'n. Well; she can with ease bite her crust.
Speed. She will often praise her liquor.
Lau'n. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.
Speed. Item, She is too liberal.
Lau'n. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ down she is slow of: of her purse she shall not;
for that I'll keep that: now of another thing she may; and that I cannot help. Well, proceed.
Speed. Item, She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.
Lau'n. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article:
Rehearse that once more.
Speed. Item, She hath more hair than wit,— Lau'n. She hath more hair than wit,—it may be; I'll prove it: The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit, is more than the wit; for the greater hides the less. What's next.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Speed.—And more faults than hairs,—

_Lawn._ That’s monstrous: O, that that were out! Speed. —And more wealth than faults.

_Lawn._ Why, that word makes the faults gracious: Well, I’ll better them. And if it be a match, as nothing is impossible,— __Speed._ What then?

_Lawn._ Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north gate.

__Speed._ For me?

_Lawn._ For thee? ay: who art thou? he hath staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.

__Speed._ Why didst not tell me sooner? 'tis of your love letters!

[Exit.

Lawn._ Now will he be swunged for reading my letter: An unmanly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets!—I’ll after, to rejoice in the letter’s correction.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Duke and Thurio; Proteus behind.

_Duke._ Sir Thurio, fear not, but that she will love you, now Valentine is banish’d from her sight. _Lawn._ Since his exile she hath despis’d me most, Forsworn my company, and rail’d at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her.

_Duke._ This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in ice; which with an hour’s heat Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. A vessel, too, that the wind will melt among distant thoughts and wordless Valentine shall be forgot.—

_How now, sir Proteus? Is your countryman, According to our proclamation, gone? _Pro._ Gone, my good lord.

_Duke._ My daughter takes his going grievously. _Pro._ A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

_Lawn._ The match between sir Thurio and my daughter.

_Pro._ I do, my lord.

_Duke._ And also, I think, thou art not ignorant How she opposes her against my will.

_Pro._ She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

_Duke._ Ay, and perversely she persévérés so. What might we do, to make the girl forget The love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio? _Pro._ The best way is, to slander Valentine With falsehood, cowardice, and poor desert; Three things that women highly hold in hate.

_Duke._ Ay, but she’ll think, that it is spoke in hate.

_Pro._ Ay, if his enemy deliver it: Therefore it must, with circumstance, be spoken By one, whom she esteemeth as his friend.

_Duke._ Then the house must undertake to slander him. _Pro._ And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do: 'Tis an ill office for a gentleman; Especially, against his very friend.

_Duke._ Where your good word cannot advantage Your slander never can endanger him; [him, Therefore the office is indifferent, Being entreated to it by your friend._

_Pro._ You have prevail’d, my lord: if I can do it,

By aught that I can speak in his displeasure, She shall not long continue love to him. But say, this weal her love from Valentine, It follows not that she will love sir Thurio. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him, Lest it should ravel, and be good to none, You must provide to bottom it on me: Which must be done, by praising me as much As you in worth displease sir Valentine. _Duke._ And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this kind; Because we know, on Valentine’s report, You are already love this man very well, But soon revolt and change your mind. Upon this warrant shall you have access, Where you with Silvia may confer at large; For she is lampish, heavy, melancholy, And, for your friend’s sake, will be glad of you; Where you may temper her, by your persuasion, To hate young Valentine, and love my friend. _Pro._ Say, that upon the altar of her beauty You see the trophies, your eyes, your heart: Write till your ink be dry; and with your tears Moist it again: and frame some feeling line, That may discover such integrity: For Orphius’ lute was strung with poets’ sinews; Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones, Make tigers tame, and huge levantins Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands, After your fire burning elegies, Visit by night your lady’s chamber-window, With some sweet concert: to their instruments Tune a deploring dump; the night’s dead silence Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. This, or else nothing, will inherit her. _Duke._ This discipline shews thou hast been in love. _Pro._ Ay, sir; for four years I have served thee, my lord; in the country, sith thou art not here. _Duke._ About it, gentlemen.

_Lawn._ In this my lord: I will wait upon your grace, till after supper, And afterward determine our proceedings.

_Duke._ Even now about it; I will pardon you. [Exeunt._

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest, near Mantua.

_Enter certain Out-laws._

_1 Out._ Fellows, stand fast; I see a passenger.

_2 Out._ If there beten, shrink not, but down with’t em.

_Enter Valentine and Speed._

_3 Out._ Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about If not, we’ll make you sit, and ride you, [you; _Speed._ Sir, we are undone! these are the villains That all the travellers do fear so much.

_Val._ My friends,—

_1 Out._ That’s not so, sir; we are your enemies.

_2 Out._ Peace; we’ll hear him.

_3 Out._ Ay, by my beard, will we; For he’s a proper man.
VAI. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose; A man I am, crossed with adversity: These are these poor habiliments, Of which if you should here disfurnish me, You take the sum and substance that I have. 2 Out. Whither travel you? VAI. To Verona. 1 Out. Whence came you? VAI. From Milan. 3 Out. Have you long sojourn'd there? VAI. Some sixteen months; and longer might have If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. [staid. 1 Out. What, were you banish'd then? VAI. I was. 2 Out. For what offence? VAI. For that which now torments me to rehearse: I think, I speak, I do death I much repent; But yet I slew him manfully to fight, Without false vantage, or base treachery. 1 Out. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were done so: But were you banish'd for so small a fault? VAI. I was, and held me glad of such a doom. 1 Out. Have you the tongues? VAI. My youthful travel there made me happy; Or else I often had been miserable. 3 Out. By the base scalp of Robin Hood's fat friar, This fellow was a king for our wild faction. 1 Out. We'll have him: sirs, a word. Speed. Master, be one of them; It is an honourable kind of knavery. VAI. Peace, villain! 2 Out. Tell us this: Have you any thing to take to? VAI. Nothing, but my fortune. 3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen, Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth Thrust from the company of awful men: Myself was from Verona banish'd; For practising to steal away a lady, An heir, and near allied unto the duke. 2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman, Whom, in my mood, I stab'd unto the heart. 1 Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these. But to the purpose.—(for we cite our faults, That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives,) And, partly, seeing you are beautified. With golden shape; and by your own report, A linguist; and a man of such perfection, As do in our quality much want:— 2 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man, Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you: Are you content to be our general? To make a virtue of necessity. And live, as we do, in this wilderness? 3 Out. What say'st thou? wilt thou be of our Say, ay, and be the captain of us all: consort? We'll do thee homage, and be rule'd by thee, Love thee as our commander, and our king. 1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest. 2 Out. Thou shalt not live to bring what we have offer'd. VAI. I take your offer, and will live with you; Provided that you do no outrages On silly women, or poor passeners. 3 Out. No, we detest such vile base practices. Come, go with us, we'll bring thee to our crews, And shew thee all the treasure we have got; Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Milan. Court of the Palace. Enter PROTEUS.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine, And now must I be as unjust to Thurio.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!
Jul. Ay; that change is the spite.
Host. You would have them play but one thing?
Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on, often resort unto this gentlewoman?
Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me, he loved her out of all sick.
Jul. Where is Launce?
Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.
Jul. Peace! stand aside! the company parts.
Pro. Sir Thurio, fear not you! I will so plead,
That none shall say, my cunning drift excels.
This. Where meet we?
Pro. At saint Gregory's well.
This. Farewell. [Exeunt Thurio and Musicians.

SILVIA appears above, at her window.
Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlelady;
Who is that, that speake?
Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth,
You'd quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.
Sil. What is your will?
Pro. That I may compass yours.
Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this,—
That presently you bie you home to bed.
Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disloyal man!
Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so senseless,
To be seduced by thy flattery.
That hast deceiv'd so many with thy vows,
Return, return, and make thy love amends.
Yet, by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request,
I despise thee for thy wrongful suit;
And by and by intend to chide myself,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady;
But she is dead.
Ah! Twice false, if I should speak it;
For, I am sure, she is not buried. [Aside.
Sil. Say, that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives; to whom, thyself art witness,
I am betroth'd: And art thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunity?
Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.
Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave
Assure thyself, my love is buried.
Pro. Sweet lady, let me rake it from the earth.
Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, to her sepulchre thine.
Jul. He heard not that. [Aside.
Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love;
The picture that is hanging in your chamber;
To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep;
For, since the substance of your perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow I will make true love. [Ft.
Jul. If twere a substance, you would, sure, deceive
And make it but a shadow as I am. [Aside.
Sil. I am very loth to be your idol, sir;
But, since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadows, and adore false shapes,
Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it:
And so, good rest.
Pro. As wretches have o'er-night,
That wait for execution in the more.
[Enter Proteus; and Silvia, from above.
Jul. Host, will you go?
Host. By my halibut, I was fast asleep.
Jul. Pray you, where lies sir Proteus?
Host. Merry, at my house: Trust me, I think, 'tis almost day.
Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night
That e'er I watch'd, and the most heaviest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her mind;
There's some great matter she'd employ me in.—
Madam, madam!

Silvia appears above, at her window.

SIT. Who calls?
Egl. Your servant, and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship's command.
Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good-morrow.
Egl. As many, well lady, to yourself.
According to your ladyship's impose,
I am thus early come to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.
Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman,
(Think not, I flatter, for, I swear, I do not.)
Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplished;
Thou art not ignorant, what gentleman will best keep me from the bawd's Valentine;
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhor'd.
Thyself hast loved; and I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died,
Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.
Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine,
To Mantua, where, I hear, he makes abode;
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose.
Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief, a lady's grief;
And on the justice of my flowering heart.
I am of the most unholy match,
Which heaven and fortune still reward with plagues.
I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrows as the sea of sands,
To bear me company, and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.
Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances;
Which since I know they virtuously are plac'd,
I give consent to go along with you;
Recking as little what beideth me
As much I wish all good betfortune you.
When will you go?
Sil. This evening coming.
Sil. Where shall I meet you?
Sil. At Friar Patrick's cell,
Where I intend holy confession.
Egl. I will not fail thy ladyship:
Good-morrow, gentle lady.
Sil. Good-morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — The same.

Enter Launce with his dog.

When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three for four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it! I have taught him—even as I had taught you previously,
I was sent to deliver him as a present to mistress Silvia, from my master; and came no sooner into the dining chamber, but he steps me to her treacher, and steals her capon's leg. O, 'tis a foul thing when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies! I would, as one should say, one that was upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a fool at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hanged for't; sure as I live he had suffered for't: you shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentleman-like dogs, under the duke's table: he had not been there (bless he mark) a pissing while; but all the chamber smelt out with the dog, says one; What ear is that?
ays another; Whip him out, says a third; Hang him up, says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the pillow that whips the dogs; Friend, quoth I, you mean to whip the dog? Ay, marry, do I, quoth he. You do in the wrong, quoth I; 'twas I did the thing you got out with the dog, and you does me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for their servant? Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the tods for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillow for geese that hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't: thou thinks't not of this now.—Nay, I remember the trick he makes me out of the chamber, and I that he did not bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? When idst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water gentlewoman's farthingale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well, and will employ thee in some service presently.
Jul. In what you please:—I will do what I can.
Pro. I hope, thou wilt.—How now, you woreson peasant? [To LAUNCE. Where have you been these two days loitering?
Lauv. Marry, sir, I earried mistress Silvia the dog that made me.
Pro. And what says she to my little jewel?
Lauv. Marry, she says, your dog was a cur; and ells you, curriish thanks is good enough for such a
Pro. But she received my dog? [present.
Lauv. No, indeed, she did not: here have I brought him back again.
Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?
Lauv. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by the hangman's boys in the market-place: and then I offered her mine own; who is a dog as big as en of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Go, get thee hence, and find my dog again,
Or never return again into my sight.
Lauv. I say, sir: Stov'st thou to vex me here?
A slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame.

[Exit LAUNCE.

Sebastian. I have entertained thee,
Partly, that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business,
For 'tis no trusting to you foolish lowt;
But, chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour;
Which (if my augury deceive me not)
Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth: Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently, and take this ring with thee,
Deliver it to madam Silvia:
She loved me well, deliver'd it to me.

Jul. It seems, you loved her not, to leave her token;
She's dead, belike.

Pro. Not so; I think, she lives.

Jul. Alas!

Jul. Why dost thou cry, alas!
Jul. I cannot choose but pity her?
Pro. Wherefore should'st thou pity her?
Jul. Because, methinks, that she lov'd you as well
As you do love your lady Silvia:
She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;
You dote on her, that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity, love should be so contrary;
And thinking on it makes me cry, alas!

Pro. Well, give her that ring, and therewithal
This letter;—that's her chamber.—Tell my lady,
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, be home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary. [Exit PRO.
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A fox, to be the shepherd of thy lambs:
Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him
That with his very heart despiseth me?
Because he betrays her, he despises her;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him, when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will:
And now am I (unhappy messenger)
To plead for that, which I would not obtain,
To carry that which I would have refus'd;
To praise him, that I should have dispris'd;
I am my master's true confirmed love:
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself.
Yet I will woo for him; but yet so coldly,
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

Enter Silvia, attended.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with madam Silvia.
Sil. What would you with her, if I be she?
Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.
Sil. From whom?
Jul. From my master, sir Proteus, madam.
Sil. O!—does he sends you for a picture?
Jul. Ay, madam.
Sil. Ursula, bring my picture there. [Picture brought.
Go, give your master this: tell him from me,
One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget,
Would better fit his chamber than this shadow.
Jul. Madam, please you peruse this letter.—
Pardon me, madam; I have unadvised Deliver'd you a paper that I should not.
This is the letter to your ladyship.
Sil. I pray thee, let me look on that again.
Jul. It may not be; good madam, pardon me.
Sil. There, hold.
I will not look upon your master's lines:
I know, they are stuff'd with protestations,
And full of new-found oaths; which he will break,
As easily as I do tear his paper.
Jul. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.
Sil. The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure:
Though his false finger hath profan'd the ring,
Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong.
Jul. She thanks you.
Sil. What say'st thou?
Jul. I thank you, madam, that you tender her—
Poor gentlewoman! my master wrongs her much.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Sil. Dost thou know her?
Jul. Almost as well as I do know myself:
To think upon her woes, I do protest,
That I have wept an hundred several times.
Sil. Belike, she thinks that Proteus hath forsook her.
Jul. I think she doth, and that's her cause of Sil. Is she not passing fair?
Jul. She hath been fairer, madam, than she is:
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in her judgment, was as fair as you;
But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pinched the lily-tincture of her face,
That now she is become as black as I.
Sil. How tall was she?
Jul. If she had kept her stature as for, at Pentecost,
When all our pages of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trim'd in madam Julia's gown;
Which served me as fit, by all men's judgment,
As if the garment had been made for me:
Therefore, I know she is about my height.
And, at that time, I made her keep a good,
For I did play a lady to my part:
Madam, 'twas Ariadne, passioning
For Theseus' perjury, and unjust flight,
Which I so lively acted with my tears,
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly; and, would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow
As, poor lady! desolate and left!
I weep myself, to think upon thy words.
Here, young, there is my purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lov'st her. Farewell. [Exit Silvia.
Jul. And she shall thank you for 't, if e'er you know
A virtuous gentlewoman, mild and beautiful. [her,
I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects her mistress' love so much.
Alas, how love can tripe with itself!
Here is her picture: Let me see; I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And, if the painter's matter'd hair gold,
Unless I flatter with myself too.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow:
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.
Her eyes are grey as glass; and so are mine:
Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high.
What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond love were not a blinded god?
Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form,
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead,
I'll put on scarce, one to thy mistress' sake,
That we'd me so; or else, by Jove, I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. An Abbey.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. The sun begins to gild the western sky:
And now, it is about the very hour

That Silvia, at Patrick's cell, should meet me.
She will not fail; for lovers break no hours,
Unless it be to come before their time:
So much they spur their expedition.

Enter Silvia.

See where she comes: Lady, a happy evening!
Sil. Amen, amen! go on, good Eglamour!
Out at the postern, by the abbey-wall;
for I am attended by some spies.
Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off.
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. An Apartment in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Thurio, Proteus, and Julia.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?
Pro. O, sir, I find her milder than she was;
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.
Thu. What, that, my leg is too long?
Pro. No; but that it is too little.
Thu. I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder.
Pro. But love will not be spur'd to what it loathes.
Thu. What says she to my face?
Pro. She says it is a fair one.
Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies; my face is black.
Pro. But pears are fair; and the old saying is,
Black men are pears in beauteous ladies' eyes.
Jul. 'Tis true, such pears as put out ladies' eyes.
For I had rather wink than look on them. [Aside.
Thu. How likes she my discourse?
Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.
Thu. But well, when I discourse of love and peace.
Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace!
[Aside.
Thu. What says she to my valour?
Pro. O, sir, she makes no doubt of that.
Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.
[Aside.
Thu. What says she to my birth?
Pro. That you are well deriv'd.
Thu. Considers she my possessions?
Pro. O, ay; and pities them.
Thu. What should she say to my fortune?
Jul. That such an ass should own them. [Aside.
Pro. That they are out of lease.
Jul. Here comes the duke.

Enter Duke.

Duke. How now, sir Proteus? how now, Thurio?
Which of you saw Eglamour of late?
Thu. Not I.
Pro. Nor I.
Duke. Saw you my daughter?
Pro. Neither.
Duke. Why, then she's fled unto that peasant Vi-And Eglamour is in her company. [Kentish; "Tis true; for friar Laurence met them both,
As he in penance wander'd through the forest:
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it:
Besides, she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not;
These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence.
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But move you presently; and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot
That leads towards Mantua, whither they are fled.
Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me. [Exeunt.
Thu. Why this it is to be a peevish girl,
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

SILVIA I do detest false-perjur'd Proteus

Act IV, Sc. 3
that flies her fortune when it follows her:

'till after: more to be reveng'd on Eglamour,
han for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love, han hate of Eglamour that goes with her. [Exit.

Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love, han hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Frontiers of Mantua. The Forest.
Enter Silvia, and Out-laws.

Out. Come, come; impatient, we must bring you to our captain.

Sil. A thousand more mischances than this one have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.

2 Out. Come, bring her away.

1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

I thou with her to the west end of the wood,
here is our captain: we'll follow him that's fleet.

Thicket is best, he cannot 'scape. [cave;

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's ear not; he bears an honourable mind, and will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine, this I endure for thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Forest.
Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
his shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
be better than flourishing peopled towns:
Can I sit alone, unseem'd and unaided and to the nightingale's complaining notes, une my distresses, and record my woes.

thou that dost inhabit in my breast, leave not the mansion so long tenanted;
cast, growing ruinous, the building fall,
and leave no memory of what it was!
repair me with thy presence, Silvia;
I thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain!
What halluc'ing, and what stir, is this to-day?

These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
have some unhappy passenger in chase:
hey love me well; yet I have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outrages.

Withstand thee, Valentine; who's this comes here? [Steps aside.

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you, though you respect not aught your servant doth,) To hazard life, and rescue you from him that would have forc'd your honour and your love.

You safe me, for my need, but one fair look;
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.

Val. How like a dream is this I see and hear! Love,
Lend me patience to forbear a while. [Aside.

Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am! [Aside.

Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;

But, by my coming, I have made you happy.

Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st mine most unhappy.

Jul. Add me, when he approacheth to your presence. [Aside.

Sil. Had I been seiz'd by a hungry lion, would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.

D heaven be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;
And to as much, (for more there cannot be,) I do detest false perjur'd Proteus:

Therefore be gone, solicit me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look?
O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.

Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's belov'd.

Read over Julia's heart, the first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury, to love me.

Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou hast't two,
And that's far worse than none; better have none
Than plural faith, which is too much by one:

Thou counterfeit to thy true friend.

Pro. In love,
Who respects friend?

Sil. All men but Proteus.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end;
And love you 'gainst the nature of love, force you.

Sil. O heaven! [Aside.

Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.

Val. Russian, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!

Pro. Valentine! [love;

Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or (For such is a friend now,) treacherous, fallacious man;
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,

I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private would of my hopes; taught but mine eye
Could have persuaded me: Now I dare not say,
I have one friend alive; thou would'st disprove me.

Pro. Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,

I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private would of my hopes; taught but mine eye
Could have persuaded me: Now I dare not say,
I have one friend alive; thou would'st disprove me.

Sil. For give me, Valentine: if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender it here; I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.

Val. Then I am paid;
And once again I do receive thee honest:
WHO by repentance is not satisfied,
Is aor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleased;
By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd—
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia, I give thee.

Jul. O most repentant! [Faints.

Pro. Look to the boy. [matter?

Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now? what is the Look up; speak.

Jul. O good sir, my master charg'd me to deliver a ring to madam Silvia;
Which out of my neglect was never done.

Pro. Where is that ring, boy?

Jul. Here 'tis: this is it.

Col. This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Sends another ring.

Pro. But, how can't thou by this ring? at my de-
I gave this unto Julia; she will make thee blush! [faint,
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.

Pro. How! Julia!

Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart;
How oft hast thou with perjury clef't the root?
O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush:
Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon thee.
Such an inmodest raiment; if shame live
In a disguise of love:
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.

Pros. Than men their minds! 'tis true; O heaven!
But constant, he were perfect: that one error
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all sins:
Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins:
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julita's with a constant eye?

Val. Come, come, a hand from either:
Let me be brest to make this happy close;
'Twere pity two such friends should be long foes.

Pros. Beawitness, heaven, I have my wish for ever.
Jul. And I have mine.

Enter Out-laws, with Duke and Tuurio.

Out. A price, a price, a price!
Val. Forbear, I say; it is my lord the duke.
Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd,
Banished Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine!

Thu. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.

Val. Tuurio, give back, or else embrace thy death;
Come not within the measure of my wrath:
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milan shall not behold thee. Here she stands,
Take but possession of her with a touch;—
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I;
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.—

Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine.
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again.

Duke. Grant it, for, thine own, what'cr it be.
Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endowed with worthy qualities;
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile:
They are reform'd, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord; [thee].

Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them, and Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts.
Come, let us go; we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Val. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile:

What think you of this page, my lord? [blushes
Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he
Val. I warrant you, my lord; more grace than boy.
Duke. What mean you by that saying?
Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder, what hath fortun'd.

Come, Proteus; 'tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your love discovered.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. [Exeunt.

In this play there is a strange mixture of knowledge and ignorance, of care and negligence. The verification is often excellent, and the allusions are learned and just; but the author conveys his heroes by sea from one inland town to another in the same country; he plays the emperor at Milan, and sends his young men to attend him, but never questions him more; he makes Proteus, after an interview with Silvia, say he has only seen her picture; and if we may credit the old copies, he has, by mistaking places, left his scenery imposcible. The reason of all this confusion seems to be, that he took his story from a novel, which he sometimes followed, and sometimes forsook, sometimes remembered, and sometimes forgot.

That this play is rightly attributed to Shakspeare, I have little doubt. If it be taken from him, to whom shall it be given? This question may be asked of all the disputed plays, except Timo Andromeneus; and it will be found more credible that Shakespeare might sometimes sink below his highest flights than that any other should rise up to his lowest.—JOHNSON.

Johnson's general remarks on this play are just, except that part in which he premises the conduct of the poet, for making Proteus say, that he had only seen the picture of Silvia, where it appears that he had had a personal interview with her. This however, is not a blemish of Shakespeare's, but a mistake of Johnson's, who considers the passage alluded to in a more literal sense than the author intended it. Sir Proteus, it is true, had seen Silvia for a few moments; but though he could form from those some idea of her person, he was still unacquainted with her temper, manners, and the qualities of her mind. He therefore considers himself as having seen her pure only.—The thought is just, and elegantly expressed.

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a star-chamber matter of it; if he were sir John Falstaff, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slen. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace, and coroner.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and Cust-alorum.

Slen. Ay, and ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself armigerous; in any will warrants the play, or obligation, armigerous.

Shal. Ay, that we do, and have done any time these three hundred years.

Slen. All his successors, gone before him, have done; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white lices in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Exe. The dozen white louses do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies—love.

Shal. The lice is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Slen. I may quarter, coz?

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Exe. It is marrying, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Exe. Yes, pry'larly; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three shillings for myself, in my simple conjunctures; and this is all one: if sir John Falstaff have committed disarrangements unto you, I um of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shal. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

Exe. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of it being a riot: the council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of it, and not to hear a riot; take your visaments in that.

Shal. Ha! o' my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Exe. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it; and there is also another device in my pray, which, properer, brings good discretions with it: There is Anne Page, which is daughter to master George Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slen. Mistress Anne Page! She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.

Exe. It is that fery person for all the 'orld, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and silver, is her grandiss, upon his death's bed, (But deliver to a joyful resurrection!) give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a gout motion, if we leave our pribles and prables, and desire a marriage between master Abraham, and mistress Anne Page.

Slen. Did her grandiss leave her seven hundred pound?

Exe. Ay, and her father is make her a pette penny.
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Shal. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

Eva. Seven hundred pounds, and possibilities, is good gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest master Page: Is Falstaff there?

Eva. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar, as I do despise one that is false; or, as I despise one that is not true. The knight, sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door [knocks.] for master Page. What, hoa! Got pless your house here!

Enter Page.

Page. Who's there?

Eva. Here is Gut's plessing, and your friend, and justice Shallow: and here young master Slender; that, peradventure, shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likenings.

Page. I am glad to see your worshipships well: I thank you for my venison, master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you; Much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better; it was ill killed:—How doth good mistress Page?—and I love you always with my heart, ha; with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do. Page. I am glad to see you, good master Slender.

Sten. How does your faylow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was out-run on Coslale.

Page. It could not be judg'd, sir.

Sten. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. He was not;—tis your fault, tis your fault.—Tis a good dog.

Page. A cur, sir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog; Can there be more said? he is good, and fair. Is sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is withio; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is spoken as Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess'd, it is not redress'd; is not that so, master Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed, he hath;—at a word he hath;—believe me; Robert Shallow, esquire, saith, he is wrong'd.

Page. Here comes sir John.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fol. Now, master Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king!

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fol. But not kiss'd your keeper's daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answer'd.

Fol. I will answer it straight;—I have done all this:—That is now answer'd.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fol. 'Twere better for you, if it were known in court: you'll be laugh'd at.

Eva. Pauca verba, sir John, goot worts.

Fol. Good worts! good cabbage.—Slender, I broke your head; What matter have you against me?

Sten. Marry, sir, I have matter in my head against you; and against your coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Bard. You Banbury cheese!

Sten. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus?

Sten. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pacea, pacea; slice! that's my matter.

Sten. Where's Simple, my man?—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace: I pray you! Now let us understand: There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand: that is,—master Page, fidelicit, master Page; and there is myself, fidelicit, myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Ferry goot: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fol. Pistol,—

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. The what with his ear! what phrase is this, He hears with ear? Why, it is affectations.

Fol. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Sten. Ay, by these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else,) of seven greats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovell-boards, that cost me two shilling and two peace a-piece of Yeal Miller, by these gloves.

Fol. Is this true, Falstaff?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and master mine,

I combat challenge of this latten biglo:

Word of denial in thy labras here;

Word of denial: froth and scum, thou liest.

Sten. By these gloves, then twas he.

Nym. Be advis'd, sir, and pass good humours: I will say, marry, trap, with you, if you run the nut-hook's humour on me: that is the very one of it.

Sten. By this hat, then, he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fol. What say you, Scarlett and John?

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is! Bard. And being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashier'd; and so conclusions pass'd the cares.

Sten. Ay, you spake in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter: I'l ne'er be drunk whilst I live again; but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So Got 'udge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fol. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within.

[Exit Anne Page.

Sten. O heaven! this is mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, mistress Ford?

Fol. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met; and your heart good mistress, kissing her.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome?

Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner; come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Lestant all but Shal. Slender, and Evans.

Sten. I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of Songs and Sonnets here:—

Enter Simple.

Page now, Simple! Where have you been? I must
LILY HAYES OF WINDSOR.

ANN. Will you please your worship to come in, Sir.

Act I. Sc. 1
wait on myself, must I? You have not The Book of Riddles about you, have you?
Shall. Book of Riddles? why, did not you lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Allhallowsmas fast, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?

Shal. Come, coz, come, coz; we stay for you.
A word with you, coz: marry, this, coz; There is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by Sir Hugh here:—Do you understand me?

Sten. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I shall do that that is reason.
Shal. Nay, but understand me.
Sten. So I do, sir.

Shal. Give ear to his motions, master Slender: I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Sten. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says; I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.

Shal. But this is not the question; the question is concerning your marriage.
Shal. Ay, there's the point, sir.
Shen. Marr', is it; the very point of it; to mistress Anne Page.
Shen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her, upon any reasonable demands.

Shal. But can you affection the 'oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is parcel of the mouth:—Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?
Shen. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?
Shen. I hope, sir,—I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.
Sten. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies, you must speak possible, if you can carry her your desires towards her?
Shal. That you must: Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?
Sten. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.
Sten. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coz; what I do, is to please you, coz: Can you love the maid?
Sten. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven be so pleased it: we are married, and have more occasion to know one another: I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt: but if you say, marry her, I will marry her, that I am freely dissolved, and dissolve.

Shal. It is a very discretion answer; save, the fault is in the 'ort dissolutely: the 'orts is, according to our meaning, resolutely,—his meaning is good.
Shal. Ay, I think my cousin meant well.
Sten. Ay, or else I would I might be hanged, la.

Shal. Here comes fair mistress Anne:—Would I were young, for your sake, mistress Anne!
Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.
Shal. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne.
Eva. Od's pleased will! I will not be absence at the grace. [Exit Shallow and Sir H. Evans.]
Anne. Will you please your worship to come in, sir?
Shen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.
Anne. The dinner attedes you, sir.
Sten. I am not a-hungry; I thank you, forsooth.
Go, sirrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my cousin Shallow: [Exit Simple.] A justice of peace sometime may be beholden to his friend for a man:—I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead: But what thought? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.
Anne. I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit, till you come.
Shen. I'faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.
Sten. I pray you, sir, walk in.
Shen. I had rather walk here, I thank you; I browsed my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three venneys for a dish of stewed prunes; and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears in the town.
Anne. I think there are, sir; I heard them talked of.
Anne. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it, as any man in England:—You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?
Anne. Ay, indeed, sir.
Shen. That's meat and drink to me now: I have seen Sackerson lose twenty times; and have taken him by the chain: but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd:—but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill favoured rough things.

Re-enter Page.
Page. Come, gentle master Slender, come; we stay for you.

Shen. I'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.
Page. By cock and pye, you shall not choose, sir; come, come.

Shen. Nay, pray you, lead the way.
Page. Come on, sir.
Shen. Mistress Anne, you shall go first.
Anne. Not 1, sir: pray you, keep on.
Shen. Truly, I will not go first; truly, la: I will not do you that wrong.
Anne. I pray you, sir.
Shen. I'faith, I'll rather be unmanly than troublesome; you do yourself wrong, indeed, la. [Exit.

SCENE II. —The same.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Shal. Go your ways, and ask of Dr. Caius' house, which is the way: and there dwells one mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Shal. Simp. Well, sir.
Eva. Nay, it is better yet:—give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with mistress Anne Page: and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicity your master's desires to mistress Anne Page: I pray you, begone; I will make an end of my dinner; there's pippins and cheese to come.

[Exit.

SCENE III. —A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Pistol. Mince host of the Garter,—
Host. What says my bully-rook? Speak scholarly, and wisely.
Pistol. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.
Host. Discard, bully Hercules; casher: let them wag; trot, trot.
Pistol. I sit at ten pounds a week. E
Host. Thou art an emperor, Cesar, Keiser, and Phezezar. I will entertain Bardolph: he shall draw, be small tap; said I well, bully Hector!

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow: Let me see thee froth, and lime: I am at a word; follow. [Exit Host.]

Fal. Bardolph follow him: a tapster is a good trade: and an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered serving-man, a fresh tapster: Go; adieu. Bard. It is a life that I have desired: I will thrive.

Pist. O base Gengario wight! wilt thou the spigot wield?

Nym. He was gotten in drink: Is not the humour concocted? His mind is not heroic, and there's the discourse, the curvets, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be English'd rightly, is, I am sir John Falstaff's.

Pist. He hath studied her well, and translated her well; out of honesty into English.

Nym. The author is deep: what humour pass? But when the repast goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; she hath legions of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain; and, To her, boy, say I.

Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page; who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious clylads: sometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, sometimes my portly belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humour.

Fal. O, she did so course o'er my exterior with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass! Here's another letter to her; she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty. I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me; they shall be my East and West India, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress Ford; we will thrive, lad, we will thrive.

Pist. Shall I sir Pandarus of Troy become, And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all!

Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour letter; I will keep the 'baviour of reputation, Fat. Hold, sirrah, [to Rom.] bear you these letters tightly.

Sail not in my gallop to these golden shores.—
Rogues, hence, avaunt! vanish like hail-stones, go; Trudge, plod, away, o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack! Falstaff will learn the humour of this age,

French thrift, you rogues; myself, and skirted page. [Exit Falstaff and Robin.]

Pist. Let vultures gripe thy guts! for gourd, and fallum holds, And high and low beguil the rich and poor; Tester I'll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack, Base Phrygian Turk!

Nym. I have operations in my head, which be humours of revenge.

Pist. Will thou jove's revenge?

Nym. By wellkin, and her star!

Pist. With wit, or steel?

Nym. With both the humours, 1: I will discuss the humour of this love to Page. Pist. And I to Ford shall eke unfold, How Falstaff, varlet vile, His dove will prove, his gold will hold, for the sake of his old couch deity.

Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incense Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness, for the revolt of mien is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I second thee; troop on. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Dr. Caius's House.

Enter Mrs. Quickly, Simple, and Rugby.

Quick. What: John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the drawing-room, and see if you can see my master, master Doctor Caius, coming: if he do, i' faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience, and the king's English.

Rug. I'll go watch. [Exit Rugby.] Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall compose; you may be as well at this, and I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish this way; but nobody but has his fault;—but let that pass. Peter Simole, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And master Sinder's your master?

Sim. Ay, sooth.Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glove's paring knife?

Sim. No, sooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard; a Cain-coloured beard. Quick. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, sooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrener.

Quick. How say you?—O, I should remember him; Does he not hold up his head, as it were? and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! The said master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish—

Re-enter Rugby.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master. Quick. We shall all be sheat: Run in here, good young man; go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the closet.] He will not stay long.—What, John
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Rugby! John, what John, I say!—Go, John, go inquire for my master; I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home——and down, down, adown, &c.

[Sings.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing! I do not like dese toys; Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet a batter word; box, a green-a-box; Do! and Iat vant I speak a green-a-box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth, I'll fetch it you. I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn mad.

[Aside.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud. Je m'en vais à la tour——en grande aventure.

Caius. Ouy; mette le au mon pocket; Depêche, quickely,—Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Ring. Here, sir.

Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby; Come, take-a your rapier, and come after me. Do not be afeard to ring.

Ring. Tis ready, sir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my troth, I tarri too long: Od's me! Qu'as fouldé? here is some simple in my closet, dat I will not for the world I shall leave behind.

Quick. Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be mad!

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet?—Villany! baren! [pulling Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier.

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caius. Verefore shall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. Vat shall de honest man do in my closet? dere is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, he so not so degmatick; hear the truth of it: He came of an errand to me from parson Hugh.

Caius. Vell.

Sim. Ay, forsooth, to desire her to——

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue: Speak-a your tale.

Quick. You, my lord, gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mrs. Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la; but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you!—Rugby, buittle me some paper: Tarry you a little-a while. [Writes.]

Quick. I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy; —But notwithstanding, man, I'll do your master what good I can: and the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, my master. —I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, secur, grass meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quick. Are you advis'd o' that! you shall find it a great charge: and to be up early and down late; —but notwithstanding, (to tell you in your ear; I would have no words of it,) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that, —I know Anne's mind,—that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You Jack'nape; give a dis letter to sir Hugh; by gar, it is a challenge; I will cut his troot in de park; and I will teach a scurvy jack'nape priest to meddle or make:—you may be gene: it is not good you tarry here by gar, I will eat all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to trow at his dog.

[Exit Simple.

Quick. Alas, he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter—a for dat:—do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—by gar, I will kill de Jack Priest; and I have appointed mine host of de Avengers to measure our weapon — by gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well: we must give folks leave to prate: What, the good-ker!

Caius. Rugby, come to de court vit me:—by gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door.—Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Exit Caius and Reyn.

Quick. You shall have An fools-head of your own.

Fent. [Within] Who is within there! ho!

Quick. Who's there, I trow? Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter Fenton.

Fent. How now, good woman; how dost thou?

Quick. The better, that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, thinest thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above: but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you. —Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale; —good faith, it is such another Nan; —but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread: We had an hour's talk of that wart; —I shall never laugh but in that maid's company! But, indeed, she is given too much to allicholly, and musing: But for you—Well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day; Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I? I faith, that we will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence; and of other wooers.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now.

[Exit.

Quick. Farewell to your worship. —Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does: —Out upon't! what have I forgot!

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page's House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a Letter

Mrs. Page. What! have I 'scape'd love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them! Let me see: [Reads.

Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his pretense, he admits him not for his counsellor: You are not young, no more am I; go to then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; Ha! Ha! then there's more sympathy: you love such, and so do I; Would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, mistress Page, (at least, if the love of a soldier can suffice,) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me, 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,
Bu day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his might,
For thee to fight,

John Falstaff.

What a Herold of Jerywy is this?—O wicked, wicked world!—one that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age, to shew himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Dalmash drunkard picked (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company!—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth:—heaven for give me!—Why I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of fat men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house; Mrs. Page. And trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll be'yer believe that; I have to shew to the contrary.

Mistress Page. ' Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do, then; yet, I say, I could shew you to the contrary: O, mistress Page, give me some drink; I am feverish.

Mistress Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one tripling respect, I could come to such honour!

Mistress Page. Hang the triple, woman; take the honour: What is it?—dispense with trifles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted.

Mistress Page. What? thou hast!—sir Alice Ford!

—These knights will hack; and so thou shouldest not alter the article of thy gentry.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light:—here, read, read;—perceive how I might be knighted.—I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: And yet he would not swear; praised women's modesty: And gave such orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have given to the truth of his words: but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the hundredth psalm to the time of Green streets. What tongue, I trow, threw this whole wide with so many tuns of oil in his belly, asbore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mistress Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs.—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names, (sure more,) and these are of the second edition: He will print them out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press when he would put us two. I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why this is the very same; the very hand, the very word: What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I knew not: It makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some strain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding, call you it? I'll be sure to keep him alack-deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I; if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit; and lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses to nine Host of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villain against him, that may not sulie the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an u measurable distance:

Mrs. Ford. I presume are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greasy knight: Come hither. [They retire.

Enter Ford, Pistol, Page, and Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pistol. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pistol. He woos both high and low, both rich and both young and old, one with another, Ford; [poor, He loves the gally-mawry; Ford, perpend.

Ford. Love my wife?

Pistol. With hiver burning hot: Prevent, or go thou, like a betow woman, with Ring-wold at thy heels:—O, edious is the name!

Ford. What name, sir?

Pistol. The horn, I say; Farewell.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

—Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds do away, sir corporal Nym; [Sing— Believe it, Page, he speaks sense. [Exit Pistol.

Ford. I will be patient; I will find out this. [Exit. Nym. And this is true; [To Page.] I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humoured letter to her; but I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the short and long of it: but look you, corporal Nym; I speak, and I avouch. 'Tis true—my name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife.—Adieu! I love not the humour of bread and cheese; and there's the humour of it. Adieu. [Exit Nym.

Ford. Page. The humour of it, quoth 'al! here's a fellow frights his humour out of his wits.

Page. I will seek out Falstaff.

Ford. I never heard such a dawdling, affecting rogue.

Page. If I do find it, well.

Page. I will not believe such a Catan, though the priests of the town commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow: Well.

Page. How now, Meg?

Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George?—Hark you.
Mrs. Ford. How now, sweet Frank? why art thou melancholy?

Host. I melancholy! I am not melancholy.—Get you home, go.

Mrs. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crotches in thy head—Will you go, Mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Have with you.—You'll come to dinner, George? Look, who comes yonder: she shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

[Aside to Mrs. Ford.]

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.

Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good mistress Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and see; we have an hour's talk with you.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.]

Ford. You heard what this knave told me; did you not?

Page. Yes; and you heard what the other told me?

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, so far as I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men: very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that.—Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets of her more than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not disdain my wife; but I would be both to turn them together: A man may be too confident; I would have nothing lie on my head: I cannot have that satisfied.

Page. Look, where my ranting host of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so morily.—How now, mine host?

Enter Host and Shallow.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow.—Good even, and twenty, good master Page! Master Page, will you go with us! we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavalier-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, between sir Hugh the Welsh priest, and Caius the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host d' the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say'st thou, bully-rook?

[They go aside.]

Shal. Will you [to Page.] go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and, I think, he hath appointed them contrary places: for, believe me, I hear, the parson is no jester. Hank, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?

Ford. None, I protest: but I will give you a pottle of burnt sack to give me recourse to him, and tell him, my name is Brook; only for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully: thou shalt have egress and regress; said I well? and thy name shall be Brook: It is a merry knight.—Will you go, cavalieres?

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. Tut, sir, I could have told you more: In these times, you stand on distance, your passes, stocadoes, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword, I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, buys, here, here! shall we wag?

Page. Have with you: I had rather hear them scold than right.

Enter Host, Shallow, and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily: She was in his company at Page's house; and, what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into't: and I have a disguise to sound Falstaff: If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in the Garter Inn

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world's mine oyster, Which I with my sword will open.— I will retort the sum in equipage.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my contentenance to pawn: I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your cough-fellow, Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geniny of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers, and tall fellows: and when mistress Bidget lost the handle of her fan, I took't upon mine honour, thou hadst it not. [pence] Pist. Didst thou not share? hadst thou not fifteen

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: Think'st thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you:—go.—A short knife and a thong;—to your mayor of Pickthatch, go.—You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue!—You stand upon your honour!—Why, thou unconfounded baseness, it is as much as I can do, to keep the terms of my honour precise. I, I, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of heavenly on the left hand, and, being more honourable in my own person, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you rogue, will ensconce your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phrases, and your bold-beating oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you?

Pist. I do relent; What would'st thou more of man?

Enter Robin.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Good morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I'll be sworn; as my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. Do I believe the swearer: What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman: and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one mistress Ford, sir:—I pray, come a little nearer this ways:—I myself dwell with mistress Ford. Do you say.

Fal. Well, on: mistress Ford, you say.—

Quick. Your worship says very true: I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears;—Mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? heaven bless them, and make them honest men! Master Ford.

Fal. Well; mistress Ford;—what of her?

Quick. Why, sir, she's a good creature. Lord! lord! your worship's a wanton: Well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Mistress Ford;—come, mistress Ford,

Quick. marry, this is the short and the long of it; you have brought her into such a canaries, as 'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly, (all musk,) and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such a blaze! as such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her.—I had myself twenty angels given me this morning; but I defy all angels, (in any such sort, as they say,) but in the way of honesty: and, I warrant you, they could never get her, so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all; and yet there has been ears, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she mercery.

Quick. marry, she hath received your letter; for the which she thanks you a thousand times: and she gives you to notify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven!

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot of:—master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealous man, she leads a very frumpold life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven. Woman, commend me to her: I will not fail her.

Quick. Why you say well: but I have another messenger to your worship: mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too:—and let me tell you in your ear, she's an artious a civil modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who'e be the other: and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home; but, she hopes, there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely, I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for'rt!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest, indeed!—they have not so little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed! But mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves; her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page: and, truly, master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life: than she does; do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will; and, truly, she deserves it: for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page: no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a ray-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well; commend me to them both: there's my purse; I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman.—[Exeunt quickly and robin.

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid's carriers:—

Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your fights;

Give fire; she is my prize, or ocean whelm them all.

[Exit pist.]

Fal. Say'st thou so, old jack? go thy ways; I'll make thee a good old fellow than I have done; ye yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expanse of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee: Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter barnesph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one master Broke below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Broke, is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.

Fal. Call him in; [Exit barnesph.] Such Brookes are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah! ha! mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompassed you? go to; via!

Re-enter barnesph, with Ford disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. You're welcome; What's your will? Give us leave, drawer, [Exit barnesph. Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Broke.

Fal. Good master Broke, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you; for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion: for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Truth, and I have a bag of money here troubles; and it will help me to hear it, sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing.

Speak, good master Broke; I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you; and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfectness; but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own; that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Ford. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doting observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her; see'd every slightest occasion, that could but intricately give me night of her; not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given; briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, I am sure, I have received none; unless, perhaps, at a rate which would have carried me at an infinite rate; and that hath taught me to say this:

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that flies, and flying what pursues.

Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that, though she appear honest to me, yet, in other places, she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it:—There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time to exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affections, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks, you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift! she dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself; she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves; I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which are now too strongly embattled against me: What say you to 't, sir John?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your honour next, give me your hand; last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O good sir!

Fal. Master Brook, I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, sir John, you shall want none.

Fal. Want no mistress Ford, Master Brook, you shall want none. I shall be with her, (I may tell you,) by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford? Would any man have thought this?—Enter, Enter, [Exit.

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not:—yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say, the jealous wittily knave hath masses of money; for which the wife to whose I am well-favoured, I will use her as the key of the cuckold's rogue's coffers; and there's my harvest-home.

Ford. I told you, Ford, sir; that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will scare him out of his wits: I will awe him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns; master Brook, thou shalt know, I will predominate o'er the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife. Come to me so late night:—Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his stile; thou master Brook, shalt know him for a knave and cuckold:—come to me soon at night.

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this!—My heart is ready to crack with impatience.—Who says, this is improvident jealousy? My wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, thou knowest, it is made. What names?——Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer, well; Parkinson, well; yet they are devilish names of fiends: but cuckold! Cuckold-cuckold, the devil himself hath not such a name. Page is an ass, a secure ass! he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous; I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welleham with my cheese, an Irishman with my aqua-vitae bottle, or a thief to walk my and cull among them, my wife, with herself; then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises: and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praised for my jealousy!—Eleven o'clock the hour:—I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too soon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit.

SCENE III.—Windsor Park.

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius. Vat is de clock, Jack? Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, that he is no come; he has pray his Bible well, that he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.
Pag. He's wise, sir: he knew, your worship would kill him, if he came.

Caius. By gar, de hanging is no dead, so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack: I will tell you how I will kill him.

Pag. Ala, sir, I cannot fence.

Caius. Villany, take your rapier.

Pag. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Hort, Shallow, Slender, and Page.

Hort. Bless thee, bully Doctor.

Shl. Save you, master doctor Caius.

Page. Now, good master doctors!

Caius. Va! be all you, one, two, tree, four, comefor! Hort. To see thee fight, to see thee foil, to see thee espoo, to see thee here, to see thee there: to see thee pass thy ponsio, thy stock, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is be dead, my Ethipian! is he dead, my Francisco! bully, what says my Esculapius? my Galen! my heart of elder! ha! is he dead, bully State! is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world, and his name is not shown his face.

Hort. Thou art a Castilian king, Urinal! Hector of Greece, my boy?

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that I have six or seven, two, three hours for him, and he is no come.

Shl. His is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should walk against the hair of your professions, is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shl. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a swordsman, I lay my fingers to make one: though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us; we are the sons of women, master Page.

Shl. It will be found so, master Page. Master doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace; you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and gentle churchman: you must go with me, master doctor.

Hort. Parson, guest justice:—A word, monsieur, Muck-water.

Caius. Muck-water! vat is dat?

Hort. Muck-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then I have as much muck-water as de Englishman:—Scary jack-dog priest! by gar, me will cut his ears.

Hort. He will clapper-claw thee lightly, bully. Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Hort. That's, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me will have it.

Hort. And I will provoke him to, or let him go. Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Hort. And moreover, bully.—But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavalier Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore. [Aside to them. Page. Hort. By gar, there, is he.

Hort. He's there; see what humor he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields: will it do well?

Page. We will do it.

Page, Shl., and Slender. Adieu, good master doctor.

[Exit Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Hort. Let him die: but, first, speak thy impatience: throw cold water on thy chofer: so about the mends with me through Frogmore: I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house, a feasting: and thou shalt woo her: Cry' game, said I well?

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat: by gar, I love you: and shall procure a you de good guesa, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, me patients.

Hort. For the which, I will be thy adversary towards Anne Page: said I well!

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; vell said.

Hort. Let us way then.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Evans. I pray you now, good master Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, who calls himself Doctor of Plagues?

Simple. Sir marry, sir, the cityward, the parkward, every way, all Old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.

Evans. I most fekemely desire you, you will also look that way.

Simple. I will, sir.

Evans. Pless my soul! how full of cholers I am, and head-aching of me! I shall be glad if he have deceased me:—how melancholy am I!—I will know his urinals about his knave's costard, when I have good opportunities for the 'ock—pless my soul.

[Leaves.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds ring madrigals;
These will we make our pets of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.

To shalow—

Mercy on me! I have a great disposition to cry.

Melodious birds ring madrigals:
When as I sat in Babylon,
And a thousand varous posies.

To shalow—

Simple. Wond'r he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Evans. He's welcome:—

To shallow rivers, to whose falls—

Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he?

Simple. No weapons, sir: There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman from Frogmore, over the ridles, this way.

Evans. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. How now, master parson? Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Simple. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Evans. 'Pless you from his merry sake, all of you!—

Shallow. What, the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?

Evans. There is reasons and causes for it.
Page. We are come to you, to do a good office, master parson.

Ern. Well; what is it?

Page. Vnder is a most reverend gentleman, who, beleeke, having receiued wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience, that ever you saw.

Snel. I have lived fourscore years, and upward; I never heard of a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wise of his own respect.

Ern. What is he?

Page. I think you know him; master doctor Cairns, the renowned French physician.

Ern. Go't will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.

Page. Why?

Ern. He has no more knowledge in Hicobrates and Galen,—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desire to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Snel. O, sweet Anne Page!

Snel. It appears so, by his weapons;—Keep them answer—here comes doctor Cairns.

Enter Host, Cairns, and Rugg.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Snel. So do you, good master doctor.

Rugg. Draw them, and let them questions; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

Cairns. I pray you, let-a me speak a word with your ear;—Verefore will you not meet-a me?

Ern. Pray you, use your patience. In good time.

Cairns. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog.

John apc.

Ern. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humour: I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amends,—I will knog your urinal about your knife's cogcomb, for missing your meetings and appointments.

Cairns. Diddle!—Jack Rugg,—mine host of Jartertter, have I lost stay for him, to kill him I have not as yet avenged.

Ern. As I am a christian soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed: I'll be judgment; by mine host of the Garnet.

Host. Page. I say, Guilla and Gaul, French and Welch; soul-curer and body-curer.

Cairns. Ay, that is very good! excellent.

Host. Peace, I say; hear mine host of the Garnet.

Ern. Am I politic? am I subtle? am I a Machiavel? shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the medicines. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the nouns. Give me your hand, hierosoma; so, give me thy hand, civilis; so,—Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places; your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burns sack by the issue.—Come, lay their sweats to pawn;—Follow me, had of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Shel. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

Snel. O, sweet Anne Page!

[Exit Shallow, Slender, Page, and Host.

Cairns. Hal! do I perceive dat? have you made de sort of us? ha, ha!

Ern. This is well; he has made us his vounting-stog,—I desire you, that we may be friends; and let us kneel our prayers together, to be revenge on this same sillly scorry, copping companion, the host of the Garnet.

Cairns. By gar, vir all my heart; he promise to bring me vere in Anne Page; by gar, he deceive me too.

Ern. Well, I will write his noddes;—Pray you, follow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mistress Page and Rowan.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your war, little gallant; you want not to be a childer. But now you are a leader; Whitney had you rather, head main eyes, or eye your master's heels?

Hit. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a awarti.

Mrs. Page. O, you are a flattering boy: now, I see, you'll be a courtier.

Enter Page.

Page. Well met, mistress Page; Whither go you? Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife; Is she at home?

Page. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of company: I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mrs. Page. Be sure of that,—two other husbands.

Page. Where had you this pretty weathercock? Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the steeple whose name is my husband had him of: What do you call your kinsman, Sir John Falstaff?

Hit. Sir John Falstaff.

Page. Sir John Falstaff?

Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on his name.

—There is such a league between my good man and he,—is your wife at home, indeed?

Page. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir;—I am sick till I see her.

Host. Mrs. Page and Rowan.

Page. Has Page any bane? hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a better twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pieces out his wife's incitement; he give her folly motion and advantage; and now his wife, and Falstaff's boy with her. A man may hear this shower-sing in the wind; and Falstaff's boy with her.—Good priests;—they are bad; and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so-sneaking mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a squire and willful Aramais: and to these violent proceeding all my neighbours shall cry aim. [Clock strikes.] The Groot gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there shall find Falstaff! I shall be rather praised for this, than mocked; for it is as positive as the earth is firm; that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Sir Hugh Evans, Cairns, and Rugg.

Page. Trust me, a good knot; I have good cheer at home; and, I pray you, all go with me.

Shel. I must excuse myself; master Page.

Snel. And so must I, sir; we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I 'll speak of.

Shel. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer.
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SENE. I hope I have your good will, father Page.
Page. You have, master Slender; I stand wholly for you; - but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Cain. Ay, by g'ar; and the maid is love a-me; my mash-a-Quickly tell me so mush.

Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holyday, he smells April and May: he will carry'y, he will carry' t; "tis in his buttons; he will carry' t.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Pains; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. No, he shall not knot a foot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply; the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will shew you a monster. - Master doctor, you shall go; - so shall you, master Page; and you, sir Hugh.

[Exeunt.]

Ford. Well, fare you well: - we shall have the freer working at master Page's.

[Curtain falls between Shallow and Slender.

Cain. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

[Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.

[Exit Host.

Ford. [Aside.] I think I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I'll make him dance. - Will you go, gentles? -

All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. - A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert!
Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly; is the buck-basket -

Enter Servants, with a basket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering,) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whistlers in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddied ditch, close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction: - Do gone, and come when you are called.

[Exeunt Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

[Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyas musket? what news with you?

Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, and says, Ford; and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn: My master knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for, he swears, he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Ford. Well, John, a good boy: this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. - I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so: - Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue.

[Exit Robin.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, kiss me.

Mrs. Ford. Go to then; we'll use this unwholesome humility, this gross watery pumposon; - we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

[Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly joveel? Why, not; so me, for I have lived long enough; this is the period of my ambition; O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O sweet sir John!

Fal. Mrs. Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead; I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, sir John! alas! I should be a sight, lady: But, come, and thou dost not hit me.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, there's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog, and say, thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping-haw-thorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Buckler's-bury in simple-time; I cannot; but I love thee; none but thee, and thou dost not hit me.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir; for I am, you love mistress Page.

Fal. Thou might'st as well say, I love to walk by the Counter-gate; which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kin.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows, how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll desire it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind.

Rob. [within.] Mistress Ford, mistress Ford! here's mistress Page at the door, sweating, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me; I will ensconce me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. I pray you, do so: she's a very tattling woman. -

[Falstaff hides himself.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now?

Mrs. Ford. O, mistress Ford, what have you done? You're sham'd, you are overthrown, you are undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, mistress Ford! having ACT III.—SCENE III.

FORD. True, master Page.—Up, gentlemen; you shall make sport anon: follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.]

Page. This is very fantastical humour and jealousies.

CAISUS. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search. [Exeunt Evans, Page, and Caius.]

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this? Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or Sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband asked what was in the basket?

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being there; for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that: And we will give him some tricks with Falstaff; his dissolute disease will scarcely obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish caitiff, mistress Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it; let him be sent for tomorrow eight o'clock, to have amended.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that? [Aside to Mrs. F. Mrs. Ford. [Aside.] Ay, ay, peace.—You use me well, master Ford, do you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

FORD. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Evans. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment!

Caius. By gar, nor I too; dere is no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Eva. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest a 'omans, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well;—I promised you a dinner.—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife:—come, mistress Page; I pray you, pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a binding together: I have a fine hawk for the bud: Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make a de tord.

Eva. In your teeth: for shame.
Ford. Pray you go, master Page.

Exit. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knife, mine host.

Color. But is good: by gar, vit all my heart,

Exit. A lousy knife; to have his gibes and his mockerys. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Mistress Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love; Therefore no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself. He doth object, I am too great of birth; And that, my state being gall'd with my experience, I seek to heal it only by his wealth; Besides these, other bars he lays before me,— My riots past, my wild societies; And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible I should love thee, but as a property, Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come! Albeit, I will confess, thy father's wealth Was the first motive that I woo'd thee, Anne: Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags; And 'tis the very riches of thyself That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton, Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir: If opportunity and humblest suit Cannot attain it, why then.—Hark you further. [They converse apart.

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly; my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Sten. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on't: slid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not dismay'd.

Sten. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that,—but that I am afraid.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him—This is my father's choice. O, what a world of vile ill-favoured faults! Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year! [Aside. Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you. Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hadst a father! Sten. I had a father, mistress Anne;—my uncle, can tell you good jests of him:—Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Shall. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Sten. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Sten. Ay, that I will, come out and long-tail, under the degree of a'squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you coz: I'll leave you.

Anne. Now, master Slender.

Sten. Now, good mistress Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Sten. My will? 'od's heartlings, that's a pretty jest, indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise. Anne. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?

Shall. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you: Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, so: if not, happy man be his deal! They can tell you how things go, better than I can: You may ask your father: here he comes.

Enter Page and Mistress Page.

Page. Nay, master Slender:—Love him, daughter Anne.— Why, how now! what does master Fenton here? You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, good master Fenton. Come, master Shallow; come, son Slender; in— Knowing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton. [Exeunt Page, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Quick. Speak to mistress Page. [daughter,

Fent. Good mistress Page, for that I love your In such a righteous fashion as I do, Perforce, against all checks, rebukes, and manners, I must once the colors of my love, And not retire: Let me have your good will. Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond' fool. Mrs. Page. I mean it nut: I seek you a better husband.

Quick. That's my master, master doctor. Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick i'the earth, And bowl'd to death with turnips.

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself: Good master Fenton, I will not be your friend, nor enemy: My daughter will I question how she loves you, And as I find her, so am I affected; Till then, farewell, sir,—She must needs go in; Her father will be angry. [Exit Mrs. PAGE and Anne. Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress; farewell, Nan. Quick. This is my doing now;—Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? Look on master Fenton;—this is my doing. Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night Give my sweet Nan this ring: There's for thy pains. [Exit.

Quick. Now heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet, I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them all three; for so I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word; but scarcely for master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses; What a beast am I to slack it? [Exit.

SCENE V.— A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, I say,—

Bard. Here, sir.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in't. [Exit BARDOLPH. ] Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barber of butcher's offal; and to be thrown into the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains taken out, and butter'd, and given to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drown'd a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen of the litter: and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow. For a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swallowed? I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph, with the wine.

Bard. Here's mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, woman.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. By your leave; I cry you mercy: Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices: Go, brew me a bottle of sack finely.

Bard. With eggs, sir?

Fal. Simple of itself; I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. —[Exit Bardolph.—]—How now?

Quick. Marry, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the mistress: I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mis-took their erection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine; I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her: Tell her so; and bid her think what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say'st thou?

Quick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.

Quick. Peace be with you, sir. —[Exit.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Broke; he sent me word to stay within; I like his money well. O here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir!

Fal. Now, master Broke? you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife.

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business. Fal. Master Broke, I will not lie to you; I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And how sped you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, master Broke.

Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

Fal. No, master Broke; but the peaking cornuto her husband, master Broke, dwelling in a continual 'larm of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his request of his companion, hath provoked and instigated by his distemper, and sooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, by her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket: rammed me in with a couple of Ford's knives, his hands, were called forth, as I thought, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet-lane: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knife their master in the door; who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket: I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knife would have searched me, and ordered him to be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Broke: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether: next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of that: —a man of my kidney, —think of that: that am as subject to heat, as butter; a man of continual dis-solution and thaw; it was a miracle, to 'scape suffoca-tion. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stove in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be unsaddled, and thrown into the Thames, like a muck-bucket, hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe; think of that, —hissing hot, —think of that, master Broke.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is desperate; you'll undertake her no more.

Fal. Master Broke, I will be thrown into Etta, as I have been into Thames, ere I leave her thus. Her husband is this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another embassy of meeting; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, master Broke.

Ford. 'Tis past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to your appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I sped; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: Adieu. You shall have her, master Broke; master Broke, you shall cuckold Ford.

—[Exit.

Ford. Hum! ha! is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake; awake, master Ford; there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford! If this be to be married! this 'tis to have linens, and buck-baskets! —Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the lecher; he is at my house: he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should; he cannot creep into a half-penny purse, nor into a pepper-box: but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and Williams.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quick. Sure he is by this; or will be presently: but truly he is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by; I'll but bring my young man here to school; Look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh! no school to-day?

Evans. No; master Slender is let the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart!

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book; I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.

Evans. Come hither, William; hold up your head and come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; answer your master, he not afraid.

Evans. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more; because they say, o'd. nouns.

Evans. Peace your tattlings. What is fair, William?

Will. Pulcheria.

Quick. Poulets! there are fairer things than poulets sure.

Evans. You are a very simplicity oman; I pray you, peace. What is lapsis, William?

Will. A stone.

Evans. And what is a stone, William?

Will. A pebble.

Evans. No, it is lapsis; I pray you remember in your prayer.

Will. Lapis.

Evans. That is good, William. What is he, William, that does fend articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominative, hic, haec, hoc;

Evans. Nominative, his, hæ, hag, hag; — pray you, mark: genitiva, hujus: Well, what is your accusative case?

Will. Accusativa, hine.

Evans. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; Accusativa, hing, hang, hag.

Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Evans. Leave your prables, oman; What is the locative case, William?

Will. O—locutio, O.

Evans. Remember, William, locutio is caret.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Evans. Oman, forgets.

Mrs. Page. Peace.

Evans. What is your genitive case, plural, William;

Will. Genitive case?

Mrs. Ford. I am undone!—the knight is here.
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

Mrs. Page. Why then you are utterly ashamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you?—Away with him, away with him; better shame than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I Bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. No, I'll come no more i'the basket: May I not go out ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Alas, three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away ere he came. But what make you here?

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Page. There they always used to discharge their birding pieces: Creep into the kiln-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffers, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath been about for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: There is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. I'll go out then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John. Unless you go out disguised,—

Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Fal. I know not. There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Fal. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too: Run up, sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John: mistress Page, and I, will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick; we shall come dress you straight: put on the gown the while.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. I would, my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears, she's a witch; forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel; and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and he talks of the basket too, howsoever he had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently: let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. 'I'll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight.

[Exit]

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough. We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh; 'Tis old but true, Still swine eat all the daff. [Exit.

Re-enter Mrs. Fonn, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sir, take the basket again on your shoulders; your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him: quickly, dispatch. [Exit.

1 Serv. Come, come, take it up.

2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of the knight again.

1 Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the basket, villain:—Somebody call my wife:—You, youth, in a basket, come out here!—O, you pandy rascal! there's a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me: Now shall the devil be shamed. What! wife, I say! come, forth:—behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned.

Ford. Why, this is lunacies! this is mad as a mad dog!

Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir.—Come hither, mistress Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous foot to her husband!—I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, brazen-face; hold it out.—Come forth, sirrah [Pulls the clothes out of the basket.

Page. This passes!

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Eva. 'Tis unreasonable! Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket: Why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable: Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a heretic.

Page. Here's no man.

Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, master Ford; this wrongs you.

Eva. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealously.

Ford. Well, he's not here, I seek for.

Page. No, nor no where else, but in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, shew no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman. Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What hoa, mistress Page! come you, and the old woman, down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a queen, an old cozening queen!
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she! We are simple men; we do not know what's breathed to pass under the profession fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this is; beyond our element: we know nothing. --Come down, you witch, you hag you; come down, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband; --good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in women's clothes, led by Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, mother Frat, come, give me your hand.

Ford. I'll pray her: --Out of my door, you witch, [beats him.] you rag, you baggage, you pole-cat, you ronyen! out! out! I'll confound you, I'll forswear you. [Exit Falstaff.]

Mrs. Page. Are you not ashamed? I think, you have killed the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it: --Tis a goody credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch! E'en, by yea and no, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed! I like not when a 'oman has a great beard; I like not when a 'oman wears her muffler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow; see but the issue of my jealousy; if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.

Page. Let's obey his humour a little further: Come, gentlemen.

[Exit Page, Ford, Shallow, and Evans.]

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully, methought.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel hallowed, and hung o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if he be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts, the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publicly shamed; and, methinks, there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly shamed.

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it then, shape it: I would not have things cool.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Bardolph. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court: Let me speak with the gentlemen; they speak English.

Bardolph. Ay, sir; I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses; but I'll make them pay, I'll sauce them: they have had my houses a week at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must come off; I'll sauce them: Come.

[Exeunt.]
Let the supposed fairies pitch him sound,
And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known,
We'll present ourselves; dis-burn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must
Be practised well to this, or they'll ne'er do't.

Eva. I will teach the children their behaviours;
And I will be like a Jack-an-apes also, to burn
the knight with my taber.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go buy them vizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all
Finely attired in a robe of white. [fairy.

Page. 'tis not silk will I go buy;—and in that tune
Shall master Slender steal my Nan away, [Aside.

And marry her at Eton.—Go, send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again, in name of Brook;
He'll tell me all his purpose: Sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that: Go, get us properties,
And tricking for our fairies.

Eva. Let us about it! It is admirable pleasures,
And fery honest knavery.

Mrs. Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, mistress Ford,
Send quickly to sir John, to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

I'll to the doctor; he hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.
That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot;
And his best wife for all affects:
The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thick-kin? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

Sim. Sir, I come to speak with sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and trusty bed, 'tis painted about with the story of the prodigal, fresh and new: Go, knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropophagous unto thee; Knock, I say.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber; I'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed: I'll call.—Bullly knight! Bullly sir John! speak from thy lungs military: Art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [above.] How now, mine host! Host. There's a Bohemian-Tartar coming down of thy fat woman; let her descend, bull; let her descend; my chambers are honourable; Fye! privacy! Fye!

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was, mine host, an old fat woman, even now with me; but she's gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it, muscle-shell; What would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, ray master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Marry, she says, that the very same man, that beguiled master Slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sim. I would, I could have spake with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Host. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they are nothing but mistress Anne Page; to know if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Fal. To have her,—or no: Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be so bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir Tike; who more bold?

Sim. I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit Simple. Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, sir John: 'Waste shall a wise woman with thee?'

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage! mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses! speak well of them, varletto.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners: for so soon as I came before Eton, they threw me off, from behind one of them; in a slough of mire; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Danes.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say, they be fled; Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir HUGH EVANS.

Eva. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Eva. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me, there is three cousin germans, that have cozened all the hosts of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good-will, look you; you are wise, and full of gibe and vouting-stogs; and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened: Fare you well.

[Exit.

Enter Dr. CAIUS.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de Jarnsey?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat: But it is tell-a me, dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jarnomy; by my troth, dere is no duke, dat de court is know to come; I tell you for good vill: aileu.

Host. Hue and cry, villain, go:—assist me, knight; I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone! [Exit Host and BARDOLPH.

Fal. I would, all the world might be cozened; for I have been cozened, and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court, how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgelled, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me; I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits,
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

 till I were as crest-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I foreswore myself at prime. Well, if my will were, but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. —

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now! whence come you? Quickly. From the two parties, forsooth. Falstaff. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both bestowed! I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconstancy of man’s disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have they not suffered? Yes, I warrant; speciously one of them; mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell’st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me, the knave costable had set me in the stocks, I the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber: you shall hear how things go; and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exit Quick.]

SCENE VI. — Another room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy, I will give over all.”[p. 95] Fenton. Yet hear me speak: Assist me in my purpose. And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold, more than your loss.

Host. I will hear you, master Fenton; and I will, at the least, keep your counsel.

Fenton. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I hear to fair Anne Page; Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection. (So far forth as herself might be her chooser.) Even to my wish: I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at; The wharf whereof so larded with my matter, That neither, singly, can be manifested, Without the show of both;—wherein fat Falstaff Hath a great scene: the image of the jest. [Shewing the letter.] I'll shew you here at large. Hawk, good mine host: To-night at Herne's oak, just 'twixt twelve and one. Must my sweet Nan present the fairy queen: The purpose why, is here; in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eton Immediately to marry: she hath consented:

Now, sir, Her mother, even strong against that match, And firm for Dr. Caius, hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasking of their minds. And at the deannery, where a priest attends, Straight marry her: to this her mother's plot She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor:—Now thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white; And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand, and bid her go,

She shall go with him: her mother hath intended, The better to denote her to the doctor. (For they must all be masked and warded,) That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrobb'd, With ribbands pendant, flaring 'bout her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and, on that token, The maid hath given consent to go with him.

Host. Which means she to deceive? father or mother? Fenton. Both, my good host, to go along with me: And here it rests,—that you'll procure the vicar To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one, And, in the lawful name of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony.

Host. Well, husband your device; I'll to the vicar: Being about maid, you shall not lack a priest.

Fenton. So shall I ever more be bound to thee; Besides, I'll make a present recompense. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. — A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Falstaff. Pr'ythee, no more prattling; go.—I'll hold this: This is the third time; I hope, good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in activity, chance, or death.—Away.

Quick. I'll provide you a chain; and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Falstaff. Away, I say; time wears: hold up your head, and mine. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.]

Enter Ford.

Now how, master Brook? Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Falstaff. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man: but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave, Ford or Whipp'd, has the fairest and devilishest devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you. —He beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam; because I know also, life is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me; I'll tell you all, master Brook. —Since I blug'd gone, play'd truant, and whipp'd top, I know not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford: on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand. —Follow: Strange things in hand, master Brook! follow. [Exit.]

SCENE II. — Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll couch I the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies. —Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

Shall. Ay, forsooth: I have spoken with her, and we have a say-word, how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry, mum; she cries budget; and by that we know one another.

Shall. That's good too; but what needs either your mum, or her budget? the white will decipher her well enough. —It bath struck ten o'clock.
Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven, prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and despatch it quickly; Go before into the park; we two must go together.

Caius. I know vat I have to do; Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius. My husband will not rejoin so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Ithum?

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the nig. A Welch Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely. [lurchery. Mrs. Page. Against such levies, and their Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on; to the oak, to the oak! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Exe. Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you; Come, come; trib, trib. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff, disguised with a buck's head on.

Fal. The Windsor hell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on: Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me.—Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O, powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man; in some other, a man a beast.—You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda:—O, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose?—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl; think on't, Jove; a foul fault.—When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, I the forest: rend me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer? Fal. My doe with the black scut?—Let the sky rain sack, let it thunder to the tune of Green Streets; hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here. [Embracing her.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Fal. Divide me like a bribe-buck, each a haunch:

I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bespeak you your husbands. Am I a woodman? ha! Speak I like Horne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome! [Noise within.

Mrs. Page. Ahas! what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Fal. What should this be?

Mrs. Ford. [Away. Mrs. Page. Away, away. [They run off. Fal. I think, the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a satyr; Mrs. Quickly, and Pistol; Anne Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with woven tapes on their heads.

Quick. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, You moon-shine revellers, and shades of night, You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny, Attend our office, and your quality, Crie Hobegoblin, make the fairy o-yes.

Pist. Elves, list your names; silence, you any toys.

Cricket, to Windsor chimney's shait thou leap; Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept, There pinch the maids as blue as hillberry; Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttish.

Fal. They are fairies; he, that speaks to them, shall die:

I'll wink and coach: no man their works must eye. [Dies down upon his face.

Eva. Where's Pede?—Go you, and where you find a maid, That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said, Raise up the organs of her fantasy.

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy; But those as sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

Quick. About, about; Search Windsor-castle, elves, within and out; Strew potterock, ouphes, on every sacred room; That it may stand till the peripatetic don, In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit; Worthy the owner, and the owner it. The several chairs of order look you scour With juice of balm, and every precious flower. Each fair installment, coat, and several crest, With royal blazon, evermore be blest! And nightly, meadow-fairies, look, you sing, Like to the Garter's compass, in a ring: The expression that it bears, green let it be, More fertile-fresh than all the field to see; And, Hong soit qui mal y pense, write, In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white: Like sapthire, pearl, and rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knight Hood's bending knee: Fairies use flowers for their characterity.

Away; disperse: But, till 'tis one o'clock, Our dance of custom, round about the oak Of Horne the hunter, let us not forget.

Eva. Pray you, look hand in hand; yourselves in order set; And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be, To guide our measure round about the tree. But, stay: I smell a man of middle earth. Fal. Heaven defend me from that Welch fairy! lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

Pist. Vile worm, thou wast o'erlook'd even in thy birth.
Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
I'll call a servant in one instant heart.

Pist. A trial, come.

Eva. Come, will this wood take fire?
[They burn him with their taper.

Fal. Oh, oh, oh! Quick. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!
About him, fairies; sing a scornful rhyme;
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

Eva. It is right; indeed he is full of lecheries and iniquity.

SONG.—Fue on sinful fantasy!
Fue on lust and luxury!
Last is but a bloody fire,
Kindled with unchaste desire,
Fed in heart; whose flames aspire,
As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher.

Punch him, fairies, mutually;
Punch him for his villany;
Punch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and star-light, and noon-shine be out.

During this song, the fairies pinch Falstaff. Doctor Cokes comes one way, and steals away a fairy in green; Slender another way, and takes off a fairy in white; and Fenton comes, and steals away Mrs. Anne Page. A noise of hunting is made within. All the fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck's head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford.
They lay hold on him.

Page. Nay, do not fly: I think, we have watch'd you now.

Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn?

Mrs. Page. I pray you, come; hold up the jest no higher.

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you there, husband? do not these fair yokes Become the forest better than the town?

Ford. Now, sir, who's a cuckold now?—Master Brook, Falstaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook: And, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-basket, his buck-basket, and the sound of money; which must be paid to master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when 'tis upon ill employment.

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve God, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pine you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. I have laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, to some purpose to prevent so gross an over-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welsh goat too? Shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Seese is not good to give putter; your jelly is all putter.

Fal. Seese and putter! have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust and late walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hedge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and methergins, and to drinkings, and swellings, and starrings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel: ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me; use me as you will.

Ford. Now, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander: over and above that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that to go make amends.

Forbge to the turn, and so we'll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here's my hand; all's forgiven at last.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: Tell her, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Cusin's wife.

[Aside.

Enter SLENDER.

Slen. Whoa, ho! ho! father Page!

Page. Son! how now? how now, son? have you despatched?

Slen. Despatched!—I'll make the best in Grocers.

Page. What, have you?

Slen. I came yonder at Elton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she's a great tubbly boy; If it had not been for the church, I would have swung him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life then you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white, and cry'd mum, and she cry'd whizige, as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Eva. John Barn! master Slender, cannot you see but marry boys?

Page. I am vexed at heart: What shall I 1 do?

Slen. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deaider, and there married.
ACT V.—SCENE V. 85

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vene is mistress Page? By gar, I am coerced: I ha' married us garzon, a boy; un parson, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am coerced.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you not take her in green?

Caius. Ay, be gar, and 'tis a boy: be gar, I'll raise all Windsor.

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me: Here comes master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, master Fenton?

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, pardon!

Page. Now, mistress? how chance you went not with master Slenor?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?

Fent. You do amaze her: Hear the truth of it.

You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love.

The truth is, she and I, long since contracted, Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us.

Of this play there is a tradition preserved by Mr. Rowe, that it was written at the command of queen Elizabeth, who was so delighted with the character of Falstaff, that she wished it to be diffused through more plays; but suspecting that it might pass by continued uniformity, directed the poet to diversify his manner, by showing him in love. No task is harder than that of writing to the ideas of another. Shakespeare knew what the queen, if the story be true, seems not to have known—that by any real passion of tenderness, the selfish craft, the careless jollity, and the lazy luxury of Falstaff must have suffered so much abatement, that little of his former cast would have remained. Falstaff could not love, but by ceasing to be Falstaff. He could only counterfeit love, and his professions could be prompted, not by the hope of pleasure, but of money. Thus the poet approached as near as he could to the work enjoined him; yet knowing, perhaps, in the former plays, completed his own idea, seems not to have been able to give Falstaff all his former power of entertainment.

This comedy is remarkable for the variety and number of the personages, who exhibit more characters appropriated and discriminated, than perhaps can be found in any other play. Whether Shakespeare was the first that produced upon the English stage the effect of language distorted and depraved by provincial or foreign pronunciation, I cannot certainly decide. This mode of forming ridiculous characters can confer praise only on him who originally discovered it, for it requires not much of either wit or judgment: its success must be derived almost wholly from the player, but its power in a skillful mouth, even he that despises it, is unable to resist.

The conduct of this drama is deficient; the action begins and ends often, before the conclusion, and the different parts might change places without inconvenience; but its general power, that power by which all works of genius shall finally be tried, is such, that perhaps it never yet had reader or spectator who did not think it too soon at the end.—JOHNSON.
TWELFTH NIGHT:

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL.

There is no edition of this play earlier than the first folio in 1623. Mr. Malone supposes, that it was produced in the year 1600; but there is no evidence either to support, or refute such a supposition. Mr. Chalmers conceives that it was written in 1613.—If any probable conjecture respecting its date may be derived from the merits of the work, I should have little hesitation in ranking this among our author's latest productions. It is marked by the ease and certainty of an experienced hand. There is nothing superfluous. Every passage tends to the effect designed. No part could be abstracted without material injury to the beauty of the whole. The serious portiae of the comedy may have been taken from the seventh history of the fourth volume of Belleforest's Histoires Frangaises. The comic scenes and characters appear to have been entirely Shakespeare's own. The commentators have discovered that Jonson designed to ridicule Twelfth Night, in Every Man out of his Humour.—Milton says in Act 3, of that play, "The argument of this comedy might have been of some other manner, as of a Duke to be in love with a Countess, and this Countess to be in love with the Duke's son, and the son in love with the lady's waiting-maid: some such cross wooing, with a clown to their serving-men, &c."—Where Mr. Steevens found the point of this passage, I am unable to say.—In Twelfth Night there is no Countess in love with a Duke's son, nor any Duke's son in love with a waiting-maid. "What is more to the purpose," says Mr. Gifford, "Ben Jonson's play was written at least a dozen years before Twelfth Night appeared.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

OBERON, Duke of Illyria.
SEBASTIAN, a young gentleman, brother to Viola.
ANTONIO, a sea captain, friend to Sebastian.
A sea captain, friend to Viola.
VALENTE, CURIO, gentlemen attending on the Duke.
Sir Toby Belch, uncle of Olivia.
Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.
MALVOLIO, steward to Olivia.
FABIAN, Clown, servants to Olivia.
OLIVIA, a rich Countess.
VIOLA, in love with the Duke.
MARIA, Olivia's woman.

ORDERS, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and other Attendants.

SCENE.—A city in Illyria; and the sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Curio, Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on,
Give me excess of it: that surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.—
That strain again;—it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odour.—Enough; no more;
'Tis not so sweet now, as it was before.
O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou!
That, notwithstanding thy capacity,
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there.
Of what validity and pitch soever,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute! so full of shapes is fancy,
That it alone is high-fantastical.
Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?
Duke. What, Curio?
Cur. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:
O when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought, she pur'd the air of pestilence;

That instant was I turn'd into a hart;
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds, after E'er since pursue me.—How now? what news from

Enter VALENTINE.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at amorous view;
But, like a cloistress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh,
And lasting, in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she, that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To prove the spice of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich, golden shaft,
Hath kill'd the stock of all affections else
That live in her! when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd,
(Her sweet perfections,) with one self king!—
Away before me to sweet beds of flowers;
Love-thoughts lie rich, when casquetted with bowers.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The sea-coast.

Enter VIOLA, Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?
Cap. Illyria, lady.
Vio. And what should I do in Illyria?
My brother he is in Elysium. [sailors]
Perchance, he is not 'drownd.'—What think you,
Cap. It is perchance, that you yourself were saved.
Vio. O my poor brother! and so, perchance, may he be.
[Chance,]
Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with Assurance yourself, after our ship did split,
When you, and that poor number saved with you,
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself
(Courage and hope both teaching him the practice)
To a strong mast, that lived upon the sea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so, there's gold.
ACT I.—SCENE III.

Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Where to thy speech serves for authority,
The like of him. Know'st thou this country?
Cap. Ay, madam; well; for I was bred and born,
Not three hours' travel from this very place.
Vio. Who governs here?
Cap. A noble duke, in nature,
And in his name.
Vio. What is his name?
Cap. Orsino.
Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him:
He was a bachelor then.
Cap. And so is now.
Or was so very late: for but a month
Ago I went from hence; and then twas fresh
In my mind (as, you know, what great ones do,
The less will prattle of) that he did seek
The love of fair Olivia.
Vio. What's she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving her
In the protection of his son, her brother.
What time she was young, and whose dear love,
They say, she hath abjured the company
And sight of men.
Vio. O, that I served that lady!
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is.
Cap. That were hard to compass;
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the duke's.
Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
Conceal me what I am; and be my aid
For such disguise as, haply, shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke;
Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him,
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing,
And play, and to him in many sorts of music,
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap, to time I will commit;
Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.
Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be;
When my tongue shalls, then let mine eyes not see!
Vio. I thank thee: Lead me on. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure, 'sors are an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth, sir Toby; you must come in earlier o' nights; your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than I am; these clothes are good enough to drink in,
and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you:
I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here, to be her wooer.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague check?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats; he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fye, that you'll say so! he plays o' the vuol-de-gambo, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed,—almost natural: for, beside's that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the proudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels, and substractors, that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece; I'll drink to her, as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria: He's a coward, and a custy, and will drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a paradis-top. What, wench? Castellano-volto; for here comes Sir Andrew Ague-face.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! how now, sir Toby!

Sir To. Sweet sir Andrew?

Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.

Sir To. And you too, sir.

Sir And. Accost, sir Andrew, accost.

Sir And. What's that?

Sir To. My niece's chamber-maid.

Sir And. Good mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good mistress Mary Accost,——

Sir To. You mistake, knight: accost, is, front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of accost?

Mar. Accost are you well, gentlemen.

Sir To. An thou let part so, Sir Andrew, would thou might'st never draw sword again.

Sir And. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

Sir And. Marry, but you shall have; and here's my hand.

Mar. Now, sir, thought is free: I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Sir And. Wherefore, sweet heart? what's your metaphor?

Mar. It's dry, sir.

Sir And. Why, I think so; I am not such an ass, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Mar. A dry jest, sir.

Sir And. Are you full of them?

Mar. Ay, sir; I have them at my fingers' ends:
merry, now I let go your hand, I am barren.

[Exit Maria.

Sir To. O knight, thou lack'st a cup of canary:
When did I see thee so put down?

Sir And. Never in your life, I think, unless you see canary put me down: Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian, or an ordinary man has: but I am a great eater of beef, and, I believe, that does harm to my wit.

Sir To. No question.
Sir And. An I thought that, I'd forsware it. I'll ride home to morrow, sir Toby.

Sir To. Pourquoi, my dear knight?

Sir And. What's 'pourquoi'? do or do not I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues, that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting; O, had I but followed the arts!

Sir To. Then hadst thou an excellent head of hair.

Sir And. Why, would that have mended my hair?

Sir To. Past question; for thou seest it will not curl by nature.

Sir And. But it becomes me well enough, don't it?

Sir To. Excellent; it hangs like flax on a distaff; and I hope to see a housewife take thee between her legs, and spin it off.

Sir And. Faith, I'll home to-morrow, sir Toby; your niece will not be seen; or, if she be, 'tis four to one she'll none of me: the count himself, her hard by, wears her.

Sir To. She'll none o' the count; she'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear it. Tut, there's life in't, man.

Sir And. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' the strangest mind in the world; I delight in newcaps and reveals sometimes altogether.

Sir To. Art thou good at these kick-shaws, knight?

Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters; and yet I will not compare with an old man.

Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

Sir And. Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir To. And I can cut the motion to't.

Sir And. Ay, And, I think, I have the back-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

Sir To. Wherefore are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take dust, like mistress Mull's picture? why must thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a cart? My very walk should be a gig; I would not so much as make water, but in a sink, apace. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flam-boyant colour. Shall we set about some verses?

Sir To. What shall we doke? were we not born under Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus; that's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper: ha! higher: ha! ha!—excellent!

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in man's attire.

Val. If the Duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be made much advanced; he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love: is he constant, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe no.

Enter Duke, Cesario, and Attendants.

Duke. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Viola. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile abed.—Cesario,

Then know't no less but all; I have unchasp'd To thee the look even of my secret soul.

Therefore, good youth, address thy gazit unto her; Be not deny'd access, stand at her doors,

And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow,

Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord,

If she be so abandoned to her sorrow
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duke. Be chunmrous, and keep all civil bonds,

Rather than make unprocted return.

Vio. Say, I do speak with her, my lord: What then?

Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love

Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith.

It shall become thee well to act my woes;

She will attend it better in thy youth,

Than in a nervous of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it;

For they shall yet belie thy happy years,

That said, thou art a man: Diana's lip

Is not more smooth, and rousious: thy small pipe

Is as the master's organ, shrill, and sound,

And all is submissive a woman's part:

I know, thy constipation is right apt

For this affair:—Some four, or five, attend him;

All, if you will; for I myself am best,

When least in company:—Prosper well in this,

And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord,

To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best,

To woo your lady: yet, [dact.] a bardist sirsie.

Who'er I woo, myself would be his wife. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips, so wide as a horse may enter, in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me; be, that is well hanged in this world, needs to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good better answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born, of, I fear no colours.

Clo. Why, good mistress Mary?

Mar. In the streets; and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hanged, for being so long absent: or, to be turned away; is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolved then?

Clo. Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points.

Mar. That, if one break, the other will hold, or, if both break, your geckons fall.

Clo. Apt, in good faith; very apt! Well, go thy way; if sir Toby would have drinking, thou mayst artaway a piece of Ewe's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o' that; here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely, you were best. [Exit.

Enter Olivia and Malvolio.

Clo. Wit; and 'tis thy will, put me into good feeling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee,
ACT I.—SCENE V.

May pass for a wise man: For what says Quinapa-lus? Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.— God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool: I'll no more of you:

of course will amend; for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; but the dishonest man mend himself: if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the better mend him: Any thing that's meant, is but patched: virtue, that transgresses, is but patched with sin; and sin, that amends, is but patched with virtue: If that this simple syllogism will serve, so: it will not, What remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calaminity, so beauty's a flower:

— the lady bade take away the fool: therefore, I say again, take her away.

Clo. Sir, I bade them take away you.

Clo. Misprison in the highest degree! — Lady.

Canadus non factum ennumenem: that's as much as to say, I wear not motley in a brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Clo. Can do you it?

Clo. Distrustfully, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechise you for it, madonna; Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll hide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn'st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Clo. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool you, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentleman.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: Infamy, that deuces the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. Well, sir, a speedy infamy, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn, that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for two-pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren race; I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that crow so at these set kind of fools, no better than the fools' names.

Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a discontented appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of fine disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets: There is no slander in an ill-used fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known disreputable man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury end he with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools!

Re-enter MARIA.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman, much desires to speak with you.

Oli. From the count Orsino, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam; 'tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay!

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oli. Pich him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman: Eke ou him! [Exit MARIA.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick or not at home: what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you see, sir, how your footing grows old, and people dislike it.

Sir. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool, whose skull Jove carves with brains, for here he comes, one of thy kin, has a most weak pie matter.

Enter Sir Toby BEECH.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk. — What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To, A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman! What gentleman?

Sir To. 'tis a gentleman here.—A plague o' these pickle herringes!—How now, sol? [Exit.

Clo. Good Sir Toby,——

Clo. Cousin cousin, how have you come so early by this lathery?

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery! There's one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry, what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will. I care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit.

Clo. What's a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drows'd man, a fool, and a madman: one drowsed above heat makes him a fool: the second mads him; and a third drowns him.

Clo. Go thon and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my cot; for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drows'd: go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman.

[Exit Clown.

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Madam, void young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick, he taxes him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep; he seems to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he's forthied against any denial. Tell him, he shall not speak with me.

Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, and be the supporter of a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he?

Mal. Why, of maikind.

Mal. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with you, will you, or no.

Of what personage, and years, is he? Mal.

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'ts peased, or a coding when 'ts almost an apple: 'ts with him e'en standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured, and he speaks very shrewish; one would think his mother's milk were seamed out of him.

Mal. Let him approach! Call in my gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my lady calls! [Exit.

Enter MARIA.

Oli. Give me my veil: come throw it o'er my face: We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

Fix. The honourable lady of the house, which is she!
Ol. Speak to me, I shall answer for her: Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very complite, even to the least sinister usage. Ol. Whence came you, sir? Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance, if you be the lady or Vio. The, that I may proceed in my speech. Ol. Are you a conspirer? Vio. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice, I swear I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house? Ol. If I do not usurp myself, I am. Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow, is not to be reserved. But this is from my commission: I will own with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message. Ol. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise. Vio. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 'tis probable I have missed judgment. Ol. It is the more like to be feigned; I pray you, keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates; and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, he gone; if you have reason be brief: 'tis not that time of moon with me, to make one in so skipping a dialogue. Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way. Vio. No, good swabber; I am to haul here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Ol. Tell me your mind. Vio. I am a messenger. Ol. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your piece. Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overthrow of war, no taxation of homage; I hold the olive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter. Ol. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you? Vio. In the tenderness that hath appeared in me, have I learnt'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead: to your ears, divinity; to any other's, profanation. Ol. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria.] Now, sir, what is your text? Vio. Most sweet lady,— Vio. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text? Vio. In Orsino's bosom. Vio. In his bosom? In what chapter of his bosom? Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart. Ol. O, I have read it; it is heresy. Have you no more to say? Vio. Good madam, let me see your face. Ol. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? you are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir, such as a one as I was this present: Is't not well done? [Unveiling. Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Ol. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blem, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on: Lady, you are the cruel'st she alive, If you will lead these graces to the grave, And leave the world no copy. Ol. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: It shall be inventoried; and every particle, and utensil, labelled to my will: as, item, two lips indifferent red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent kither to praise me? Vio. I see you what you are: you are too proud; But, if you were the doi'll, you are fair. My lord and master loves you; O, such love Could be but recompens'd, though you were crown'd The nonpariel of beauty! Ol. How does he love me? Vio. With adorations, with fertile tears, With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire. Ol. Your lord does know my mind, I cannot love Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble, [him: Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant, And, in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gentleman: I can I cannot love him; He might have took his answer long ago. Vio. If I did love you in my master's flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life, To your denial I would find no sense, I would not understand it. Ol. Why, what would you? Vio. Make me a willow cabinet at your gate, And call upon my soul within the house; Write loyal cantons of contemned love, And sing them loud even in the dead of night; Holla your name to the reverberate hills, And make the babbling gossip of the air Cry out, Olivia! O, you should not rest Between the elements of air and earth, But you should light on my presage? [Age? Ol. You might do much: What is your parent? Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman. Ol. Get you to your lord; I cannot love him: let him send no more; Unless, perchance, you come to me again, To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well; I thank you for your pains: spend this for me. Vio. I am no feed post, lady; keep your purse; My master, not myself, lacks recompense. Love makes his heart of flint, that you shall love; And let your fervour, like my master's, be Plac'd in contempt! Farewell, fair eunuch. [Exit. Ol. What is your parentage? Above my fortunes, yet my state is well; I am a gentleman. —I'll be sworn thou art; Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit, Do give thee five-fold blazon: —Not too fast: — soft!soft! Unless the master were the man.—How now? Even so quickly may one catch the plague? Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections, With an invisible and subtle stealth, To creep io at mine eyes. Well, let it be.— What, ho, Malvolio!—

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service. Ol. Run after that same peevish messenger,
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no: my stars shine darkly over me; the malignancy of my fate might, perhaps, distemper yours; therefore I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone: it was a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No, 'sooth sir; my determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Rodonge; my father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, 'would we had so ended! but you, sir, altered that; for, some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea, was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not, with such estimable wonder, overbear believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish her, she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair; she is drown'd already, sir, with salt water: though, seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I am yet so near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the count Orsino's court: farewell.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court. Else would I very shortly see thee there: But, come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall seem sport, and I will go.

ACT II.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

Viola. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir; you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: And one thing more; that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

Viola. She took the ring of me: I'll none of it.

Mal. Come, sir, you peevishly throw it to her; and her will is, it should be so returned: if it be worth keeping for the place it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it.

Viola. I left no ring with her: What means this lady? Fortune forbid, my outside have not charmed her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, That, sure, methought, her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts distractedly. She knowledge, I thought, of her passion Invites me in this charful messenger. None of my lord's ring! why, he sent her none. I am the man,—If it be so, (as 'tis,) Poor lady, she were better love a dream. Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it, for the proper—false In women's washen hearts to set their forms! Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we; For, such as we are made of, such be we. How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly: And I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, seems to date on me: What will become of this! As I am man, My soul was desperate for my master's love; As I am woman, now alas the day! What thriftest sighs shall poor Olivia breathe? O time, thou must entangle this, not I; It is too hard a knot for me to untie.

ACT III.

SCENE III. A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir To. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a bed after midnight, is to be up betimes; and diluculo surgere, thou know'st,—

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

Sir To. A false conclusion; I hate it as an unfilled can: To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then is early: so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Do not our lives consist of the four elements!

Sir And. 'Faith so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Then art a scholar! we therefore eat and drink.—Marian, I say!—A stoop of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, I faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts! Did you never see the picture of us three?

Sir To. I come ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg; and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spokest of Pigrogromus, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Quebeus: 'twas very good, I faith, and I sent thee sixpence for the poem: Had it it?

Clo. I did impectious thy gratification; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-al. e-houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now sing a song.

Sir To. Come on; there is sixpence for you; let’s have a song.

Sir And. There’s a testril of me too: if one knight give a—

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

SONG.

Clo. O mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O, stay and hear: your true love’s coming,
That can sing hith high and low:—
Trip up further pretty sweeping;
Journey end in lovers’ meeting,
Every wise man’s son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, i’faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? ’tis not hereafter:
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What’s to come, is still unsure:—
Then come kiss me, sweet-and-twenty
Youth’s a staff that will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, i’faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion.

But shall we make the welkin dance indeed;
Shall we raise the night-owl in a catch, that will Draw three souls out of one weaver! shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let’s do: I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By’t lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain: let our catch be, Thou know.

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou knowe, knight! I shall be constrain’d in’t to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. ’Tis not the first time I have constrain’d one to call me knave. Begin, fool; it begins, Hold thy peace.

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, i’faith! Come on, begin.

[They sing a catch.]

Enter MALVOLIO.

Mar. What a catterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady’s a Catania, there are politicians; Malvolio’s a Dog-a-Hamway, and Three merry men be we. Am not I consanguineous? am not I of her blood? Tilly-valley, lady! There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady! [Singing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight’s in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed, and so do I too; he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. O, the twelfth day of December.—

[Speaking.

Mar. For the love o’ God, peace.

Enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an almoner of my lady’s horse, that ye squeak out your cozier’s catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches.

Sneek up!

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though she honours you as her kinsman, she’s nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanors, you are welcome to the house: if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay, good sir Toby.

Clo. His eyes do show his days are almost done.

Mal. Is’t even so?

Sir To. But I will never die.

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. Shall I bid him go?

Clo. What an if you do?

Sir To. Shall I bid him go, and spare not?

Clo. O no, no, no, you dare not.

Sir To. Out o’ time! sir, ye lie.—Art any more than a shadow think, believe thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Clo. Yes, by Saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot in the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou’rt in the right.—Go, sir, rub your chain with crumbs:—A stoop of wine, Maria!

Mal. Mistress Maria, if you priz’d my lady’s favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give me means for this uncivil rule; she shall know of it by this hand.

[Exit.

Mar. Go shake your cars.

Sir And. Were as good a deed as to drink when a man’s hungry, to challenge him to the field; and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do’t knight; I’ll write thee a challenge; or I’ll deliver thy vacillation to him by word of mouth.

Mal. Sir Toby, be patient for to-night; since the youth of the count’s was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not gull him into a way, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed: I know, I can do it.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

Sir And. O, if I thought that, I’d beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What, for being a Puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for’t, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing constantly but a time pleaser; an affectation’d ass, that cows state without book, and utters it by great swarths— the best persuaded of himself, so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all, that look on him, love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressions of his features, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated: I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.
Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.
Sir And. I have 't in my nose too.
Sir To. He shall think, by the letters that thou wilt drop, that they come from my niece, and that she is in love with him.
Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.
Sir To. And your horse now would make him a ass.
Mar. Ass, I doubt not.
Sir And. O, 'twill be admirable.
Mer. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter; observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit.]
Sir To. Good night, Pothecaries.
Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench.
Sir To. She's a beagle, true bred, and one that adores me; What o' that?
Sir And. I was adored once too.
Sir To. Let's to bed, knight.—Thou hadst need send for more money.
Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a fool way out.
Sir To. Send for money, knight; if thou hast her not i't the end, call me Cut.
Sir And. If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.
Sir To. Come, come; I'll go burn some sack, 'tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight; come, knight.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, Violà, Cunio, and others.

Duke. Give me some music.—Now, good morrow, friends!
Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song we heard last night;
Methought, it did relieve my passion much;
More than light airs and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times:
Come, but one verse.
Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.
Duke. Who was it?
Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord; a fool, that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in: he is about the house.
Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.
[Exit Curio.—Music.

Come a little, boy; If ever thou shalt love,
In the sweet pangs of it, remember me:
For, such as I am, all true lovers are;
Unaided and skittish in all motions else,
Save, in the constant image of the creature
That is belov'd.—How dost thou like this tune?
Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is throne.
Duke. Thou dost speak masterly:
My life upon 't, young though thou art, thine eye
Hath stay'd upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?
Vio. A little, by your favour.
Duke. What kind of woman is 't?
Vio. Of your complexion.
Duke. She is not worth thee then. What years,
Vio. About your years, my lord.
[Exeunt Vio and Duke.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
Most longing, wavering; sooner lost and worn,
Than women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.
Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent:
For women are as roses; whose fair flower,
Being once displayed, doth fall that very hour.
Vio. And so they are: alas, that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter Curio and Clown.

Duke. O fellow, come, the song we had last
Mark it, Cesario: it is old and plain:
—The spinners and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maidens, that weave their thread with
Do use to chant it; it is silly sooth
[bones, And dailies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.
Clo. Are you ready, sir?
Duke. Ay; pr'ythee sing.

[Music.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypress let me lie laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, strew all with you,
O, prepare it;
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.
Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be thrown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet.
My poor ghost, where my bones shall be thrown.
A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O, where
Sad true lover never did find his grave,
To weep there.

Duke. There's for thy pains.
Clo. No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing, sir.
Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.
Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.
Duke. I give thee now leave to leave me.
Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opal!—I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing, and their latent every where; for that's it, that always makes a good voyage of nothing.—Farewell.

Duke. Let all the rest give place.

[Exeunt Curio and attendants.

Once more, Cesario,
Get thee to yon' same sovereign cruelty:
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands;
The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune;
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks her in, attracts my soul.
Vio. But, if she cannot love you, sir?
Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. Sooth, but you must.
Say, that some lady, as, perhaps, there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;
You tell her so; Must she not then be answer'd?
Duke. There is no woman's sides,
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion
TWELFTH NIGHT. OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So big, to hold so much; they lack retention.
Alas, their love may be called appetite,—
No motion of the liver, but the palate,—
That suffer surfeit, eloyment, and revolt;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much: make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Tis. Ay, but I know,—
Duke. What dost thou know?
Tis. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?
Tis. A blank, my lord: She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm I the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought;
And, with a greenness of low melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument.
Smiling at grief. Was not this love, indeed?
We men may say more, swear more: but, indeed,
Our shows are more than will; for still we prove
Much in our words, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?
Tis. I am all the daughters of my father's house,
And all the brothers too,—and yet I know not.—
Sir, shall I to this lady?

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.
To her in haste; give her this jewel; say,
My love can give no place, hide none to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir T. Come thy ways, Signior Fabiano.

Fab. Nay, I'll come; if I lose a scruple of this sport,
Let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir T. Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?

Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out of favour with my lady, about a hear-heating here.

Sir T. To anger him, we'll have the bear again;
And we will fool him black and blue:—Shall we not, sir Andrew?

Sir A. As we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir T. Here comes the little villain:—How now, my metal of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk; he has been yonder in the sun parting his behaviour to his own shadow this half hour: observe him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this latter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! [The men hide themselves.] Lie then there; [throws down a letter] for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.

[Exeunt Maria.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me: and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect, than any one else that follows her. What should I think on 't?

Sir T. Here's an over-weening rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir T. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue:—

Sir T. Peace, I say.

Mal. To be count Malvolio;—

Sir T. Ah, rogue!—

Sir A. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir T. Peace, peace!

Mal. There is example for 't; the lady of the strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir A. Fie on him, Jezebel!

Fab. O, peace! now he's deepely in; look, how imagination blows him.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state,—

Sir T. O, for a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye!

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from a day-bed, where I left Olivia sleeping.

Sir T. Fire and brimstone!

Fab. O, peace, peace.

Mal. And then to have the humour of state: and after a demure travel of regard—telling them, I know my place, as I would they should do theirs,—to ask for my kinsman Toby:

Sir T. Bolts and shackles!

Fab. O, peace, peace! peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him: I frown the while; and, perchance, wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Toby approaches; courtier's there to me:

Sir T. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us with carts and peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control:—

Sir T. And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips then?

Mal. Saying, Cousin Toby, my fortunes have cast me on your name, give me this prerogative of speech:—

Sir T. What, what?

Mal. You must amend your drunkenness.

Sir T. Out, scab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight.

Sir A. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. O, Sir Andrew:

Sir A. I knew, 'twas I; for many do call me fool.

Mal. What employment have we here?

[Taking up the letter.

Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir T. O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate residing aloft to him!

Mal. By my life, this is my lady's hand; these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir A. Her O's, her U's, and her T's: Why that?

Mal. [reads.] To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes: her very phrases!—By your leave, wax. —Softly—by the impressure her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady: To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [reads.] Love knows, I love:

But who?

Lips do not move,

No man must know.—What follows? the numbers.
TWELFTH NIGHT.

MALVOLIO. I extend my hand to him thus

Act II, Sc 2.
ACT III.—SCENE I.—Olivia’s Garden.

Enter VIOLA, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music: Dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clown. No, sir, I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clown. No such matter, sir; I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou may’st say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clown. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: How quickly the wrong side may be turned outward! Vio. Nay, that’s certain; they that daily nibble with words, may quickly make them wanton.

Clown. I would therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clown. Why, sir, her name’s a word; and to daily with that word, might make my sister wanton: But, indeed, words are very rascals, since bonds disgraced them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clown. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am bound to prove reason with them.
Oli. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me my hearing.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Oli. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

Oli. My servant, sir! Twas never merry world, since lowly begetting was call'd compliment:

You are servant to the count Orsino, youth.

Vio. I am, and he is yours, and his must needs he yours;

Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Oli. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blanks, rather than filled with me!

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts

On his behalf:—

Oli. O, by your leave, I pray you;

I would you never speak again of him:

But, would you undertake another suit,

I had rather hear you to solici[t that,

Tha[n music from the spheres.

Vio. Dear lady,—

Oli. Give me leave, I beseech you: I did send

After the last enchantment you did here,

Luring in chase of you; so did I abuse

Myself by servant, and a servant,

Under your hard construction must I sit,

To force that on you, in a shameful cunning,

Which you knew none of yours: What might you have Not set mine honour at the stake, [think? And]

Baited it with all the unmanzled thoughts

That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your re-

Enishing is shown; a cyper, not a boscum, [ceiving

Hides my poor heart: So let me hear you speak.

Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No, not a grise; for 'tis a vulgar proof.

That very oft we pity enemies.

Oli. Why, then, methinks, 'tis time to smile again.

Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.

If one should be a prey, how much the better

To fall before the lion, than the wolf? [Clock strikes.

The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.—

Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you: And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,

Your wife is like to reap a proper man:

These is your way, the west.

Vio. Then westward-hoe: grace, and good disposition 'tend your ladyship!

You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay:

I prythee, tell me, what thou think'st of me.

Vio. That you do think, you are not what you are.

Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.

Vio. Then think you right; I am not what I am.

Oli. I would you were as I would have you be!

Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am,

I wish it might; for now I am your fool.

Oli. O, what a deal of scorn looks beautiful

In the contempt and anger of his lip!

A maid's own guilt shews not itself more soon

Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon.

Cesario, by the roses of the spring,

By maidhood, honour, truth, and every thing,

I love thee so, that, maugre all thy pride,

Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide.

Do not extort thy reasons from this clause.

For, that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause:

But, with a reason that is reason better:

Love song'd is good, but given unsought, is better.

Vio. By ignorance I swear, and by my youth,

I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth,
And that no woman has; nor never none Shall mistress be of it, save I alone. And so adieu, good madam; never more Will I my master's tears to you deplore. [move Oli. Yet come again: for thou, perhaps, may'st That heart, which now abhors, to like his love. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir And. No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer. Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom, give thy reason. Fab. You must needs yield your reason, sir And.

Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me; I saw 't he orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her tow'r.

Sir And. 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me? Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.

Sir To. And they have been grand jurymen, since before Noah was a sailor.

Fab. She did shew favour to the youth in your sight, only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver: You should then have accosted her; and with some excellent jests, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baulked: the double gift of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now called into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt, either of valour, or policy.

Sir And. And 'tis any way, it must be with valour: for policy I hate; I had as lief be a Brownist, and a politician.

Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places; my niece shall take note of it: and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with women, than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, sir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curt and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent and full of invention; taunt him with the licence of ink; if thou thought'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down; go about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink; though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter: About it: Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the culcheta: Go. [Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, sir Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not deliver it.

Sir To. Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wallflowers cannot hall them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Malvolio.

Sir To. Look where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Mal. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me: you' gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado: for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered!

Mal. Most villanously; like a pedant that keeps a school, I the church.—I have dogged him, like his murderer: He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him. He does smile his face into more lines than are in the Aesh map, with the universal estimation of the Indies; you have not seen such a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him; if she do, he'll smile, and tak't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you; But, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you; my desire, More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth; And not all love to see you, (though so much,) As might have drawn one to a longer voyage;) But jealousy what might befall your travel, Being skilless in these parts; which to a stranger, Unguided, and unfriended, often prove Rough and unsupportable: My willing love, The rather by these arguments of fear, Set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio, I can no other answer make, but thanks, And thanks, and ever thanks: Often good turns Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay: But, were my worth, as is my conscience, firm, You should find better dealing. What's to do? Shall we go see the reliques of this town? [Sing.

Ant. To-morrow, sir; first, first, go see your lodg. Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night; I pray you let us satisfy our eyes With the memorials, and the things of fame, That do renown this city.

Ant. "Would, you'd pardon me; I do not without danger walk these streets: Once, in a sea-fight, 'gainst the count his gallies, I did some service; of such note, indeed. That, were I ta'en here, it would scarce be answer'd. Seb. Belike, you siew great number of his people. Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature; Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrel, Might well have given us bloody argument. It might have since been answer'd in repaying What we took from them; which, for traffick's sake, Most of our city did: only myself stood out; For which, if I be lapsed in this place, I shall pay dear.

Seb. Do not then walk too open.
Twelfth Night: Or, What You Will.

*Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse; I am the south suburb, at the Elephant, Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet. [ledge, Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowl. With viewing of the town; there shall you have me. Seb. Why, your purse! Ant. Haply, your eye shall light upon some toy You have desire to purchase; and you store, I think, is not for idle markets, sir. Seb. I'll be your purse-Learner, and leave you for An hour. Ant. To the Elephant.— I do remember. [Exeunt. SCENE IV.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have sent after him. He says he'll come; How shall I feast him? what bestow on him? For youth is bought more oft, than begg'd or bor. I speak too loud.

WHERE IS MALVOLIO? — he is sad, and civil, And suits well for a servant with my fortunes; — Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam; But in strange manner. He is sure possess'd, Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?

Mar. No, madam, He does nothing but smile: your ladyship Were best have guard about you, if he come; For, sure, the man is tainted in his wits.

Oli. Go call him hither.—I'm as mad as he, If sad and merry madness equal be.—

Enter Malvolio.

How now, Malvolio?

Mar. Sad, lady? I could be sad: This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; But what of that, if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is: Please one, and please all.

Oli. Why, how dost thou man? what is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs: It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed. I think, we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? Mal. To bed? ay, sweet-heart; and I'll come to thee.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Sir To. Ay, Diddy, come with me. What man!
his is not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan:
Hang him, foul collier!

Mar. Get him to say his prayers; good sir Toby, let him to pray.

Mai. My prayers, man!

Mar. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of god-lines.

Mai. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things; I am not of your element; you shall know more hereafter.

[Exit.

Sir To. Is’t possible!

Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I would condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, pursue him now; lest the device take air, and taint.

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad, indeed.

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room, and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he is mad; we may carry it thus, for our pleasure, and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him; at which time, we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see,

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

Sir And. Here's the challenge, read it; I warrant there's his vinegar and pepper in’t.

Fab. Is’t so saucy?

Sir And. Ay, it is; I warrant him: do but read.

Fab. Give me, [read] ‘Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow.’

Fab. Good, and valiant.

Sir To. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why
I do call thee so, for I will shew thee no reason for’t.

Fab. A good note: that keeps you from the blow of the law.

Sir To. Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly; but thou liest in thy thrift, that is not the matter I challenge thee for.

Fab. Very brief, and exceeding good sense-less.

Sir To. I will way-day thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me,——

Fab. Good.

Sir To. Thou kill'st me like a rogue and a villain.

Fab. Still you keep o’ the windy side of the law:
Good.

Sir To. Faire thee well; And God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou wast him, and thy sworn enemy,
Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Sir To. If this letter move him not, his legs cannot: I will give’t him.

Mar. You may have very fit occasion for’t; he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir To. Go, sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-bailliff: so soon as thou seest him, draw; and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass off, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood mere approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away.

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing.

[Exit.

Sir To. Now will not I deliver his letter: for the behalf of this young gentleman, gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less;
therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth, he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-cheek
a notable report of valour; and drive the gentleman, (cas, I know his youth will aptly receive it,) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Enter Olivia and Viola.

Fab. Here he comes with your niece: give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out:
There’s something in me, that repoves my fault;
But a more easy touch of guilt than that,
That but mocks repose.

Vio. With the same lavour that your passion
Go on my master’s griefs.

Oli. Here, wear this jewel for me, ’tis my picture;

Refuse it not, it hath no tongue to vex you:
And, I beseech you, come again to-morrow.
What think you, sir, of that I’ll ever forget?
That honour, sa’v’d, may upon asking give? [master.

Vio. Nothing but this, your true love for my Oli. How with mine honour I give him that Which I have given to you?

Vio. I will acquit you.

Oli. Well, come again to-morrow: Fare thee well;

A friend, like thee, might bear my soul to hell.

[Exit.

Re-enter Sir Toby Belch and Fabian.

Sir To. Gentleman, God save thee.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir To. That defence thou hast, betake thee to’t;
of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him,
I know not; but thy intersteller, full of despirit, blooddest man, makes thy friend to think thou art
the orchard end; dismount thy tuck, be yere in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skilful, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake, sir; I am sure, no man hath any quarrel to me; my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

Sir To. You’ll find it otherwise, I assure you:
therefore, if you hold your life at any price, take you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath, can furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is knight, dubbed with unhacketed rapier, and on carcket consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl; souls and bodies hath he divided three; and his incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulture: nob, nob, is lies word;
give’t, or take’t.

Vio. I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men, that put quarrels purposely on others, to taste their valour; behold, this is a man of that quick.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indigitation derives itself out of a very competent injury; therefore, get you on, and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me, which with as much safety you might undertake; therefore, or, or strip your sword stark naked; for med-

ACT III. -SCENE IV. 99
TWELFTH NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

dle you must; that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivil, as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is; it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know this matter?

Fab. I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a moral arbitrement; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria: Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a virago. I had a pass with him, rapiers, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stock-in, with such a mortal motion, that it is inviolable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on: They say, he has been fencer to the Soply.

Sir And. Pox o'nt, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague o'nt; 'an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, gray Capilet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion: Stand here, make a good show on't; this shall end without the pollution of souls: Sir Toby, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola.

I have his horse [to Fab.], to take up the quarrel; I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly concocted of him; and parts, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you for his o' th' sake: marry, he hath better thought of him his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth telling off; therefore draw, for the supportance of his vow; he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

[Aside.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there's no remedy the gentleman will; for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on: to't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath.

[Exeunt.

Enter Antonio.

Sir To. You, sir? why what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dare yet do more than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

[Draws.

Enter two Officers.

Fab. O good sir Toby, hold; here come the officers.

Sir To. I'll be with you anon. [To Antonio.

Vio. Pray, sir, put up your sword, if you please.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; — and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word: He will bear you easily, and reins well.

1 Off. This is the man; do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir;

1 Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour well, though now you have no sea-cap on your head.

Take him away; he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey. —This comes with seeking you; but there's no remedy; I shall answer it.

What will you do? Now by my necessity, I'll make you ask for my parole: It grieves me more much for what I cannot do for you, than what befalls myself. You stand amaz'd;

But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must intreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What's to be done? Will you deny me now?

Is't possible, that my deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, lest that it make me so unsound a man, as to upbraud you with those kindnesses That I have done for you.

Vio. I know none; nor show I you by voice, or any feature: I hate ingratitude more in a man Than lying, vaineats, babbling, drunkenness, Or any taint of vice, whose strong corruption Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O heavens themselves! —

2 Off. Come, sir, I pray you go. [See here, [Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you I smatch'd one half out of the jaws of death; Reliev'd him with such sanctity of love,—

And to his image, which methought did promise Most venerable worth, did I devotition.

1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by; away.

Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god! — Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.—

In nature there's no blemish, but the mind; none can be call'd deform'd, but that unknown: Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous-evil Are empty trunks, o'erbrillished by the devil.

1 Off. The man grows mad; away with him.

Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exeunt Officers with Antonio. Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion fly, That he believes himself; so do not I. Prove true, imagination, O, prove true. That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!

Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian, we'll whisper o'er a couple or two of most sage saws.
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

Vio. He named Sebastian; I my brother know
Yet living in my glass; even such, and so,
In favour was my brother; and he went
Still in this fashion, colour, ornamen,,
For him I imitate: O, if it prove,
Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love. [Exit.

Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.
Sir And. Sis! I'll after him again, and beat him.
Sir To. Do, cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir And. A do I not.—

[Exit. Fab. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money, 'twill be nothing
yet. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe, that I am not sent for you.

Seb. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i'faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come and speak with her; her name is not master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither.—
Nothing, that is so, is so.

Seb. I pray thee, vent thy folly somewhere else:
Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! he has heard that speech of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. — I pray thee now, unbind thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady;
Shall I vent to her, that thou art coming?

Seb. I pray thee, foolish Greek, depart from me;
There's money for thee; if you tarry longer,
I shall give you worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand: —
These wise men, that give fools money, get themselves
a good report after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir Andrew, Sir Toby, and Fabian.

Sir And. Now, sir, have I met you again? there's for you. [Striking Sebastian.

Seb. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there:
Are all the people mad? — [Beating Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Hold, sir, or I'll throw thy dagger o'er the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your coats for two-pence.

[Exit Clown.

Sir To. Come on, sir; hold. [Holding Sebastian.

Sir And. Nay, let's not alone, I'll get another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria: though
I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand.

Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed; carry on so.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What would thou now?

If thou dar'st tempt me further, draw thy sword.

Sir To. What, what? Nay, then I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you. [Draws.

Enter Olivia.

Oli. Hold, Toby; on thy life, I charge thee, hold.
Sir To. Madam?

Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains, and the barbarous caves,
Where manners never were preach'd: out of my sight!
Be not offended, dear Cesario.—

Rude ship, be gone! — I pray thee, gentle friend, [Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent
Against thy peace. Go with me to my house;
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby
May'st smile at this; thou shalt not choose but go;
Do not deny: Desire him for my soul for me.
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.

Seb. What relish is in this? how runs the stream?
Or I am mad, or else this is a dream:—
Let fancy still my sense in Lethe steep;
If it be thus to dream, still let me sleep!

Oli. Oh, sir, I pray thee: Would thou'dst be
Seb. Madam, I will. [Rul'd by me?

Oli. O, say so, and so be! [Loud.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pray thee, put on this gown, and this beard; make him believe thou art sir Topas the curate; do it quickly: I'll call sir Toby the while.

[Exit Maria.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in't; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not fat enough to become the function well: nor lean enough to be thought a good student: but to be said, as an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly, as to say, a careful man, and a great scholar. The compaigniers enter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, master parson.

Clo. Bona dies, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prester John never saith pen and ink, very wittily said to a piece of king Gordbaste, That, that is, is so I, being master parson, am master parson:
For what is that, but that? and is, but is?

Sir To. To him, sir Topas.

Clo. What, hoa, I say,—Peace in this prison!

Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.

Mal. [in an inner chamber.] Who calls there?

Clo. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit
Malvolio the lunatic.

Mal. Sir Topas, sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man? talkest thou nothing but of ladies!

Sir To. Well said, master parson.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged:
good sir Topas, do not think I am mad; they have laid me here in hideous darkness.

Clo. Fye, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle men, that will use themselves with courtesy:
Say'st thou, that house is dark?

Mal. As well, sir Topas.
TWELFTH NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Clo. Why, it hath bay-windows, transparent as barricades, and the clear stories towards the south north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou the division?

Mal. I am not mad, sir Topas; I say to you, this house is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou errest: I say, there is no darkness, but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled, than the Egyptians in their fog.

Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorant people as well as all; and I say, there was never man thus abused: I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning wild-fowl?

Mal. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit Tell me how thy lady does. [Singing]

Mal. Fool.

Cio. My lady is unkind, perdy.

Mal. Fool.

Cio. Alas, why is she so?

Mal. Fool, I say; —

Cio. She loves another — Who calls, ha?

Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper: as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for 't.

Cio. Master Malvolio!

Mal. Ay, good fool.

Cio. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?

Mal. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

Cio. But as well? then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mal. They have here propounded me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, assaes, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Cio. Advise you what you say; the minister is here.—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble babble.

Mal. Sir Topas,

Cio. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—

Who, I, sir? not I, sir. God b'w'lyou, good sir

Mal. Marry, good morrow, sir, I will.

Cio. Fool, fool, fool, I say, —

Cio. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am abent for speaking to you.

Mal. Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well said, — that you were, sir!

Mal. By this hand, I am: Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady; it shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Clo. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

Mal. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I'll never believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Mal. Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree:

I pr'ythee, be gone.

Clo. I am gone, sir,

And upon, sir,

I'll be with you again,

In a trice,

Like to the old vice,

Your need to sustain;

Who with dagger of lath,

In his rage and his wrath,

Cries, ah, ha! to the devil!

Like a mad lad,

Pare thy nails, dad,

Adieu, goodman drivet. [Exit]

SCENE III.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me, I do feel't, and see't:

And though 'tis wonder that envelops me thus,

Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio then?

I could not find him at the Elephant:

Yet there he was; and there I found this credit,

That he did range the town to seek me out

His counsel now might do me golden service:

For though my soul disputes well with my sense,

That this may be some error, but no madness,

Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune

So far exceed all instance, all discourse,

That I am ready to mistrust mine eyes,

And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me

To any other trust, but that I am mad,

Or else the lady's mad; yet, if 't were so,

She could not sway her house, command her followers,

Take, and give back affairs, and their despatch,

With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing,

As, I perceive, she does: there's something in't,

That is deceivable. But here comes the lady.

Enter Olivia and a Priest.

Ol. Blame not this haste of mine: If you mean Now go with me, and with this holy man, — [well, Into the chantry by: there, before him,

And underneath that consecrated roof,

Plight me the full assurance of your faith;

That my most jealous and too doubtful soul

May live at peace: He shall conceal it,

Whiles you are willing it shall come to oaths;

What time we will our celebration keep

According to my birth.—What do you say?

Sol. I'll follow this good man, and go with you;

And, having sworn truth, it shall be true.

Ol. Then lead the way, good father;—And heaven's so shine,

That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exit.]
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter.

Cl. Good master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Cl. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. That is, to give a dog, and, in recompense, desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, and Attendants.

Duke. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends?

Cl. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well; how dost thou, my good fellow?

Cl. Truly, sir, the better for my shoes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

Cl. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

Cl. Marry, sir, they praise me, and make an ass of me: now my foes tell plainly I am an ass: so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself; and by my friends I am abused: so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why, then the worse for my friends, and the better for my shoes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Cl. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.

Cl. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Cl. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double dealer; there's another.

Cl. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of St. Benet, sir, may put you in mind; One, two, three. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw; if you will let your lady know, I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Cl. Marry, sir, ifalaby to your bounty, till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think, that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness: but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon.

[Exit Clown.

Enter Avrorno and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmirch'd: As black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war: A babbling vessel was he captain of, For shallow draught, and bulk, unpriz'able; With which such scathful grapple did he make With the most noble bottom of our fleet, That very envy, and the tongue of loss, Cry'd fame and honour on him.—What's the matter?

1 Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio, That took the Phoenix, and her fraught, from Candy; And this is he, that did the Tiger board, When your young nephew Titus lost his leg: Here in the streets, desperate of shame, and state, In private brabbling did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir; drew on my side; But, in conclusion, put strange speech upon me, I know not what 'twas, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water thief! What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, Whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear, Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir, Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me; Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate.

Duke. Though, I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither: That most ingrateful boy there, by your side, From the rude sea's enrag'd and foamy mouth Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was: His life I gave him, and did thereto add My love, without retention, or restraint, All his in dedication: for his sake, Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drew to defend him, when he was beset; Where being apprehended, his false cunning, (Not meaning to partake with me in danger,) Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance, And grew a twenty-years-removed thing, While one would wink; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use

Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Of. To-day, my lord; and for three months before, (No interim, not a minute's vacancy,) Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess; now heaven walks on earth.

Vio. But for thee, fellow, fellow, thy words are madness: Three months this youth hath tended upon me; But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not have, Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?— Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Vio. Madam?

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Oli. What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord.

Vio. My lord would speak, my duty hushes me. Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord, It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear, As howling after music.

Duke. Still so cruel?

Oli. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What? to perverseness; you uncivil lady, To whose ingrate and unamicrous alters My soul the faithfull'st offerings hath breath'd out, That e'er devotion tend'd! What shall I do! Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall be- come him

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it, Like to the Egyptian thief, at point of death, Kill what I love; a savage jealousy, That sometime savours nobly?—But hear me this: Since you to non-regardance cast my faith, And that I partly know the instrument That screws me from my true place in your favour, Live you, the marble-breasted tyrant, still; But this your minion, whom, I know, you love, And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly, Him will I tear out of that cruel eye, Where he sits crowned in his master's spite.— Come, boy, with me; my thoughts are ripe in mischief:
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

[Going.]

Vio. And I, most jeoud, apt, and willingly,
To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

[Following.]

Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love,
More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all mores, than e'er I shall love wife:
If I do slign, you witnesses above,
Punish my life, for tainting of my love!

Oli. Ali me, detested! how am I beguiled!
Vio. Who does beguile you? who does you wrong?
Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?
Call forth the holy father. [Exit an Attendant.

Duke. Come away. [To Viola.

Oli. Ay, husband, can be that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah!

Oli. No, my lord, not I.

Oli. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear,
That makes thee strange thy propriety:
Fear not, Cesario, take thy fortune up;
Be thou as wise as thou art, and thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.—O, welcome, father!

Re-enter Attendant and Priest.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold (though lately we intended
To keep in darkness, what occasion now
Became before 'tis ripe,) what thou dost know,
Hath newly past between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirm'd by mutual Joiner of your hands,
Attended by the holy close of lips,
Strength'nd by interchangegment of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact.
Sca'd in my function, by my testimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave,
I have travelled but two hours.

Duke. O, thou dispensing cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own ship shall be thine own Maver?
Pardon, and take her; but with such feet,
Where thou and I hereafter may never meet.

Vio. My lord, I do protest,—

Oli. Do, or do not swear;
Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew Aguecheek, with his head broke.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon; send one presently to sir Toby.

Oli. What's the matter?

Sir And. He has broke his head across, and has given sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too: for the love of God, your help: I had rather than forty pound, I were at home.

Oli. Who has done this, sir Andrew?

Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario: we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incendiate.

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario?

Sir And. Oli's liftings, here he is:—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by sir Toby.

Oli. Well, do you speak to me? I never hurt you; You drew your sword upon me, without cause;
But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

Sir And. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me; I think, you set nothing but a bloody coxcomb.

Enter Sir Toby Buxton, drunk, led by the Clown.

Here comes sir Toby hailing, you shall hear more; but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Duke. How now, gentleman! how is't with you? Sir To. That's all one; he has hurt me, and there's the end on.—So, didst see Dick surgeon, not?

Clo. O he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were set at eight i'the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue. After a passy-measure, or a pavin, I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him: Who hath made this havoc with them?

Sir And. I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

Sir To. Will you help an ass-head, and a coxcomb, and a knife? a thin-faced knife, a gulf?

Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Exit Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your knees.

But, had it been the brother of my blood, [man; must have done so least with wits and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and
By that I do perceive it hath offended you;

Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two
A natural perspective, that is, and is not. [persons;
Seb. Antonio, O my dear Antonio! How have you the hours rack'd and tortured me,
Since I have lost thee.

Ant. Sebastian are you?

Seb. Fear not thou that, Antonio! Art How have you made division of yourself?—
An apple, cleft in two, is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

Oli. Most wonderful!

Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother: Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and every where. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd:—
Of charity, what kin are you to me? [To VIOLA.

What other guest, he makes out of your parentage?

Vio. Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father; Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suited to his watery tomb: If spirits can assume both form and suit You come to fright us.

Seb. A spirit I am, indeed:
But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the womb I did partake.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even, I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say—Thrice welcome, drown'd Viola! Vio. My father had a male upon his brow.

Seb. And so had mine. Vio. And died that day when Viola from her birth Had mustered thirteen years.

Seb. O, that record is lively in my soul! He finished, indeed, his mortal act,
That day that made my sister thirteen years. Vio. If nothing lets to make us happy both But this my masculine usurp'd attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance Of place, time, fortune, and place, do put, That I am Viola: which to confirm, I'll bring you to a captain in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help I was preserv'd, to serve this noble count;
ACT V.—SCENE I.

All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady and this lord.

Seek: So comes it, lady, you have been mistook.

But nature to her bias drew in that.
You would have been contracted to a maid;
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd,
You are betroth'd both to a man and maid.

Duke. Be not amaz'd; right noble is his blood.—
If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wreck:
How, thou hast said to me a thousand times, [To VIOLA.]

Thou never should'st love woman like to me.
Rio. And all those sayings will I ever-swear;
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As death that ordeth continent the fire
That sever'd day from night.

Duke. Give me thy hand;
And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

Rio. The captain, that did bring me first on shore,
Hath my maid's garments: he upon some action,
Is now in durance: at Malvolio's suit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

Duke. Bethe Malvolio, and yet, alas, now I remember me. [Dehure:

They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.

Re-enter Clown, with a letter.

A most extracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance cleanly banish'd his.—

How dost he, sirrah?

Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebuth at the stave's end, as well as a man in his case may do: he has here writ a letter to you, I should have given it to you today morning; but as a madman's epistles are no gospel, so it skills not much, when they are delivered.

Rio. Open it, and read it.

Clo. Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman.—By the Lord, madam,—

Rio. How now! art thou mail?

Clo. No madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow it.

Rio. Pr'ythee, read it thy right wits.

Clo. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits, is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess, and give ear.

Rio. Read it you, sirrah. [To FABIAN.]

Fab. [reads.] By the Lord, madam, you wrong me,
And the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury.

The madly-used Malvolio.

Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, madam.

Duke. This savours not much of distraction.

Oli. See him delivered, Fabian; bring him hither.

[Exit Fabian.

My lord, so please you, these things further thought To think me as well a sister as a wife, [on.]
One day shall crown the alliance on't, so please you,
Here at my house, and at my proper cost.

Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your offer.—

[Service done him,

Your master quits you; [To VIOLA.] and, for your
So much against the mettle of your sex,
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,

And since you call'd me master for so long,
Here is my hand: you shall from this time be
Your master's mistress.

Oli. A sister?—you are she.

Re-enter FABIAN, with MALVOLIO.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Oli. Ay, my lord, this same:

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong.
Notorious wrong.

Oli. Have I, Malvolio?

Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruse that letter: You must not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phrase;
Or say, 'tis not your seal, nor your invention: You can say none of this; Well, grant it then,
And tell me, in the modesty of honour,
Why you have given me such clear lights of favour;
Bade me come smiling, and cross-gartered to you,
To put on yellow stockings, and to brown
Upon sir Toby, and the lighter people:
And, setting this in an obdient hope,
Why have you suffered me to be imposed on,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious gawk, and gull,
That e'er invention play'd on? tell me why,

Oli. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though, I confess, much like the character:
But, out of question, 'tis Maria's hand.
And now I do believe me I was right
First told me, thou wast mad: thou cam'st in smiling,
And in such forms which here were presump't
Upon thee in the letter.

Pr'ythee, be content:
This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee:
But, when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Shall be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cause.

Fab. Good madam, hear me speak;
And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come,
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby.

Set this device against Malvolio here:
Upon him, that stibhous and ignorant parts
We had conceived against him: Maria writ
The letter, at sir Toby's great importance;
In recompense whereof, he hath married her.
Now with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge;
If that the injuries he justly weigh'd,
That have on both sides past.

Oli. Alas, poor fool! how have they baffled thee!

Clo. Why, some are born great, some achieve greatness,
And some have greatness thrown upon them. I was one, sir, in this interlude; one sir Topas, sir; but that's all one:—By the Lord, fool, I am not mad:—
But do you remember? Madam, why laugh you at such a barren cause? do you smile not, he's gagg'd:— And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you.

[Exit.

Oli. He hath been most notoriously abuse'd.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace:—
He hath not told us of the captain yet:
When that is known and the golden time converts,
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls.—Mean time, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence.—Cesario, come; For so you shall be, while you are a man:—
But, when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress, and his fancy's queen. [Excuse
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Song.

Clo. When that I was and a little tiny boy, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, A foolish thing was but a toy, For the rain it raineth every day. But when I came to man's estate, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, 'Gainst knave and thief men shut their gate, For the rain it raineth every day. But when I come, alas! to weep, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, This play is in the graver part elegant and easy, and in some of the lighter scenes excessively humorous. Ague-cheek is drawn with great propriety, but his character is, in a great measure, that of natural fatuity, and is therefore not the proper prey of a satirist. The soliloquy of Malvolio is purely comic; he is betrayed to ridicule merely by his pride. The marriage of Olivia, and the succeeding perplexity, though well enough contrived to divert on the stage, wants credibility, and fails to produce the proper instruction required in the drama as it exhibits no just picture of life.—Johnso

SCENE.—VIENNA.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Escalus,—

Escal. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold, Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse; Since I am put to know, that your own science

By scraggery could I never thrive, For the rain it raineth every day. But when I came unto my bed, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, With toss-pots still had drunken head, For the rain it raineth every day. A great while ago the world began, With hey, ho, the wind and the rain, But that's all one, our play is done, And we'll strive to please you every day.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

This play was not printed till 1623.—Mr. Malone supposes it to have been written in 1609. The plot is found in Cinthio's Novels, Decad 8, Novel 5.—But Shakspeare took the subject of his drama from an old play call'd Pontus and Cassandra, written by George Whetstone, and published in 1578. A hint, like a seed, is more or less prolific, according to the qualities of the soil on which it is thrown. The story, which in the hands of Whetstone produced little more than barren insipidity, under the culture of Shakespeare became fertile of entertainment. The curious reader will find that the old play of Pontus and Cassandra, exhibits in a most complete empyre of Measure for Measure; yet the hints on which it is formed are so slight, that it is nearly as impossible to detect them, as it is to point out in the autumn the future ramifications of the oak.—Malone.

Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice My strength can give you: Then no more remains But let to thy sufficiency, as your worth is able, And let them work. The nature of our people, Our city's institutions, and the terms For common justice, you are as pregnant in, As art and practice hath enriched any That we remember: There is our commission, From which we would not have you warp,—Call I say, bid come before us Angelo. —

[Exit an Attendant.

What figure of us think you he will hear? For you must know, we have with special soul Elected him our absence to supply; Lent him our treasure, drest him with our love; And given his deputation all the organs Of our own power: What think you of it? Excit. If any in Vienna be of worth To undergo such ample grace and honour, It is lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes. Ang. Always obedient to your grace's will, I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo, There is a kind of character in thy life, That, to the observer, doth thy history Fully unfold: Thyself and thy belongings Are not thine own so proper, as to waste Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee. Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do; Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd, But fine issues: nor nature never lends The smallest scraple of her excellence, But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor, Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
SCENE II.—A Street.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not to composition with the king of Hungary, why, then all the dukes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou conclimest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal.

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

1 Gent. Why, 'twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions; they put forth to steal: 'There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What? in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay! why not? Grace's grace, despite of all controversy: As for example: Thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

2 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet; Thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet: thou art good velvet; thou art a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee; I had as lief be a list of an English kersey, as be pil'd as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but whilst I live, forget to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong; have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast; whether thou art tainted, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation comes! I have purchased as many diseases under the false denomination of medicine, as have been sold to an old woman in the market, in three hundred dollars a year.

1 Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

1 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me: but thou art full of error, I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound, as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow: impiety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 Gent. How now? Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Bawd. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

1 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, signior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison? 'Tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know, 'tis so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head's to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this foolish, I would not have it so: Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since; and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away; let's go learn the truth of it.

[Enter Lucio and Gentlemen.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk. How now? what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Clo. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Bawd. Well; what has he done?

Clo. A woman.

Bawd. But what's his offence?

Clo. Gropping for trout in a peculiar river.

Bawd. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Clo. No; but there's a woman with maid by him;
You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Bawd. What proclamation, man?

Clio. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pull’d down.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the city?

Clio. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgur put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull’d down?

Clio. To the ground, mistress.

Bawd. Why, here’s a change, indeed, in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Clio. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack not clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I’ll be your tapster still.

Courage; there will be pity taken on you: you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered.

Bawd. What’s to do here, Thomas Tapster? Let’s withdraw.

Clio. Here comes signior Lucio, led by the provost to prison: and there’s madam Juliet. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, and Officers; Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Claudio. Fellow, why dost thou shew me thus to the Bear me to prison where I am committed. [world?]

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition, But from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claudio. Thus can the demi-god, Authority. Make us down for our offence by weight. The words of heaven;—on whom it will, it will; On whom it will not, so; yet still ‘tis just.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio! whence comes this restraint?

Claudio. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty: As surfeit is the father of much fast, So every scope by the inordinate use, Turns to restraint: Our natures do pursue, (Like rats that ravin down their proper bane,) A thirsty evil, and when we drink, we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors: And yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the oppery of freedom, and the mortality of imprisonment.—What’s th’ offence, Claudio?

Claudio. What, but to speak of would offend again. Lucio. What is it? murder!

Claudio. No.

Lucio. Lecchery?

Claudio. Call it so.

Prov. Away, sir; you must go.

Claudio. One word, good friend:—Lucio, a word with you. [Takes him aside.]

Lucio. A hundred, if they’ll do you any good—

Is lecherity so look’d after?

Claudio. Thus stands it with me:—Upon a true-con, I got possession of Julietta’s bed; [triflet, You know the lady; she is fast my wife, Save that we do the denunciation lack Of outward order: this we came not to, Only for propagation of a dower Remaining in the coffer of her friends; From whom we thought it meet to hide our love, Till time had made them for us. But it chances, The stealth of our mutual entertainment, With characters too gross, is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Claudio. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke,— Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness; Or whether that the body public be A horse wherein the governor doth ride, Who, newly in the seat, that it may know He can’t play safe, let the spur:

Whether the tyranny be in his place, Or in his eminence that fills it up, I stagger in:—But this new governor Awakes me all the coroll’d penalties, Which have, like usurcer’d armour, hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round, And none of them been worn; and, for a name, Now puts the drowsy and neglected act Freshly on me:—’tis surely, for a name.

Lucio. I warrant, it is: and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claudio. I have done so, but he’s not to be found. I pr’ythee, Lucio, do me this kind service; This day my sister should the cloister enter, And there receive her approbation: Acquaint her with the danger of my state; Implore her in my voice, that she make friends To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him; I have great hope in that: for in her youth There is a prone and speechless dialect, Such as moves men; beside, she hath prosperous art When she shall play with reason and discourse, And well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray, she may: as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition; as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack. I’ll to her.

Claudio. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours,—[Exeunt.]

Claudio. Come, officer, away.

SCENE IV.—A Monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No; holy father; throw away that thought; Believe not that the dribbling dart of love Can pierce a complete bosom: why I desire thee To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends Of burning youth.

Friar. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you How I have ever lov’d the life removed; And held in idle price to haunts assemblies, Where youth, and costs, and widless bravery keep. I have deliver’d to lord Angelo (A man of stucture, and firm abstinence,) My absolute power and place here in Vienna, And he supposes me travel’d to Poland; For so I have stew’d it in the common ear, And so it is receiv’d: Now, pious sir, You will demand of me, why I do this?

Friar. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most biting laws, (The needful bits and curbs for head-strong steeds,) Which for these fourteen years we have let sleep; Even like an o’ergrown lion in a cave, That goes not out to prey: Now, as fond fathers Having bound up the threat’ning twigs of birch, Only to stick it in their children’s sight, For terror, not to use: in time the red Becomes more mock’d, than fear’d: so our decrees, Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead; And liberty plucks justice by the nose, The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart Goes all decorum.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Fri. It rested in your grace
To unlock this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd: And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd, Than in lord Angelo. Duke. I do fear, too dreadful: Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope, 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and call them For what I bid them do: For we bid this be done, When evil deeds have their passim pass, And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed, my I have on Angelo imposed the office; [father, Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home, And yet my nature never in the sight, To do it slacker: And to behold his sway, I will, as 'twere a brother of your order, Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pr'ythee, Supply me with the habit, and instruct me How I may formally in person bear me Like a true friar. 'Move reasons for this action, At our more leisure shall I render you; Only, this one:—Lord Angelo is precise; Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses That his blood flows, or that his appetite Is more to bread than stone: Hence shall we see, If power change purpose, what our seemers be. [Exit. SCENE V.—A Nursery. Enter Isabella and Francisca. Isab. And have you summons no further privileges? Fran. Are not these large enough? Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more; But rather wishing a more strict restraint Upon the sister-hood, the votarists of saint Clare. Lucio. Ho! Peace be in this place! [Within. Isab. Who's that, which calls? Fran. It is a man's voice: Gentle Isabella, Turn you the key, and know his business of him; You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn: When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men, But in the presence of the priestess; Then, if you speak, you must not shew your face: Or, if you shew your face, you must not speak. He calls again; I pray you answer him. [Exit Francisca. Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is 't that calls: Enter Lucio. Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be; as those cheek-roses Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead me, As bring me to the sight of Isabella, A novice of this place, and the fair sister To her unhappy brother Claudio? Isab. Why her unhappy brother? let me ask; For, when I now must make you know I am that Isabella, and his sister. [you: Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets Not to be weary with you, he's in prison. Isab. Woe me! For what? Lucio. For that, which if myself might be his judge, He should receive his punishment in thanks: He hath got his friend with child. Isab. Sir, make me not your story. Lucio. It is true. I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest, Tongue far from heart,—play with all virgins so: I hold you as a thing ensky'd, and saicted; By your renounceance of your inconstant spirit; And to be talk'd with in sincerity, As with a saint. Isab. You do blaspheme the good, in mocking me. Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewnness and truth, 'tis thus: Your brother and his lover have embrac'd: As those that seed grow full: as blossoming time, That from the seedness the bare fallow brings To turn the blossom into fruits, the full plenteous womb Expresseth his full tillth and husbandry. Isab. Some one with child by him?—My cousin Lucio. Is she your cousin? [Juliet? Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their By vain thought apt affection. [names, Lucio. Isab. O, let him marry her! Lucio. This is the point. The duke is very strangely gone from hence; Bore many gentlema, myself being one, In hand, and hope of action: but we do learn By those that knew the very nerves of state, His givings out were of an infinite distance From his true-meant design. Upon his place, And with full line of his authority, Governs lord Angelo: a man, whose blood Is very snow-broth; one who never feels The wanton stings and motions of the sense; But doth rebate and bunt his natural edge With profits of the mind, study and fast. He (to give fear to use and liberty) Which have, for long, run by the hideous law, As mice by lions,) hab't pick'd out an act, Under whose heavy sense your brother's life Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it; And follows close the rigour of the statute To make him an example; all hope is gone, Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer To soften Angelo: and that's my pithe Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother. Isab. Doth he so seek his life? Lucio. Has censur'd him Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath A warrant for his execution. Isab. Alas! what poor ability's in me To do him good? Lucio. Assay the power you have. Isab. My power! Alas! I doubt.— Lucio. Our doubts are traitors, And make us lose the good we oft might win, By fearing to attempt: Go to lord Angelo, And let him learn to know, when maidens me, Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel, All their petitions are as freely theirs As they themselves would own them. Isab. I'll see what I can do. Lucio. But, speedily. Isab. I will about it straight; No longer staying but to give the mother Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you: Command me to my brother: soon at night I'll send him certain word of my success. Lucio. I take my leave of you. Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exit. ACT II. SCENE 1.—A Hall in Angelo's House. Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Provost, Officers, and other Attendants. Aug. We must not make a scare-crow of the law Setting it up to fear the birds of prey, And let it keep one shape, till custom make it Their perch, and not their terror. Escal. Ay, but yet Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death: Alas! this gentleman, Whom I would save, had a most noble father. Let but your honour know, (Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue.) That, in the working of your own affections, Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing, Or that the resolute acting of your blood Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose, Whether you had not sometime in your lifeErr'd in this point which now you censure him, And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalns, Another thing to fall. I do not deny, The jury, passing on the prisoner's life, May, in the swelling of pride, have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try: What's open made to That justice seizes. What know the laws, [justice, That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very pregnant, The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it, Because we see it; but what we do not see, We tread upon, and never think of it. Yet may not so extenuate they any For I have had such faults; but rather tell me, When I, that censure him, do so offend, Let mine own judgment pattern out my death, And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

Escal. See that Claudio, Be executed by nine to morning morrow: Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar'd;

For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit Provost.

Escal. Well, heaven forgive him! and forgive us Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall: [all!

Some run from brakes of vice, have answer nose; And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Frotia, Clown, Officers, &c.

Elb. Come, bring them away: if these be good people in a common-wealth, that do nothing but use therewares in common houses, I know no law; bring the villain here.

Ang. How now, sir! What's your name? and what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow; I do lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they? are they not misfactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profanation in the world, that good Christians ought to have.

Escal. This comes off well; here's a wise officer.

Ang. Go to: What quality are these? Elbow is your name? Why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Clo. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir? a tapster, sir; parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house to attend officers, too.

Escal. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour, —

Escal. How! thy wife!

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman, —

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinaly given, might have been accused in formity and mockery, and all uncleanliness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by mistress Overdone's means: but as she spat in his face, so she defied him.

Clo. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man, prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces?

[To Angelo.

Clo. Sir, she came in great with child; and longing (saving your honour's reverence,) for stew'd prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honours have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to; no matter for the dish, sir.

Clo. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but, to the point: As I say, this mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; — for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Frotb. No, indeed.

Clo. Very well: you being then, if you be remember'd, cracking the stones of the aforesaid prunes.

Frotb. Ay, so I did, indeed.

Clo. Why, very well: I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Frotb. All this is true.

Clo. Why, very well then.

Escal. This is a tedious fool: to the purpose.—What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come we to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Clo. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave: And, I beseech you, look into master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a pear; whose father died at Hallowmas: — Was not at Hallowmas, master Froth?

Frotb. All-hallow'd eve.

Clo. Why, very well; I hope here be truths: He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir; — twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit: Have you not?

Frotb. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for winter.

Clo. Why, very well then; — I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave, And leave you the hearing of the cause;

Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less: Good morrow to your lordship.

[Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: What was done to Elbow's wife, once more!

Clo. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.
Act II.—Scene I.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Clo. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir: what did this gentleman to her?

Elb. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face.—Good master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose: Doth your honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Clo. Doth your honour see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Clo. I'll be suppos'd upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right: Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected woman than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet: the time is yet to come, that she was ever respected, with man, woman, or child.

Clo. But she was respected with him before he married her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Iniquity?—Is this true?

Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her, before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor dale-courser that thou art;—I, this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have his action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it: What is't your worship's pleasure I should do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it:—Thou seest, thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee; thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born friend? [To Froth.]

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourcote pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, and 't please you, sir.

Escal. So.—What trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress's name?

Clo. Mistress Over-done.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir; Over-done by the last.

Escal. Nine!—Come hither to me, master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters; they will draw you, master Froth, and you will hang them: Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship: For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well; no more of it, master Froth: farewell. [Exit Froth.]—Come you hither to me, master tapster: what's your name, master tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Escal. What else?

Clo. Bun, sir.

Escal. 'Troth, and your bun is the greatest thing about you; so that, in the bestliest sense, you are Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd.

Pompey, however you colour it in being a tapster. Are you not? come, tell me true; it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow, that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

Clo. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey: nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Does your worship mean to geld and spay all the youth in the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't then. If these be Pompeys, shall we take order for the drabs and the knives, you need not to fear the bawds.

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: It is but heading and hanging.

Clo. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. If this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it, after three pence a day: If you live to see this come to pass, say, Pompey told you so.

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey: and, in requital of your prophecy, buck you,—I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever, no, not for dwelling where you do; if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and put you in the same with you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt; so for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Clo. I thank your worship for your good counsel: but I shall follow it, as the flesh and fortune shall better determine.

Whip me? No, no; let carman whip his jade:

The very heart's not whipt out of his trade. [Exit.]

Escal. Come hither to me, master Elbow; come hither, master Constable. How long have you been in this place of constable?

Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought, by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time: You say, seven years ago?

Elb. And a half, sir.

Escal. Alas! it hath been great pains to you! They do you wrong to put you so oft upon 't: Are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them: I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

Escal. Look you, bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house: Fare you well. [Exit Elbow. ] What's o'clock, think you?

Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio; But there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful:

Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;

Pardon is still the nurse of second woe:
Scene II. - Another Room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come I'll tell him of you. [straight.
Prov. Pray you do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know His pleasure; may be, he will relent: Alas,
He hath but as offended in a dream!
All sorts, all ages, smack of this vice; and he
To die for it! -

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost?
Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?
Ang. Did I not tell thee, yes? hast thou not Why dost thou ask again? [order]
Prov. Last I might be too rash:
Under your good correction, I have seen,
When, after execution, judgment hath
Repeated o'er his doom.
Ang. Go to; let that be mine:
Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spare'd.
Prov. I crave your honour's pardon—
What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?
She's very near her hour.
Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place; and that with speed.
Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemned,
Desires access to you.
Ang. Hath he a sister?
Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid,
And to be shortly of a sisterhood,
If not already.
Ang. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant.
See, you, the fornicatrix be remov'd;
Let her have needful, but not lavish means;
There shall be order for it.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.

Prov. Save your honour! [Offering to retire.
Ang. Stay a little while.—[To Isab.] You are welcome: What's your will?
Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour,
Please but your honour hear me.
Ang. Well; what's your suit?
Isab. There is a vice, that most I do abhor,
And most desire should meet the blow of justice;
For which I would not plead, but that I must;
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At war, 'twixt will, and will not.
Ang. Well; the matter?
Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die:
I do beseech you, let it be his fault,
And not my brother.
Prov. Heaven give thee moving graces!
Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it!
Why, every fault's condemn'd, ere it be done:
Mine was the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.
Isab. [To Prov.] O just, but severe law!
I had a brother then.—[Heaven keep your honour!
[Retiring.
Lucio. [To Isab.] Give't not o'er so; to him
again, intreat him;
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it:
To him, I say it.
Isab. Must he needs die?
Ang. Maiden, no remedy.
Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him,
And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy.
Ang. I will not do't.
Isab. But can you, if you would?
Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.
Isab. But might you do't, and do the world no wrong:
If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse
As mine is to him?
Ang. He's sentenc'd: 'tis too late.
Lucio. You are too cold. [To Isabella.
Isab. To note? why, no; I, that do speak a word,
May call it back again: Well, believe this,
No ceremony to that great ones 'lengths,
Not the king's crown, nor the defended sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does. If he had been as you,
And you as he, you would have slipt like him;
But like you, would not have been so stern.
Ang. Pray you, begone.
Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel? should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 'were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.
Lucio. Ay; touch him: there's the vein. [Aside.
Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.
Isab. Alas! alas!
Why, all the souls that were, were forfeit once;
And I know that the vontage best have took,
Found out the remedy: How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.
Ang. Be you content, fair maid?
It is the law, not I, condemns your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him; —he must die to-morrow.
Isab. To-morrow? O, that sudden! Spare him, say again:
He's not prepar'd for death! Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season; shall we serve heaveo
With less respect than we do minister [you]
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink
Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There's many have committed it.
Lucio. Your story is so plain.
Ang. Why, well said.
Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath Those many had not dare'd to do that evil, [asleep
If the first man that did the edict infringe,
Had answer'd for his deed: now, 'tis awake;
Takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shews what future evils, (Kither now, or by remission now-conceiv'd,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,)
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But, where they live, to end.
Isab. Yet shew some pity.
Ang. I shew it most of all, when I shew justice;
For then I pity those I do not know.
While these did offend, did the offence go faster?
And do him right, that, answering one foul wrong
Lives not to act another; Be satisfied;
Your brother dies to-morrow; be content.
Isab. So you must be the first, that gives this sen-
And he, that sufferers: O, it is excellent [tence;
ACT II.—SCENE III.

To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.
Lucio. That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder?
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder: nothing but Merciful heaven! — [thunder.

Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt,
Splitst the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle; — But man, proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority;
Most ignorant of what he most ass'rd,
His glassy essence,—like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep: who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Lucio. O, to him, to him, wench: he will relent;
He's coming, I perceive't.

Pror. Fray heaven, she wins him!

Isab. We cannot weigh our brother with ourself:
Great men may jest with saints: 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation.

Lucio. Thou 'tis in the right, girl; more o' that.

Isab. That in the capital, 'tis but a paler word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Lucio. Art advis'd o' that? more on 't.

Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others.

Isab. What yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That sickens vice o' the top: Go to your bosom;
Knock there; and ask you, 'What doth it know
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guilesness, such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Ang. [aside.] She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it.—

Fare Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.

Ang. I will bethink me.—Come again to-morrow.

Isab. Hark, how I'll brieve you: Good my lord,

Ang. How! brieve me?

Isab. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share

Lucio. You had marr'd all else. [with you.

Isab. Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rates are neither rich, or poor,
As fancy values them: but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there, Eur son-rise: prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose minds are dedicate To nothing temporal.

Ang.

Well: come to me

To-morrow.

Lucio. Go to; it is well; away. [Aside to IsABEL. Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

Ang. Amen: for I

Am that way going to temptation,

[Aside. Where prayers cross.

Isab. At what hour to-morrow

Shall I attend your lordship?

Ang. At any time 'fore noon.

Isab. Save your honour!

[Exeunt Lucio, IsABELLA, and Provost. Ang. From thee; even from thy virtue! —
What's this? what's this? Is this her fault, or mine? The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most? Ha! Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I, That lying by the violet, in the sun, Do, as the carrioon does, not as the flower, Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be, That modesty may more betray our sense [enough, Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground

Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our evils there? O, fy, fy, fy!

What dost thou? or what art thou, Angelo?

Dost thou desire her fouly, for those things
That her good? O, let her brother live:
Thieves for their robbery have author,-
When judges steal themselves. What? do I love her,
That I desire to hear her speak again,
And feast upon her eyes? What is 't I dream on?

O cunning enemy, that to catch a saint,

With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on

To sin in loving virtue: never could the strumpet,

With all her double vigour, art, and nature,

Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite:—Ever till now,

When men were fond, I smil'd and wonder'd how.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, habited like a Friar, and Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so, I think you are.

Prov. I am the provost: What's your will, good friar?

Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do me the common right
To let me see them; and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister To them accordingly.

Prov. I would do more than that if more were needful.

Enter JULIET.

Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flames of her own youth,
Hath bluster'd her report: She is with child:
And he that got it, sentenced: a young man
More fit to do another such offence,
Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Prov. As I do think, to-morrow.—

I have provided for you; stay a while, [To JULIET. And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repeat you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

Juliet. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your
And try your penitence, if it be sound, [conscience, Or hollowly put on.

Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offensive act was mutually committed?

Juliet. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,—
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven;
Shewing, we'd not spare heaven, as we love it,
But as we stood in fear, —

Juliet. I do repent me, as it is an evil;
And take the shame with joy.

Duke. Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,

And I am going with instruction to him.—
Grace go with you! Benedicite.

[Exit.

Juliet. We are to die to-morrow! O, injurious love,
That respite me a life, whose very comfort Is still a dying horror!}

Prov. [to pity of him. [Exeunt.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words:
Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isobel: Heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew his name;
And in my heart, the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception: the state wherein I studied,
Is like a good thing, being often read,
Grown fear'd and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein (let no man hear me) I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vane. O place! O form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming? Blood, thou still art blood:
Let's write good angel on the devil's horn,
'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now, who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister,
Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.

Ang. O heavens!

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart:
Making both it unable for itself,
And dispossessing all the other parts
Of necessary fitness?

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quilt their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untak'n love
Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.

Ang. That you might know it, would much better
please me,
Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot live.

[Reaping:

Ang. Yet may he live awhile; and it may be,
As long as you, or I: yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Ang. Yea.

Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve,
Longer, or shorter, he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not.

Ang. Ha! Fye, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their savvy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image,
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in restrained means,
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so? then I shall pose you quickly.
Which had you rather, That the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness,
As she that he hath stain'd?

Isab. I would rather give my body than my soul.

Ang. I talk not of your soul; Our compelld sins
Stand more for number than accomp.

How say you?
ACT III.—SCENE I.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So, then you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?

Claud. The miserable have no other medicine,
But only hope: I have hope to live, and am prepar’d to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death; either death, or life.
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life,—
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art,
(See’rile to all the skiey influences,)
That dost this habitation, where thou keep’st,
Hourly afflict: merely, thou art death’s fool;
For him thou labour’st by thy flight to shun,
And yet run’st toward him still: Thou art not noble,
For all the accommodations that thou bear’st,
Are nurs’d by baseness: Thou art by no means
For thou dost bear the soft and tender fork [Valiant;
Of a poor worm: Thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft prove’st: yet grossly fear’st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
For thou exist’st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust: Happy thou art not:
For what thou hast not, still thou striv’st to get;
And what thou hast, forget’st: Thou art not certain;
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon: If thou art rich, thou art poor;
For, like an ass, whose back with inge’r bows,
Thou bear’st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee: Friends hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper joints,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner: Thou hast nor youth,
But, as it were, an after-dinner’s sleep.
(2or age;
Dreaming on both: for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of pulsed eed; and when thou art old, and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What’s yet in this,
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid more thousand deaths: yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all even.
Claud. I humbly thank you.

To sue to live, I find, I seek to die;
And, seeking death, find life: Let it come on.

Enter ISABEL.

Isab. What, ho! Peace here: grace and good company!

Prov. Who’s there? come in: the wish deserves a welcome.

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I’ll visit you again.

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior, here’s
Duke. Provost, a word with you. [your sister.

Prov. As many as you please. [ceal d.

Duke. Bring them to speak, where I may be con-
Yet hear them. [Exit DUKE and PROVOST.

Claud. Now, sir, what’s the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all comforts are; most good in deed—
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting lieger:
Therefore your best appointment make with speed:
To-morrow you set on.

Claud. Is there no remedy?

Isab. None, but such remedy, as, to save a head,
To cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:
There is a devilish mercy in the judge
If you’ll implore it, that will free your life,
But better you till death.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Claud. Perpetual duration! Isab. Ay, just, perpetual duration; a restraint, Though all the world's vastidity you had, To determine'sd scope.

Claud. But in what nature? Isab. In such a one as (you consenting to't) Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear, And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point. Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake, Lov'd thou a feverish life sh'd entertain, And six or seven winters more respect Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die? The sense of death is most in apprehension; And the poor beetle, that we tread upon, In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great As when a giant dies.

Isab. Why give you me this shame? Think you I can a resolution fetch From flowery tenderness? if I must die, I will encounter darkness as a bride, And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's Did utter forth a voice! Yes, thou must die: [grave Thou art too noble to conserve a life In base appearance. This is a nominated deputy, Whose settled visage and deliberate word Nips youth i'the head, and follies doth ennow, As falcon doth the fowl,—is yet a devil; His fins within being cast, he would appear A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The princeely Angelo? Isab. O, 'tis the cunning lively, of the damnedest body to invest and cover In princely guards! Dost thou think, Claudio, If I would yield him my virginity, Thou might'st be freed?

Claud. O, heavens! it cannot be. [offence, Isab. Yes, he would give it thee, from this rank So to offend him still: this eight's the time That I should do what I abhor to name, Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do it.

Isab. O, were it but my life, I'd throw it down for your deliverance As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow. Claud. Yes.—Has he affections in him, That thus can make him bite the law by the nose; When he would force it? sure it is no sin; Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he, being so wise, Why, would he for the momentary trick Be perdurably fin'd!—O Isabel! Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where; To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot; This sensible warm motion to become A kneaded clod; and the delighted spirit To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside In thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice; To be imprison'd in the viewless winds, And blown with restless violence round about The generall world; or to be worse than worst Of these, that lawless and incertain thoughts Imagine bowling!—'tis too horrible! The wearest and most loathed worldly life, That age, ache, penury, and imprisoning

Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas! alas!

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live: What sin you do to save a brother's life, Nature dispenses with the deed so far, That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O, you beast! O, faithless coward! O, dishonest wrench! Will thou be made a man out of my vice? Is't not a kind of incest, to take life From one's own sister's shame? What should I think? Heaven shield, my mother play'd my father fair! For such a warped slip of wilderness Ne'er issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance: Die; perish! might but my bending down Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed: I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death, No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fye, fye, fye! Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade: Mercy to thee would prove itself a brawl: 'Tis best that thou diest quickly. [Going Claud. O hear me, Isabella.

Re-enter Duke.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word. Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you a while.

Duke. [To Claudio, aside.] Son, I have overheard what hath past between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue, to practise his judgment with the disposition of natures; sith, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive: I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death: Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die; go to your knees, and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there; Farewell. [Exit Claudio.]

Re-enter Provost.

Provost, a word with you.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone: Leave me a while with the maid; my mind promises with my habit, no less shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

[Exit Provost.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair, hath made you good: the goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes shy brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, should keep the body of it ever fair. The assault, that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that tragi-c hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How would you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

[Exit.

Duke. brother! I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. But O, how match is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can and,

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: Yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation: he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fatten your ear on my advizings; to the love I have in doing good, a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most willingly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the angry law; do no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if, peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak further; I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana the sister of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. Her should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her by oath, and the outtrip appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perish'd vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark, how heavily this befall to the poor gentle-woman: there she left a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him the portion and sum of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her combinat husband, this well seeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dry'd not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending, in her, discoveries of dishonour; in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is wash'd with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death, to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But how out of this can she avoid?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Shew me how, good father.

Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection; his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and worldly. Go you to Angelo; assuer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point: only refer yourself to this advantage, — first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience: this being granted in course, now follows all. We shall advise this wronged maid to steady up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledgeth itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untaint'd, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled. The maid will frame, and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doublessness of the benefit defends the deceit: from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already: and I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up: Haste you speak to her, for this might be entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the moat'd grange resides this dejected Mariana: At that place call upon me; and despatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort: Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE II.—The Street before the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O, heavens! what stuff is here?

Elb. "Twas never merry world, since, from two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worse al low'd by order of law a fur'd gown to keep him warm; and fur'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocence, stands for the facing.

Duke. Come your way, sir:—Bless you, good father brother.

Duke. And you, good brother father: What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Eye, sirrah; a bawd, a wicked bawd! The evil that thou causest to be done. That is thy means to live: Do thou but think What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back, From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,— From their abominable and beastly touches I drink, I eat, array myself, and live. Canst thou believe thy living is a life, So sinnKhly depending? Go, mend, go, mend.

Clo. Indeed, it does stick in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove—

Elb. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer; Correction and instruction must both work, Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. Enter captain before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning: the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, Free from our faults, as faults from seeming free!

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir. Clo. I spy comfort; I cry, bail: Here's a gentle man, and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey? What, at the heels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What, is there none of Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pochet and extracting it clutched? What reply? Ha! What say'st thou to this tause, manner, and method? It's not drown'd it the last rain? Ha! What say'st thou, trot? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way! Is it sad, and few words? Or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus! still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Pores. Well, sir, for her part.

Clo. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it: it must be so: Ever your fresh where, and your powded' bawd: An unshawn'd consequence; it must be so: Art going to prison, Pompey?

Cl. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss, Pompey: Farewell;

Go; say, I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey?

Or how?

Eib. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then, imprison him: If imprisonment be the duc of a bawd, why, 'tis his right: Bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too: bawd-born.

Farewell, good Pompey: Commend me to the prison,

Pompey: You will turn good husband now, Pompey;

you will keep the house.

Cle. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patently, why, your mettle is the more: Adieu, trusty Pompey.— Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha?

Eib. Come your ways, Sir; come.

Cl. You will not sail me then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey? nor now. — What news abroad, friar? What news?

Eib. Come your ways, sir; come.

Lucio. Go, to kennel, Pompey, go;—

[farewell Elbow, Cloww, and Officers.

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. I know not: Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say he is with the emperor of Russia;

other some, he is in Rome: But where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where: But wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him; something too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, it, good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well ally'd: but it is impossible to ex-tip it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say, this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation: Is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-maid spaw'd him.—

Some, that he was begot between two stock-fishers:

—but it is certain, that when he makes water, his urine is conceal'd ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir; and speak apace.

Lucio. Why what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cod-piece, to take away the life of a man? Would the duke, that is absent, have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the geting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the murther a thousand: He had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to more.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women; he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who is not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty— and his use was, to put a ducat in her cheek-dish: the duke had crochets in him: He would be drunk too: that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his: A shy fellow was the duke: and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I pray thee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No,— pardon; — 'tis a secret must be lock'd within you; you have no hand the lips: but this I can let you understand,— The greater fee of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unwielding fellow.

Duke. Either this is easy in you, folly, or mistaking the stream of his life, and the business he hath held, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the envious, a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier: Therefore, you speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks well with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return,

(as our prayers are he may,) let me desire you to make your answer before him: If it be honest you have duke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more:
or you imagine me too unfruitful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm: you'll foreswear this again.

Lucio. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceiv'd in me, friar. But no more of this: Canst thou tell, if Claudio die to-morrow, or no?

Duke. No, why should he die, sir?

I would, the duke, we talk of, were return'd again:
this ungenitor'd agent will unpeole the province with contenuity; sparrows must not build in his house-caves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condit'd for untrussing, Farewell, good friar; I pr'ythee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic; say, that I said so. Farewell.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality

Can cease 'scape; back-woundng malum

The whitest virtue strikes: What king so strong,

Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?

But who comes here!

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers.

Escal. Go, away with her to prison.

Bawd. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man: good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind? This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant.

Shame to him, whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To wound my wing and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!

ACT IV.—SCENE I.

Shrill song.

SCENE I.—A Room in Mariana's House.

MARIANA discovered sitting; a Boy singing.

SONG.

Tune, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the worm:
But my kisses bring again,
Bring again
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
Seal'd in vain.

MARI. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice [away;]
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.—

[Exit Boy.]

ENTER DUKE.

I cry thee mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,—
My mirth it much displeas'd, but please'd my woe.

DUKE. 'Tis good; though music oft have such a

To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me
Here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet:

MARI. You have not been inquired after: I have Sat here all day.

ENTER ISABELLA.

DUKE. I do constantly believe you:—The time is come, even now, I shall crave your forbearance a little; may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

ISAB. He hath a garden circummurr'd with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd;
And to that vineyard is a plached gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key;
This other doth command a little door,
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;
There have I made my promise to call on him,
Upon the heavy middle of the night.

DUKE. But shall you on your knowledge find this ISAB. I have 'tne a due and wary note upon't;
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

In action all of precept, he did shew me
The way twice o'er
Duke. Are there no other tokens
Between you 'greed, concerning her observance!
Isab. No, none, but only a repair i' the dark;
And that I have possess'd him, my most stay
Can be but brief: for I have made him know,
I have a servant comes with me aloof,
That stays upon me; whose persuasion is,
I come about my brother.
Duke. 'Tis well borne up,
I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this—What, ho! within! come forth!
Re-enter MARIANA.
I pray you be acquainted with this maid;
She comes to do you good.
Isab. I do desire the like.
Duke. Do you persuade yourself, that I respect you?
Mari. Good friar, I know you do; and have Duke. Take then this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear;
I shall attend your leisure; but make haste;
The vaporous night approaching.
Mari. Will 't please you walk aside? [Exit MARIANA and ISABELLA.
Duke. O place and greatness, millions of false
Are stuck upon thee! volumes of report [eyes
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings! thousand 'scopes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dream, [agreed?
And rack thee in their fancies!—Welcome! How Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.
Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father,
If you advise it.
Duke. It is not my consent,
But my intreaty too.
Little have you to say,
When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
Remember saw my brother.
Fear me not.
Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all:
He is your husband on a pre-contract:
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin;
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go;
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithes to sow.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Prison.
Enter Provost and Clown.
Prov. Come hither, sirrah: Can you cut off a man's head?
Clo. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can: but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.
Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliberation with an unpitied whipping; for you have been a notorious bawd.
Clo. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What ho, Abhorsen! Where's Abhorsen, there?

Enter Abhorsen.
Abhor. Do you call sir?
Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you tomorrow in your execution: If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him: He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.
Abhor. A bawd, sir? Fye upon him, he will discredit our mystery.
Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale.

[Exit. Clo. Pray, sir, by your good favour, (for, surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?
Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.
Clo. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery: but what mystery there should be in hänging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.
Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.
Clo. Proof.
Prov. Enter true man's apparel fits your thief:
If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.
Prov. Are you agreed?
Clo. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangman is a more penetrant trade than your bawd;
he doth oftener ask forgiveness.
Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe, to-morrow four o'clock.
Abhor. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade: follow.
Clo. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare: for, truly sir, for your kindness, I owe you a good turn.
Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:
[Exit Clown and Abhorsen.
One has my pity; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.
Cl. Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death:
'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?
Cl. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless lay
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones: [Dour
He will not wake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?
Well, go, prepare yourself. But hark, what noise?
[Knocking within.
Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit CLAUDIO.
By and by:—
I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve,
For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father.

Enter Duke.
Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost! Who called here of late?
Prov. None, since the curfew rang.
Duke. Not Isabel?
ACT IV.—SCENE II.  121

Prov. No.

Duke. They will then, ere he be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio!

Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd

Even with the stroke and line of his great justice;

He doth with holy abstinence subdue

That in himself, which he spurs on his power

To qualify in others: were he mean'd

With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;

But this being so, he's just.—Now are they come.

[Knocking within.—Provost goes out.]

This is a gentle provost: Seldom, when

The steeld gaoler is the friend of men. — [haste,

How now? What noise? That spirit's possess'd with

That wounds the unquiet, with these strokes,

Provost returns, speaking to one at the door.

Prov. There he must stay, until the officer

Aris to let him in; he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,

But he must die to-morrow?

Prov. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,

You shall hear more ere morning.

Prov. Happily, You something know; yet, I believe, there comes

No countermand; no such example have we:

Besides, upon the very siege of justice,

Lord Angelo hath to the public ear

Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

*Duke. This is his lordship's man.

Prov. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Mess. My lord hath sent you this note; and by me this further charge, that you swore not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good-morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Prov. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger.

Duke. This is his pardon; parcell'd by such sin,

For which the pardoner himself is in;

He that hath offence his quick celerity,

When it is borne in high authority:

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,

That for the fault's love, is the offender friend'd.—

Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you: Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this un-wound putting on a melancholy, strangely; for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads.] Whate'er you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock;

and, in the afternoon, Barnardine: for my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by free.

Let this be duly perform'd: with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.

What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty, or executed him?

I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reproves for him:

And, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of lord Angelo, came not to an un doubted proof.

Duke. Is it now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison?

How seem he to be touch'd?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come;

insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none; he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very often awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and shew'd him a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguies me; but in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard.

Claudio, whom here you have a warrant to execute, is no greater forfet to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him: To make you understand this, in a manifest way, I may vent three brave but four days respite; for which the you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do it? having the hour limited; and an express command, under penalty, to deliver him dead in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's; to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O, death's a great disguiser; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard: and say, it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death; You know the course is common.

If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will please thee, and will use thee with such grace that shall better serve thee than my own.

Prov. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if do the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearless, that neither my coat, integrity, nor my persuasion, can with ease attempt you,

I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fear's out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke. You know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both.

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke;

you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure:

where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing, that Angelo knows not:

for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor:

perchance, of the duke's death; perchance, entering into some monastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd: Put not yourself into amazement, how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present thirt, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed: but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Clown.

Clo. I am as well acquaintance here, as I was in our house of profession; one would think, it were mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young master Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, ninescore and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then, ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one master Capgr, at the suit of master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-colour'd satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young master Deep-vow, and master Copper-spur, and master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger-man, and young Drop-heir that kill'd lusty Pudding, and master Forthright the tilter, and brave master Shoetie the great traveller, and wild Hall-car that stabb'd Pots, and, I think, forty more: all great doers in our trade, and are now for the Lord's sake.

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Clo. Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, master Barnardine!

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine! Barnar. [Within] A pex o' your throats! Who makes that noise there! What are you?

Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangmen: You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Clo. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Clo. He is coming, sir; he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

Clo. Very ready, sir.

Barnar. How now, Abhorson! what's the news with you?

Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night, I am not fitted for't.

Clo. O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abhor. Look you, sir, here comes your ghostly father; Do we jest now, think you?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

Barnar. Friar, not I; I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech Look forward on the journey you shall go. [you, Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you,—

Barnar. Not a word; if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

[Exit.

Enter Provost.

Duke. Unfit to live, or die: O, gravel heart!—

After him, fellows; bring him to the block. [Exit Abhorson and Clown.

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

Duke. A creature unprepared, unmeet for death,

And, to transport him in the mind be it,

Were damnable.

Prov. Here! in the prison, father,

There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,

A man of Claudio's years; his head, and head,

Just of his colour: What if we do omit

This repellent, till he were well inclined;

And satisfy the deputy with the visage

Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio!

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides;

Despatch it presently; the hour draws on

Prex'h'd by Angelo: See, this be done,

And sent according to command; whiles I

Pernadne this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently.

But Barnardine must die this afternoon:

And how shall we continue Claudio,

To save me from the danger that might come,

If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done.—Put them in secret holds,

Both Barnardine and Claudio: Ere twice

The sun hath made his journal greeting to

The under generation, you shall find

Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, despatch,

And send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost.

Now will I write letters to Angelo,—

The provost, he shall bear them,— whose contents
Shall witness to him, I am near at home;

And that, by great injunctions, I am bound

To enter publicly: him I'll desire

To meet me at the consecrated fount,

A league below the city; and from thence,

By cold gradation and well-balanced furm,

We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

Duke. Convenient is it: Make a swift retir;

For I would commune with you of such things,

That want no ear but yours.

Prov. I'll make all speed. [Exit Isab. [Within] Peace, ho, be here!

Duke. The tongue of Isabel:—She's come to know,

If yet her brother's pardon be come hither:

But I will keep her ignorant of her good,

To make her heavenly comforts of despair

When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. Ho, by your leave.

Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man.

Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the Duke. It is no other: Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.

You rogue, I have been drinking all night,
I am not fitted for't.
Isab. O, I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.

Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel! Injurious world! Must damned Angelo!

Duke. This nor hurts him nor pricks you a jot: For bear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.

Mark what I say; which you shall find

By every syllable, a faithful verity:

The duke comes home to-morrow:—nay, dry your

And you shall have your bosom on this wretch,

Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,

And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter then to Friar Peter give;

'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return:

Say, by this token, I desire his company

At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours,

I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you

Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo

Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self, I am combin'd by a sacred vow,

And shall be absent. Wend you with this letter:

Command these fretting waters from your eyes

With a light heart; trust not my holy order,

If I pervert your course.—Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even!

Friar, where is the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O, pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient: I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to 't: But they say the duke will be here tomorrow. By my troth, Isabel, I lov'd thy brother;

if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholden to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou tastest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee; I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company isfaker than honest;

Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: If hasty talk offends you, we've 'll have very little of it; Nay, friar, I am a kind of lur, I shall stick.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd either.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions shew much like to madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-nivel our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. Why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that, if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escal. He shews his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints; and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well. I beseech you, let it be proclaimed:

Betimes I' the morn, I'll call you at your house:

Give notice to such men of sort and suit,

As are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir: fare you well. [Exit.

Ang. Good night.

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant, And dull to all proceeding. A deli' dint maid! And by an eminent body, that enforc'd The law against it!—But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me? Yet reason dares her—

For my authority bears a credent bulk: [50]

That no particular scandal once can touch, But it confounds the broken. He should have liv'd, Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,

Might, in the times to come, have ta'en revenge,

By so receiving a dishonour'd life,

With ransome of such shame. 'Wold yet he had liv'd! Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,

Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me.

[Giving letters.

The provost knows our purpose, and our plot.

The matter being afoot, keep you instruction, And hold you even to our special drift;

Though sometimes you do bleunch from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house,

And tell him where I stay: give the like notice

To Valentinus, Rowland, and to Crassus,

And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate;

But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well. [Exit Friar.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste:

Come, we will walk: There 's overt of our friends

Will greet us heere anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loath;

I would say the truth: but to accuse him so,

That is your part: yet I'm advised to do it;

He says, to veil full purpose.

Mariana. Be 'rul'd by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, that, if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side,

I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic,

That's bitter to sweet end.

Mariana. I would, friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace; the friar is come.

Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come, I have found you out a stand most

Where you may have such vantage on the duke, [Exit,
ACT V.

SCENE I.—A public Place near the City Gate.

DURABLA (seated), ISABELLA, and PETRUS, at a d:

Enter at open doors, DUKE, VARRIUS, LORDS; ANGELO, ESCALUS, LUCIO, PROVOST, Offic:

ers, and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met:—

Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Aug. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both.

We have made inquiry of you; and we hear

Such goodness of your justice, that our soul

Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,

Forerunning more requital.

Aug. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I must

To lock it in the wards of covert bosom; [wrong it,

When it deserves with characters of brass

A fortified residence, "gainst the tooth of time,

And rasure of oblivion; Give me your hand,

And let the subject see, to make them know

That outward courtesies would fain proclaim

Favours that keep within.—Come, Escalus,

You must walk by as on our other hand;

And good supporters are you.

And Isabella come forward.

F. Peter. Now is your time; speak loud, and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard

Upon a wrong'd, I'd fain have said, a mad!

O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye

By throwing it on any other object,

Till you have heard me in my true complaint,

And given me justice, justice, justice, justice,

And justice! Where are your wages? In what? By whom?

Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice! [Before

Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O, worthy duke,

You bid me seek redemption of the devil:

Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak

Must either punish me, not being believ'd;

Or wring redress from you: hear me, O, hear me, here

Aug. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm;

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,

Cut off by course of justice!

Isab. By course of justice!

Aug. And she will speak most bitterly, and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak:

That Angelo's forsworn; is it not strange?

That Angelo's a murderer; is 't not strange?

That Angelo is an adulterous thief,

An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;

Is it not strange, and strange?

Isab. It is not true he is Angelo;

Than this is all as true as it is strange:

Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth

To the end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her;—Poor soul,

She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st

There is another comfort than this world,

That thou neglect me not, with that opinion

That I much'd with dishonesty; make it not impossible

That which but seems unlike: 'tis not impossible

But one, the wickedest caithiff on the ground,

May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,

As Angelo; even so may Angelo,

In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms,

Be an arch-villain; believe it, royal prince,

If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,

Had I more name for badness,

Duke. By mine honesty,

If she be mad, as I believe no other,

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,

Such a dependency of thing on thing,

As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O, gracious duke,

Harp not on that: nor do not banish reason

For inequality; but let your reason serve

To make the truth appear, where it seems hid;

And hide the false, seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad,

Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you

Isab. I am the sister of Claudio, [Say? Condemn

Condemn'd upon the act of faction

To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo:

I, in probation of a sisterhood,

Was sent to by my brother: One Lucio

As then the messenger:—

Lucio. That's I, an't like your grace:

I came to her from Claudio, and desired her

To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo,

For her poor brother's pardon.

Duke. That's he, indeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord;

Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. Pray you, take note of it: and when you have

A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then

Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to it.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are in the wrong

To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. I went.

To this pernicious caithiff depute.

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it;

The phrase is to the matter.

Isab. In brief,—to set the needless process by,

How I persuaded, bow I pray'd, and kneel'd,

How he refell'd me, and how I reply'd;

For this was of much length; the vile conclusion

I now begin with grief and shame to utter

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body

To his concupiscible intemperate lust,

Release my brother; and, after much debatement,

My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,

And I did yield to him: But the next morn betimes

His purpose surfetting, he sends a warrant

For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely.

Isab. O, that it were as like as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, fund wretch, thou know'st not what thou speakest; or else thou art suborn'd against his honour,

In hateful practice: First, his integrity

Stands without blemish:—next, it imports no reason,

That with such vehemency he should pursue
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Noble prince, [breath, As there comes light from heaven, and words from As there is sense in truth, and truth in virtue, I am affianced this man's wife, as strongly As words could make up vows; and, my good lord, But Tuesday night last gone, in his garden-house. He knew me as a wife: As this is true Let me in safety raise me from my knees; Or else for ever be confin'd here, A marble monument!

Isabella. is carried off, guarded; and Mariana comes forward, Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo?— O heaven! the vanity of wretched folks! Give us some seats.—Come, cousin Angelo; In this I'll be impartial; be you judge Of your own cause.—Is this the witness, friar? First, let her shew her face; and, after, speak. Mari. Pardon, my lord; I will not shew my face, Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow then?
Thou foolish friar; and thou pernicious woman, Composed with her that's gone! think'st thou, thy oathes, Though they should swear down each particular saint, Were testimonies against his worth and credit, That's seal'd in approbation?—You, lord Escalus, Sit with my conscius; lend him your kind pains To find out this abuse, whence 'tis deriv'd,— There another one that set them on; Let him be sent for.

F. Peter. Would he were here, my lord, for he, in- Hath set the women on to this complaint: [deed, Your provost knows the place where he abides, And he may fetch him.

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin, Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth, Do with your injuries as seems you best, In any chasteisment: I for a while Will leave you; but stir not you, till you have well Determined upon these slanderers.

Escal. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly.—[Exit Duke.] Signior Lucio, did not you say, you know That friars, and such, were to be a suspicious person? Lucio. Causius non facit, quosquidam: honest in nothing, but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.

Escal. We shall intreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

Lucio. As ago in Vienna, on my word.

Escal. Call that same Isabel here once again; [To an Attendant.] I would speak with her: Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.

Escal. Say you!

Lucio. Yes, sir; I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly she'll be ashamed.

Re-enter Officers, with ISABELLA: the DUKE, in the Friar's habit, and Provost.

Escal. I will go darkly to work with her.

Lucio. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.

Escal. Come on, mistress: [To ISABELLA.] here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here come the rashal I spoke of; here with the provost, Escal. In very good time:—speak not to you, till we call upon you.

Lucio. Aun.

Escal. Come, sir: Did you set these women on to slander lord Angelo? they have confess'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.

Escal. How! know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the devil Be sometime honour'd for his burning throne: What, you scoundrel! 'tis he should hear me speak.

Escal. The duke's in us; and we will hear you Look, you speak justly. [speak: Duke. Boldly, at least: But, O, poor souls, Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox?

Good night to your redress. Is the duke gone? Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust, Puts to retort your most unjust plea, And put your trial in the villain's mouth, Which here you come to accuse.

Lucio. This is the rashal; this is he I spoke of.

Escal. Why, thou unavouch'd and unhallow'd friar! Is't not enough, thou hast suborn'd these women, To accuse this worthy man; but, in foul mouth, And in the witness of his proper car, To call him villain?

And then to glance from him to the duke himself; To tax him with injustice! Take him hence; To the rack with him:—We'll teaze you jointly by, But we will know this purpose:—What! unjust?

Duke. Be not so hot; the duke.

Dare no more stretch this finger of mine, than he Dare rack his own; his subject am I not, Nor here provincial: My business in this state

Made me a looker-on here in Vienna, Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble, Till it o'er-run the stew: laws, for all faults; But faults so countenanc'd, that the strong statutes

Stand a hair low, the barber's shop, As much in mock as mark. [prison

Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to

Aug. What can you vouch against him, signior? Is this the man that you did tell us of? [Lucio? Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord. Come hither good-man bald-pate: Do you know me?

Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably, sir,

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest, I love the duke, as I love myself, Aug. [to Lucio.] You'll hang this villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses.

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withal:— Away with him to prison:—Where is the provost?—Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more:—Away with those glibpets too, and with the other confederate companion.

[The Friar's hands on the Duke.

Duke. Stay, sir; stay awhile.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir: come, sir; foh, sir: Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooled, must you? show your knife's visage, with a pot to you! shew your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd an hour! Will't not off! [Pulls off the Friar's hood, and discovers the Duke.

Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a duke.

First, provost, let me bate these gentle three:— Sneak not away, sir; [to Lucio.] for the friar and you Must have a word anon:—lay hold on him.

Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. What you have spoke, I pardon; sit you down.

[To Escalus.

We'll borrow place of him—Sir, by your leave:

[To Angelo.

Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can do thee office? if thou hast,

Rely upon it till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out.

Aug. O my dread lord, I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can, be undiscoverable, When I perceive, your grace, like power divine, Hath look'd upon my passes; Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame,
But let my trial be mine own confession;
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death;
Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana:—
Say, was thou e'er contracted to this woman?
Ang. I was, my lord.

Duke. Go take her hence and marry her instantly.
Do you the office, friar; which consummate,
Return him here again:—Go with him, provost.

[Exit ANGELO, MARIANA, PETER, and PROVOST.
Escal. My lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonour,
Than at the strageness of it.

Duke. Come hither, Isabel: Your friar is now your prince: As I was then Advertising, and holly to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.

Isab. O give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pai'd
Your honourable house,
Tho' you are pardon'd, Isabel:
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.
Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;
And you may marvel, why I obscure'd myself,
Labouring to save his life; and would not rather
Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,
Than let him so be lost: O most kind maid,
It was the swift celerity of his death,
Which I did think with slower foot came on,
That brain'd my purpose: But, peace be with him!
That life is better life, past fearing death,
Than that which lives to fear; make it your comfort,
So happy is your brother.

Re-enter ANGELO, MARIANA, PETER, and PROVOST.
Isab. I do, my lord.

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here,
Whose soul imagination yet hath wrong'd
Your well defended honour, you must pardon
For Mariana's sake: but as he adjudg'd your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation
Of sacred charity, and of promise-break,
Then more dependent, for your brother's life,) The very mercy of the law eries out
Most audite, even from his proper tongue,
An Angelo for Claudio, death for death.
Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure:
Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure.
Thou, Angelo, thy fault's in this manifested,
Which though thou wouldst deny it, denies thee van:
We do condemn thee to the very block:
Where Claudio stoo'd to death, and with like haste;
Away with him.

Mari. O, my most gracious lord,
I hope on you will not mock me with a husband!
Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a hus-
Consenting to the safeguard of your honour, [band:
I thought your marriage fit; else imputation
For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
And choke your good to come: for his possessions,
Although by confession they are ours,
We do institute and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband.

Mari. O, my dear lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Never crave him; we are definitive.

Mari. Gentle, my liege,— [Kneeling.
Duke. You do but lose your labour;
Away with him to death.—Now, sir, [to Lucro.

[Part.

Mari. O, my good lord!—Sweet Isabel, take my Lend me your knees, and all my life to come
I'll lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke. Against all sense do you importune her:
Should she kneel down, in mercy of this fact,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror.

Mari. Isabel, Isabel, Isabel, Isabel!—[Kneeling
Hold up your hands, say nothing, I'll speak all.
They say, best men are mounding out of faults;
And, for the most, become much more the better.
For being a little bad: so may my husband,
O, Isabel! will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He did for Claudio's death.

Isab. Most bounteous sir,— [Kneeling
Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother liv'd: I partly think,
A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me; since it is so,
Let him not die: My brother bad but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died:
For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intent;
And must be buried but as an intent
That perished by the way: thoughts are no subjects.

Intents but merely thoughts.

Mari. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit's unprofitable: stand up, I say,—I have but thought me of another fault:—
Provoz, how came it, Claudio was beheaded
At an usual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed?

Prov. No, my good lord; it was by private message.

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office:
Give me your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord:
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;
Yet did repent me after more advice:
For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
That should by private order else have died,
I have reserv'd alive.

Duke. What's he?

Prov. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou had'st done so by Claudio,
Go, fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost.

Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise
As you, lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should dye so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.
Ang. I am sorry, that such sorrow I procure:
And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart,
That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provost, Barnardine, Claudio, and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prov. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a friar told me of this pain:—
SIRRah, thou art saide to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar's't thy life according. Thou'rt condemn'd; But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come:—Friar, advise him;
I leave him to your hand.—What muffled fellow's

Prov. This is another prisoner, that I say'd, [that I

Of this play, the light or comic part is very natural and pleasant, but the grave scenes, if a few passages be excepted, have more labour than elegance. The plot is rather intricate than awful. The time of the action is indefinite: some time, we know not how much, must have elapsed between the receipt of the duke and the imprisonment of Claudio; for he must have learned the story of Mariana in his disgrace, or he delegated his power to a man already known to be corrupted. The unity of action and place are sufficiently preserved.—JOHNSON.

There are very few readers whose admiration for Shakespeare will not be outraged by reading the above harsh and tasteless observations of Dr. Johnson. It may perhaps alloy their irritation to find that all critics are not equally cold to the various merits of this beautiful play.—"Of Measure for Measure," says Dr. Drake, independent of the comic characters, which afford a rich fund of pantomime, it is not only the variety of expression from the lovely example of female excellence exhibited in the person of Isabella. Poetry, spotless purity, tenderness combined with firmness, and an eloquence the most persuasive, unite to render her singularity interesting and attractive. "C'est un ange de la terre sous l'habit humain d'une femme. To save the life of her brother she hastens to quiet the peaceful reverie of her consort, and moves amid the vortices of corruption and hypocrisy amid the sensual, the vulgar, and the profane, as a being of a higher order, as a ministering spirit from the throne of grace. Her first interview with Angelo, and the immediately subsequent one with Claudio, exhibit, along with the most engaging feminine diffidence and modesty, an extraordinary display of intellectual energy, of deverent argument, and of indigent combination of the headings before a lord deputy, are directed with a strong appeal both to his understanding and his heart, while her sagacity and address in the communication of the result of her appointment with him to her brother, of whose weakness and resolution she is justly apprehensive, are, if possible, still more skilfully marked, and add another to the multitude of instances which have established for Shakespeare an unrivaled intimacy with the finest feelings of our nature." There is one beauty in this play which I do not remember to have seen observed, though the vice of Claudio is one which the world is inclined to think too lightly of, and though there was offered so easy and popular a way of exciting an interest for him in the minds of the audience, by diminishing the baseness of his offence, and representing the transgressor rather as a martyr than a culprit; Shakespeare has no instance breathed a syllable that might seem to extenuate his guilt. Throughout the play, the crime which is so much defined, is represented as an object of disgust, both in its own impurity and in the mean, the selfish, and the loathsome baseess of its sufferers. The very passages of a gross and indelicate nature that occur, only serve to heighten the general, moral effect of the whole, and raise the reader's admiration of the holy chastity of Isabel, by placing it in contrast with the repulsive levity of the vortices of licentiousness.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

This play was printed in quarto in the year 1600; and entered at Stationers' Hall, August 29, of that year: and as it is not mentioned by Meres, in his list of our Author's works published in 1608, the date of its production is ascertained with more than usual accuracy.

Mr. Pope says that the plot was taken from the fifth book of the Celestial Springs.—Mr. Steevens conceives that was what Arizona, but Spenser afforded the subject of the play, and that it was taken from the Fairy Queen, b. 2, s. 4. But as both these SCENE.—Messina.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Messenger.

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Aragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. He is very near by this; he was three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

Mess. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it.

Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness: There are no faces truer than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?

Mess. I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is the matter that you ask, niece?

Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

Mess. O, he is returned, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina, and challeng'd Cupid at the flight: and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challeng'd him at the bird-bolt. — I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man, he hath an excellent stomach.

Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady:—But what is he to a lord?

Leon. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed: he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing.—Well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece: there is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there is a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the old man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse: for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature. — Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sword brother.

Mess. Is it possible?

Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block.

Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.

Beat. No: an he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord! he will hang upon him like a dis-
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together.

[Exeunt all but Benedict and Claudio.

Claud. Benedict, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not: but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. When you question me as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No, I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

Bene. Why, faith, methinks she is too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her; that she was not other than she is, and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

Claud. Thou thinkest I am in sport; I pray thee, tell me truly how thou likest her.

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow? or do you play the flouting Jack; to tell us Cupid is a good finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye, she is the sweetest lady that ever I saw.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter: there's her cousin, and she was not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope, you have no intent to turn husband; have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn it contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Bene. Is it come to this, faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three-score again? Go to, faith: an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigwayh Sundays. Look, Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

Tell. Bene. I would, your grace would constrain me to.

D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Tell. You hear, count Claudio: I can be secret: as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance,—mark you this, on my allegiance—He is in love. With who?—now that is your grace's part.—Mark, how short his answer is: With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.

Tell. Like the old tale, my lord: "It is not so, nor was not so: but, indeed, God forbid it should be so."

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

Tell. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Claud. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

Tell. And, by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

Claud. Do you not think this a thousand pound the man be cured.

Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady.

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, niece.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Mess. Don Pedro is approached.

Enter Don Pedro, attended by Balthasar and others, Don John, Claudio, and Benedick.

D. Pedro. Good signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, cometh such a mains, but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly.

—It think, this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedict, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedict: we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself:—Be happy, lady! for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders, for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Beat. I wonder that you will still be talking, signior Benedict; no body marks you.

Bene. What, my dear Lady Disdain! are you yet living?

Beat. It is possible, disdain should die, while she hath such meet food to feed it, as signior Benedict? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

Bene. Then is courtesy a turncoat.—But it is certain, I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted: and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart: for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women; they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I think God, and my cold blood, are much of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Bene. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratched face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere a face as yours were.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue, is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would, my horse had the speed of your tongue; and so good a continuator: but keep your way o' God's name; I have done.

Beat. You always end with a jade's trick; I know you well by old.

D. Pedro. This is the sum of all:—Leonato,—signior Claudio, and signior Benedict,—my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him, we shall stay here at least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Tell. I swear, my lord, you shall not be forsworn. — Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.
ACT I.—SCENE III.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.
Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.
Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.
Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks: but that I will have a rochet winded in my forehead, or hang my bungle in an invisible baldric, all women shall pardon me: Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for the which I may go the finer,) I will live a bachelor.
D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.
Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love: prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad maker’s pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house, for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.
Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

In the savage bull doth bear the yoke.
Bene. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull’s horns, and set them in my forehead: and let me be vilely painted; and in such great letters as they write, Here is good horse to hire, let them signify under my sign,—

Here you may see Benedick the married man.
Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be hero-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shorty.
Bene. I look for an earthquake too.

D. Pedro. Nay, mock not, mock not: The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the gands are but slightly basted on neither: ere you float old ends any further, examine your conscience; and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick.
Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving friend, Benedick.
Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not: The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the gands are but slightly basted on neither: ere you float old ends any further, examine your conscience; and so I leave you. [Exit Benedick.
Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach; teach it And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn Any hard lesson that may do thee good.
Claud. Hath Leontado any son, my lord?
D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she’s his only heir: Dost thou affect her, Claudius?
Claud. O my lord, When you went onward on this ended action, I look’d upon her with a soldier’s eye, That lik’d, but had a rougher task in hand Than to drive liking to the name of love:

But now I am return’d, and that was-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Saying, I ilk’d her ere I went to wars.

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently And tire the hearer with a book of words: If the first love fair Hero, cherish it; And I will break with her, and with her father, And thou shalt have her: Wasn’t to this end, That thou begaun’t to twist so fine a story?
Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love, That know love’srief by his complexion! But lest my liking might too sudden seem, I would have you forth with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader The fairest grant is the necessity: [than the flood! Look, what will serve, is fit: ‘tis once, thou lov’st: And I will fit thee with the remedy.

I know, we shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise, And send her Hero I am Claudius, and if he found In her basom I’ll unclasp my heart, And take her hearing prisoner with the force And strong encounter of my amorous tale: Then, after, to her father will I break; And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine: In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Leon. How now, brother? Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?
Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dreamed not of.
Leon. Are they good?
Ant. As the event stamps them; but they have a good cover, they shew well outward. The prince and count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in my orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: The prince discovered to Claudio, that he loved my niece your daughter, and meant to acquaint her; but being young and innocent, he found her accorndant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.
Leon. Hath the fellow any wit, that told you this?
Ant. A good sharp fellow; I will send for him, and question him yourself.

Leon. No, no; we will hold it as a dream, till it appear itself— But I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this be true. Go you, and tell her of it. [Severals persons cross the stage.] Cousins, you know what you have to do.—O, I cry you mercy, friend: you go with me, and I will use your skill!—Good cousins, have a care this busy time.

Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter Don John and Conrade.

Con. What the gouger, my lord? why are you thus out of measure sad?
D. John. There is no measure in the occasion that breedeth it, therefore the sadness is without limit.
Con. You should hear reason.
D. John. And when I have heard it, what blessing bringeth it?
Con. If not a present remedy, yet a patient sufferance.
D. John. I wonder, that thou being (as thou say’st thou art) born under Saturn, guest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause, and smile at no man's jests; eat when I have stomach, and wait for no man's leisure; sleep when I am drowsy, and tend to no man's business; laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this, till you may do it without constraint. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath taken you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should take true root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself: it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his grace; and it better fits my blood to be disdain'd of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any: in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be derided that I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle, and enfranchised with a clog: therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage: If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would do my liking: in the mean time, let me be that I am, and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. John. I make all use of it, for I use it only.

Who comes here? What news, Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Boro. I came to add something from a great supper; the prince, your brother, is royally entertained by Leonato; and I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.

D. John. Will it serve for any model to build mischief on? What is he for a fool, that betroths himself to unquietness?

Boro. Marry, it is your brother's right hand.

D. John. Who? the most exquisite Claudio?

Boro. Even he.

D. John. A proper squire! And who, and who? which way looks he?

Boro. Marry, on Hero, the daughter and heir of Leonato.

D. John. A very forward March-chick! How came you to this?

Boro. Being entertained for a perfumer, as I was smoking a moisty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt me behind the arras; and there heard it agreed upon, that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither; this may prove food to my displeasure; that young start-nath hath all the glory of my overthrow; if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way: You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper; their cheer is the greater, that I am subdued: Would the cook wore of my mind!—Shall we go prove what's to be done?

Boro. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him, but I am heart-burnt an hour after. Hero. He is a man of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He was an excellent man, that were made just in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other, too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattleth.

Leon. Then half signior Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in signior Benedick's face.

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she is too curt.

Beat. Too curt is more than curt: I shall lessen God's sending that way: for it is said, God sends a curst cow short horns; but to a cow too curt he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curt, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening: Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light upon a husband, that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentlewoman? He that hath a beard, is more than a youth; and he that hath no beard, is less than a man: and he that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: Therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bear-herd, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, go you into hell!

Beat. No; but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maid's: so deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bushes sit, and there live we merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, [to Hero.] I trust you will be ruled by your father.

Beat. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, Father, as it please you.—but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, Father, as it please me. She, she is too curt.

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-mastered with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of her life to a clod ofwayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none; Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not wool'd in good time; if the prince be too important, tell him, there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer. For hear me, Hero; Wooring, wedding, and repeating, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly-modest, as a measure full of Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasard; Don John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and others, masked.

Don Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing; I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

Don Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

Don Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend, the hound should be like the ease!

Don Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house.

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched. Don Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love. [Takes her aside.]

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

MARG. So would not I, for your own sake, for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

MARG. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearse may cry,

Amen.

MARG. God match me with a good dancer!

Balth. Amen.

MARG. And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Balth. No more words; the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough; you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the waggling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Hero. You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man: He's in his dry hand up and down; you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come; do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself?

Go to, mum, you are he; graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainful,—and that I had my good wit out of the Hundred merry Tales;—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool; for his true gift is in devising impossible slander: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy; for he both pleaseth men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him; I am sure he is in the street; I would he had boarded me.

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beat. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Exeunt all but Don John, Borachio, and Claudio.]

Don John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it: The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

Bene. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing. This is an accident of hourly proof, Which I mistrusted not: Farewell therefore, Hero! [Exit Bene.'

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene. Count Claudio?

Claud. Yea, the same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claud. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, count? What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer's chain? or under your arm, like a lieutenant's scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

Claud. I pray you, leave me.

Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man, 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exeunt all.]

Bene. Alas! poor hurt fowl! Now will he creep into sedges.—But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool!—Ha, it be mine. I go under that title, because I am merry.—Yea; but so; I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, the bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. Now, signior, where's the count? Did you see him?

Bene. Troth, my lord, I have played the part of lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a warren; I told him, and, I think, I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being foraken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro. To be whipped! What's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoy'd with finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion, and he saith it.

D. Pedro. Will thou make a trust a transgression?

The transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet it had not been amiss, the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself; and the rod he might have bestow'd on you, who, as I take it, have stol'n his bird's nest.

D. Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you; the gentleman, that danced with her, told her, she is much wrong'd by you.

Bene. O, she misused me past the endurance of a block; an oak, but with one green leaf on it, would have answer'd her; my very visor began to assume life, and scold with her: She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince's jester; that I was duller than a great thaw; huddling jest upon jest, with such impossible conveyance, upon me, that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me; she speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her, she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit; yea, and have sold his club to make the fire too. Could she not of her? you shall find her the infernal Ale in good apparel. 'Twould to God, some scholar would conjure her; for, certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so, indeed, all disquiet, horror, and perturbation, follow her.

Re-enter Claudio, Beatrice, Leonato, and Hero.

D. Pedro. Look, here she comes.

Bene. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes, that you can devise to send me on; I will fetch you a toothpick now from the farthest inch of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's foot; fetch you a hair off the great Cham's beard; do you any embassy to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words' conference with this happy: You have no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not; I cannot endure my lady Tongue.

[Exit.

D. Pedro. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me a while; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before, he won it of me with false dice; therefore your grace may well say, I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady, you have put him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudia, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? Sick?

Claud. Neither my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well: but civil, count; civil as an orange, and as light as a feather.

D. Pedro. Faith, lady, I think thy blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudia, I have wood in thy name, and fair Hero is won; I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained: name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

Leon. Count, take of me this daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

Beat. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much.

Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you, and do upon the exchange.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care:—My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.

Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good lack, for alliance! Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sun-burn'd; I may sit in a corner, and cry, heigh ho! for a husband.

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your father's getting: Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days; your grace is too costly to wear every day: But, I beseech your grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all with, and no matter.

D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be made such a thing, for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

Beat. No, sure, my lord, my mother cry'd; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born.—Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle. — By your grace's pardon.

[Exit Beatrice.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her, my lord; she is never sad but when she sleeps; and not ever sad then: for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamed of unhappiness, and walked herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no means; she mocks all her woors out of suit.

D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. Count Claudia, when mean you to go to church?
ACT II.—SCENE III.

Claud. Tomorrow, my lord: Time goes on chases, till love have all his rites.

Leon. Not until this dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief too, to have all things answer my mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us; I will, in the interim, undertake one of Hercules' labours: which is, to bring Signor Benedick and the lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, the one with the other. I will fain have it a match; and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watchings.

Claud. Any bar, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero! Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know: thus far can I praise him; he is of a noble strain, of approved valor, and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin that she shall fall in love with Benedick: and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer; his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

D. John. It is so; the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yea, my lord, but I can cross it.

D. John. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

D. John. I will cross it, not with the breath of now.

Bora. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

Bora. I can, in any unsseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady’s chamber-window.

D. John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince your brother; spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightily hold up) to a contaminated state, such as one as I am.

D. Jbn. What proof shall I make of that?

Bora. Proof enough to mislead the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato: Look you for any other issue?

D. John. Only to dispute them, I will endeavour any thing else.

Bora. Go then, find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone; tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, as—in love of your brother’s honour who hath made this match; and his friend's reputation, who is thus liked to be cozened with the advice of a maid, — that you have discovered thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial; offer them instances; which shall bear no less likelihood, than to see me at her chamber-window; hear me call Margaret, Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this, the very night before the intended wedding: for, in the mean time, I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent; and there shall appear such seeming truth of Hero’s disloyalty, that jealousy shall be call’d assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

D. John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice: Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

Bora. Do you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

D. John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Benedick and a Boy.

Bene. Boy.—

Boy. Signior.

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that;—but I would have thee hence, and here again. [Exit Boy.—I do much wonder, that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his own scorn, by falling into love: And such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and fife; and now he would rather hear the orator and the pipe: I have known, when he would have walked ten mile afoot, to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain, and to the purpose, like as honest man, and a soldier; and now is he tauto' orthograph; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted, and see with these eyes! I cannot tell; I think not: I will not be swor, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I shall take my oath on it, till he have made an ex-tor of me. He shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair; yet I am well: another is wise; yet I am well: another is virtuous: yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich, she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll come: virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her; mild, or come not near me; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour. [Withdraws.

Enter Don Pedro, Leonato, and Claudio.

D. Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?

Claud. Yea, my good lord;—How still the even—

As hush'd on purpose to grace harmony! [Sing is, D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended, We'll fit the kid fox with a pennyworth.

Enter Balthazar, with music.

D. Pedro. Come, Balthazar, we'll hear that song again.
Balb. O good my lord, tax not so bad a voice
To slander music any more than once.
D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency,
To put a strange face on his own perfection:—
I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.
Balb. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing:
Since many a wonder doth commence his suit
To her he thinks not worthy; yet he woos;
Yet will he swear, he loves.
D. Pedro. Nay, pray thee, come:
Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Do it in notes.
Balb. Note this before my notes,
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.
D. Pedro. Why these are very crotchetts that he speaks:
Note, notes, forsooth, and noting! [Aside.
Bene. Now, Divine air! now is his soul ravished!
—Is it not strange, that sheeps' guts should have souls out of men's bodies?—Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

BALTHAZAR SINGS.

I. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more;
Men were deceivers ever;
One foot in sea, and one on shore;
To one thing constant never:
Then sigh not so,
But let them go.
And by you brittle and bony;
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into, Hey wony, wony.

II. Sing no more ditties, sing no me
Of dips and dool end heavy;
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since summer first was leavy.
Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song.
Balb. And an ill singer, my lord.
Claud. Ha! no; no, faith; thou singest well enough for a shift.
Bene. [Aside.] An he had been a dog, that should have howled thus, they would have hanged him: and, I pray God his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night crayon, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yea, marry; [to Claud.]—Dost thou hear, Balthazar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music; for to morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero's chamber-window.
Balb. The best I can, my lord.
D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exeunt BALTHAZAR and music.] Come hither, Leonato: What was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?
Claud. O, aye.—Stalk on, stalk on: the fowls sit. [Aside to Hero.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.
Bene. Isn't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it; but that she loves him with an enraged affection,—it is past the infinite of thought.
D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.
Claud. 'Faith, like enough.
Leon. O God! counterfeit! There never was counterfeite of passion came so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shews she? Claud. Bait the hook well; this fish will bite. [Aside.
Leon. What effects, my lord! She will sit you,—
You heard my daughter tell you how.
Claud. She did, indeed.
D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.
Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.
Bene. [Aside.] I should think this a gull, but that the white bearded fellow speaks it; knavery cannot, sure, hide itself in such reverence.
Claud. He hath taken the infection; hold it up. [Aside.
D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick.
Leon. No; and swears she never will: that's her torment.
Claud. 'Tis true, indeed: so your daughter says:
Shall I, says she, that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?
Leon. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him: for she'll be up twenty times a night: and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper:—my daughter tells us all.
Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.
Leon. O! When she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheet—

Claud. That. Leon. O! she tore the letter into a thousand halves; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would false her:—I measure him, says she, by my own spirit: for I should find out, if he write to me: yea, though I love him, I should.
Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobbs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses;
—O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!
Leon. She doth indeed; my daughter says so: and the vestacy hath so much overborne her, that my daughter sometime afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself: It is very true.
D. Pedro. It were good, that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.
Claud. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.
D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms to hang him: She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.
Claud. And she is exceeding wise.
D. Pedro. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.
Leon. O my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one, that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.
D. Pedro. I would she had bestowed this dotage on me: I would have daff'd all other respects, and made her half myself: I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what he will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?
D. Claud. Hero thinks surely, she will die: for she says, she will die if he love her not; and she will die ere she makes love known: and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will bite one breath of her accustomed crossness.
D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it: for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible spirit.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

BEATRICE Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner

Act II. Sc. 3.
ACT III.—SCENE I.

Benedick advances from the armour.

Beatrice, against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Beat. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me; if it had been painful, I would not have come.

Bene. You take pleasure then in the message?

Beat. Yes, as much as you may take upon a knave's point, and choke a daw withal;—You have no stomach, signior; fare you well. [Exit.

Bene. Ha! Against my will I am sent to bid you come to dinner—there's a double meaning in that. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you took pains to thank me—that's as much as to say, Any pains that I take for you are as easy as thanks.—If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain; if I do not love her, I am a Jew: I will go get her picture. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thee into the parlour; There thou shalt find my cousin Beatrice Properly with the prince and Claudio: Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula Walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse Is all of her; say, that thou overheard'st us; And bid her steal into the pleas'd bower, Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun, Forbid the sun to enter;—like favorites, Made proud by princes, that advance their pride Against that power that bred it:—there will she hide To listen our purpose: This is thy office, [her, Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. I'll make her come, I warrant you, presently.

[Exit.

Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and down, Our talk must only be of Benedick: When I do name him, let it be thy part To praise him more than ever man did merit: My talk to thee must be, how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice: Of this matter Is little Cupid's crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hear-say. Now begin; Enter Beatrice, behind.

Beat. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Beat. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me; if it had been painful, I would not have come.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Scene 11.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

Don Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then I go toward Aragon.

Claud. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe me.

Don Pedro. Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be hold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth; he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him: he hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Bene. Gallants, I am not so as I have been.

Leon. So say I; methinks, you are sadder.

Claud. I hope, he be in love.

Don Pedro. Hang him, truant; there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

Bene. I have the tooth-ach.

Don Pedro. Draw it.

Bene. Hang it!

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.

Don Pedro. What? sigh for the tooth-ach?

Leon. Where is but a humour or a worm?

Bene. Well, every one can master a grief, but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

Don Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be that he hath to strange disguises; as, to be a Dutchman to-day; a Frenchman to-morrow; or in the shape of two countries at once, as a German from the waist downward, all slops; and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doubtlet: Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: he brushes his hat o'mornings; What should that bode?

Don Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him; and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stifled tennis-balls.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

Don Pedro. Nay, he rubs himself with civet: Can you smell him out by that?

Claud. That's as much as to say, The sweet youth's in love.

Don Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was it wont to wash his face?

Don Pedro. Yes, or to paint himself for which I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit; which is now crept into a lustrestring, and now governed by stops.

Don Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him: Conclude, conclude, he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

Don Pedro. That would I know too; I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and, in despite of all, dies for him.

Don Pedro. She shall be buried with her face upwards.
Bene. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ache.—Old signior, walk aside with me; I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Enter Benedick and Leonato.

D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'Tis even so: Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice; and then the two bears will not bite one another, when they meet.

Enter Don John.

D. John. My lord and brother, God save you.

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

D. John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

D. John. If it please you,—yet count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of, concerns him.

D. Pedro. What's the matter?

D. John. Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

[To Claudio.

D. Pedro. You know, he does.

D. John. I know not that, when he knows what I know.

Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.

D. John. You may think, I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest: For my brother, I think, he holds you well; and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage: surely, suit ill spent, and labour ill bestowed!

D. Pedro. Why, what's the matter?

D. John. I came hither to tell you: and, circumstancesshortened, (for she hath been too long a talking of,) the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who! Hero?

D. John. Even she; Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Disloyal?

D. John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness; I could say, she were worse; think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till farther warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered; even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, to-morrow wed her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

Claud. May this be so?

D. Pedro. I will not think it.

D. John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know: if you will follow me, I will shew you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see any thing to-night why I should not marry her to-morrow; in the congregation, where I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And, as I would for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

D. John. I will disparage her no farther, till you are my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue shew itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turn'd!

Claud. O mischief strangely thwarted!

So will you say, when you have seen the sequel.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?
stable, are to present the prince's own person; if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay by 'r lady, that, I think, he cannot.

Dogh. Five shillings to one of 'e, with any man that knows the statutes, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince be willing; for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. By 'r lady, I think, it be so.

Dogh. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night: an there be any matter of weight chances, call up me: keep your fellows' counsels and your own, and good night.—Come, neighbour.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear your charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dogh. One word more, honest neighbours: I pray you, watch about signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night: Adieu, be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.]

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What! Conrade,—

Watch. Peace, stir not. [Aside.]

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Con. Here, man, I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought, there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close then upon this pent-house, for it drizzles rain; and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villany should be so dear?

Bora. Thou should'st rather ask, if it were possible any villany should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it. But what shows thou art unconfirmed? Thou knowest, that the fashion of a duchess, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Touch! I may as well say, the fool's the fool. But see'st thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. I know that Deformed; he has been a vile thief this seven year; he goes up and down like a gentleman: I remember his name. [Aside.]

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No; 'twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily he turns about all the hot bloods, between fourteen and five and thirty? sometime, fashioning them like Pharaoh's soldiers in the reecy painting; sometime, like god Bel's priests in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm- eaten tapestry, where his cod-piece seems as nasy as his club?

Con. All this I see; and see, that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man: But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so neither: but know, that I have tonight woot Margaret, the lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her mistress' chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night,—I tell this tale vilely:—I should first tell thee, how the Prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw aar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought thou, Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio, but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oats, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villany, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. We charge you in the prince's name, stand.

2 Watch. Call up the right master Constable: we have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them; I know him, he wears a lock.

Con. Masters, masters.

2 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters,—

1 Watch. Never speak; we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bora. We are likely to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well. [Exit Ursula.]

Marg. Truth, I think, your other rabato were better.

Hero. Nay, one way true, good Meg. I'll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant, your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a foole, and thou art another; I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner: and your gown a most rare fashion, ho! I saw the duchess of Milan's gown that they praise so.

Hero. O, that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth, it's but a night-gown in respect of yours: Cloth of gold, and cuts, and laced with silver; set with pearls, down sleeves, side-sleeves, and skirts round, underborne with a blueish tinsel: but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, you are not ten on't.

Hero. Give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!

Marg. Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fye upon thee! art not ashamed?

Marg. Of what lady? of speaking honourably? Is not marriage honourable in a bigger? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your reverence,—a husband; an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I'll of-
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

Leon. Brief, I pray you; for you see, 'tis a busy time with me.

Dogh. Marry, this it is, sir.

Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends?

Dogh. Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off the matter; an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no honester than I.

Dogh. Comparisons are odious; palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dogh. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousness on me! ha!

Dogh. Ye, and 'twere a thousand times more than 'tis: for I hear as good exception on your worship, as of any man in the city, and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so aia.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have tall a couple of us arrang knaves as any in Messina.

Dogh. A good old man, sir; he will be talking; as they say, When the age is in, the wit is out; God help us! it is a world to see!—Well said, i'faith, neighbour Verges;—well, God's a good man; an two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind.—An honest soul i'faith, sir; by my troth he is, as ever broke bread: but God is to be worshipped: All men are not alike; all neighbours.

Leon. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

Dogh. Gifts, that God gives.

Leon. I must leave you.

Dogh. One word, sir: our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two auspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me; I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

Dogh. It shall be sufficiency.

Leon. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leon. I will wait upon them; I am ready.

[Exit Leonato and Messenger.

Dogh. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Sracali, bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gale: we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogh. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that [touching his forehead] shall drive some of them to a non com: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gale.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar Claudio, Benedict, Hero, and Beatrice, &c.

Leon. Come, friar Francis, be brief; only to the plain, and the plain; and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.
Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

Claud. No.

Leon. To be married to her, friar; you come to marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count?

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoin'd, I charge you, on your souls, to utter it.

Claud. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None, my lord.

Friar. Know you any, count?

Leon. I dare make his answer, none.

Claud. O, what men can dare! what men may do! what men do so! not knowing what they do!

Bene. How now! Interjections? Why, then some be of laughing, as, ha! ha! ha! he!

Claud. Stand thee by, friar.—Father, by your Will you with free and unconstraining soul [leave; Give me this maid, your daughter?

Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claud. And what have I to give you back, whose Master enterpriseth this rich and precious gift? [worth

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claud. Sweet prince, you become me noble thank Thence, Leonato, take her back again; [falsely.—

Give not this rotten orange to your friend! She's but the sign and semblance of her honour: Behold, how like a maid she blushes here:

O, what authority and show of truth Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Comes not that blood, as modest evidence, To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear, All you that see her, that she were a maid, By those exterior shows? But she is none: She knows the heat of a luxurious bed: Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Leon. What do you mean, my lord?

Claud. Not to be married, Not to knit my soul to an approved wanton.

Leon. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof Have vanquished the resistance of her youth, And made defeat of her virginity,

Claud. I know what I would say; if I have known you, you'll say, she did embrace me as a husband, [her, And so extenuate the 'foresaid sin: No, Leonato, I never tempted her with word too large: But, as a brother to his sister show'd

Bashful sincerity, and comely love,

Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?

Claud. Out on thy seeming! I will write against it: You seem to me as Dian in her orb; As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown; But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals That rage in savage sensuality.

Hero. Is my lord well, that he doth speak so wide?

Leon. Sweet prince, why speak you not now?

Claud. What should I speak?

I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about To lack my dear friend to a common stole.

Leon. Are these things spoken? or do I but dream?

D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are Bene. This looks not like a nuptial [true.

Hero. True, O God!

Leon. To Hecatone, stand I here?

Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother? Is this face 'Hero's? Are our eyes our own?

Leon. All this is so; But what of this, my lord?

Claud. Let me but move one question to your, And, by that fatherly and kindly power [daughter;

That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.

Hero. O God, defend me! how am I beset! —

What kind of catechising call you this?

Cloud. To make you answer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name With any just reproach?

Cloud. Marry, that can Hero; Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.

What man has he talk'd with you yeernight Past at your window, betwixt twelve and one?

Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.

Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.

D. Pedro. Why, then you are no maiden.—Leonato, I am sorry you must hear; Upon mine honour, Myself, my brother, and this grieved count.

Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night, Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window; Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain, Confess'd the vile encounters they had have A thousand times in secret.

D. John.

Fy, fy! they are Not to be nam'd my lord, not to be look'd at; There is not chastity enough in language. Without offence, to utter them: Thus, pretty lady, I am charge'd to say to thy much misgovernment.

Cloud. O Hero! what a Hero hadst thou been, If half thy outward graces had been placed About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart! But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell, Thou pure impurity, and impious purity! For thee I'll look up to the gate of love, And on my eyes- lids shall conjecture hang, To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm, And never shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me!

[HERO SCREAMS.

Bent. Why, how now, cousin Hero? wherefore sink you down.

D. John. Come, let us go: these things, come Smother her spirits up. [thus to light, [Exeunt Don Pedro, Don John, and Claudius.

Bene. How doth the lady?

Bent. Dead, I think:—help, uncle;—

Friar! Hero! why Hero!—Uncle!—Signor Benedict!

Leon. O fate, take not away thy friend's hand! Death is the fairest cover for her shame, That may be wish'd for.

Bent.

How now, cousin Hero?

Friar. Have comfort, lady.

Leon.

Friar. Yea; Wherefore should she not

Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny [thing

The story that is printed in my blood? —

Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes:

For did I think thou would'st not quickly die, Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shame, Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches, Strike at thy life. Griev'd I, I had but one?

Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame?

Her. O, oce too much by this, Friar! Why had I one?

Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?

Why had I not with charitable hand, Took up a beggar's issue at my gates;

Who smirched thus, and mire with infamy, I might have said, No part of it is mine.

This shame derives itself from unknown laws?

But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I prais'd;

And mine that I was proud on; mine so much, That I myself was to myself not mine,

Valuing of her, why, she—O, she is fallen
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

Leon. What shall become of this? What will this do?
Friar. Marry, this, well carried, shall on her be—Change slander to remorse; that is some good; half
But not for that, dream I on this strange course,
But on this travail look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Upon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be Exemted, pitied, and excus'd,
Of every hearer: For it so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
While we enjoy it; but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value, then we find
The virtue, that possession would not show us
While it was ours: So will it fare with Claudio;
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination;
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparel'd in more precious habit,
More moving-delicat, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she lived indeed:—then shall he mourn
(If ever love had interest in his liver,)
And wish he had not so accus'd her;
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event in better shape
Than he can of his or Claudio's mood.
But if all aim but this be levill'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infancy:
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
(As best befits her wounded reputation.)
In some repressive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.
Bene. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you:
And though, you know, my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this
As secretly, and justly as your soul
Should with your body.
Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.
Friar. 'Tis well consider'd; presently away;
For to strange sores strangely they strain the Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day, [cure.—
Perhaps, is but prolong'd; have patience, and endure. [Exeunt Friar, Hero, and Leonato.
Bene. Signior Beatrice, have you kept all this while?
Beat. Yes, and I will weep awhile longer.
Bene. I will not desire that.
Beat. You have no reason, I do it freely.
Bene. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is wrong'd.
Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would not her.
Bene. Is there any way to shew such friendship?
Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.
Bene. May a man do it?
Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours.
Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you;
Is not that strange?
Beat. As strange as the thing I know not: It were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you;
but believe me not; and yet I lie not; I confess nothing, or I deny nothing:—I am sorry for my cousin.
Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thouorest me.
Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.
Bene. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says, I love not you.
Beat. Will you not eat your word?
Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it: I protest, I love thee.
Beat. Why then, God forgive me!
Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?
Beat. You have said me in a happy hour; I was about to protest I loved you.
Bene. And do it with all thy heart.
Beat. I love you with so much of my heart that none is left to protest.
Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.
Beat. Kill Claudio.
Bene. What? Claudio, not for the wide world.
Beat. You kill me to deny it: Farewell.
Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.
Beat. I am gone, though I am here:—There is no love in you:—Nay, I pray you, let me go.
Bene. Beatrice,—
Beat. In faith, I will go.
Bene. We'll be friends first.
Beat. You dare easer be friends with me, than Fight with mine enemy.
Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?
Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain,
That hath slandered, scorned, dishonoured my kinswoman?—O, that I were a man!—What! bear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then with palms, accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour.—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.
Bene. Hear me, Beatrice;—
Beat. Talk with a man out at a window!—a pro-er saying.
Bene. Nay but, Beatrice;—
Beat. Sweet Hero!—she is wronged, she is slan-
dered, she is undone.
Bene. Beat—
Beat. Princes, and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a godly count confect; a sweet gallant, surely! O that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But mankind is melted into courtesies, valour into compliment, and sumptuousness into small foolishness;
and triest men too; he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it:—I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.
Bene. Tarry, good Beatrice: By this hand, I love thee.
Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.
Beat. Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?
Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.
Beat. Enough, I am engaged, I will challenge him; I will kiss your hand, and so leave you: By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account:
As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say, she is dead; and so, farewell.
[Execut.

SCENE II.—A Prison.
Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns;
and the Watch, with Cowards and Borachio.
Dogb. Are you all a whole company appeared?
Verg. O, a stout'and a cushion for the sexton!
Sexton. Which be the factoris?
Dogb. Marry, that am I and my partner.
Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.
Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dogb. Yes, marry, let them come before me.—
What is your name, friend?
Bora. Borachio.
Dogb. Pray write down—Borachio.——Yours, sir.
Dogb. Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.
Dogb. Write down—master gentleman Conrade. —
Masters, do you serve God!
Con. Bora. Yes, sir, we hope.
Dogb. Write down—that they hope they serve God;—and write God first; for God defend but God;—For they are gentlemen!—Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves: and it will go near to be thought so shortly.
How answer you for yourselves.
Con. marry, sir, we say we are none.
Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you;
but I will go about with him.—Come you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear, sir; I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.
Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.
Dogb. Well, stand aside.—Fore God, they are both in a tale: Have you writ down—that they are none?
Sexton. Master constable, you go not the way to examine; you must call forth the watch that are their acquaintance.
Dogb. 'Yea, marry, that's the eftest way:—Let the watch come forth:—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, assure these men.
1 Watch. This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.
Dogb. Write down—prince John a villain:—Why
this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother—villain.
Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.
Dogb. Pray thee, fellow, peace; I do not like thy look, I promise thee.
Sexton. What heard you him say else?
2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.
Dogb. Write down—Prince John a villain:—Why
this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother—villain.
Sexton. What else, fellow?
Dogb. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.
Dogb. 0 villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.
Sexton. What else?
2 Watch. This is all.
Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away; Hero was in this manner accused, in this very maner refused, and upon the grief of this, suddenly died.—Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonardo; I will go before, and shew him their examination.
[Exit.
Dogb. Come, let them be opinioned.
Verg. Let them be in band.
Con. Off, coxcom!
Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down—the prince's officer, coxcom!—Come, bind them.—Thou naughty varlet!
[Con. Away! you are an ass, you are an ass.
Dogb. Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years:—O that he were here to write me down—an ass! but, masters, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass:—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness. I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself; and 'tis not wisdom, thus to second grief Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsel, Which falls into mine ears as poisonous
As water in a sieve: give not me counsel; Nor let no comforter delight mine ear, But such a one whose words do suit with mine. Bring me a father, that so lov'd his child, Whose joy of her is overwhelm'd like mine, And bid him speak of patience; Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine, And let it answer every strain for strain; As thus for thus, and such a grief for such, In every lineament, branch, shape, and form: If such a one will smile, and stroke his heard: Cry—sorrow, wag! and hem, when he should groan; Patch grief with provers; make misfortune drunk With candle-wasters; bring him yet to me, And I of him will gather patience, But there is no such man: For, brother, men Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief Which they themselves not feel; but, tasting it, Their counsel turns to passion, which before Would give preceptual medicine to rage, Petter strong madness in a silken thread, Charm ach with air, and agony with words: No, no; 'tis all men's office to speak patience To those that wring under the load of sorrow; But there is no such man. To be so moral, when he shall endure The like himself; therefore give me no counsel: My griefs cry louder than advertisement.

Ant. Therein do men from children nothing differ.

Leon. I pray thee, peace; I will be flesh and blood; For there was never yet philosopher, That could endure the tooth-ach patiently; However they have writ the style of gods, And made a pass at chance and sufferance.

Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself; Make those, that do offend you, suffer too.

Leon. There thou speakest 'tis reason: nay, I will do My soul doth tell me, Hero is belied; [so ;
And that shall Claudio know, so shall the prince, And all of them, that thus dishonour her.

Enter Don PEDRO and CLAUDIO.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio, hastily.

Don. Pedro. Good den, good den.

Clau. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords,—

Don. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord!—well, fare you well, my lord:—

Are you so hasty now?—well, all is one. [man,

Don. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old

Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling, Some of us would lie low.

Claud. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry, Thou, thou dost wrong me; thou dissembler, thou:— Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword, I fear thee not.

Claud. Marry, besavrsh my hand, If it should give your age such cause of fear. To faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leon. Thu'sh, rash, man, never never learnd and jest at me: I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool; As, under privilege of age, to brag

What I have done being young, or what would do,

Were I not old: know, Claudio, to thy head,

Thou hast so wrong'd mine innocent child and me,

That I will to mine reverence by;

And, with grey hairs, and brune of many days,

Do challenge thee to trial of a man.

I say, thou hast belied mine innocent child;

Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart,

And she lyes buried with her ancestors:

O! in a tomb where never scandal slept,

Save those of her's, brand'd by thy villany.

Claud. My villain!—

Thine, Claudio; thine I say.

Don. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord,

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare;

Despite his nice fence, and his active practice,

His Main of youth, and bloom of his good

Claud. Away. I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so daff'd me? Thou hast kill'd my child;

If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:

But that's no matter; let him kill one first; —

Win me, and wear me, let him answer me.

Come follow me, boy; come, sir boy, follow me:

Sir boy, I'll whip you from your joining fence;

Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother,—

Ant. Content yourself: God knows, I lov'd my

And she is dead, slander'd to death by villains;

That dare as well answer a man, indeed,

As I do to make virtuous the tongs of Boys, apes, braggers, Jacks, milksops!—

Don. Pedro. Brother Antony,— [yea,

Ant. Hold you content: What, man! I know them,

And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple:

Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys,

That lie, and cog, and fowl, deprave and slander,

Go anticy, and shew outward hideousness;

And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,

How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst, And this is all.

Leon. But, brother Antony,—

Ant. Come, 'tis no matter; Do not you meddle, let me deal in this. [patience.

Don. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your

My heart is sorry for your daughter's death;

But, on my honour, she was charg'd with nothing

But what was true, and very full of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord.—

Don. Pedro. I will not hear you.

Ant. —

Don. Pedro. No?

Ant. Come, brother, away:—I will be heard:—

And shall, Or some of us will smart for it.

[Exeunt LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Enter BERNEDICK.

Don. Pedro. See, see; here comes the man we went to seek.

K
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Cald. Now, signior! what news?
Bene. Good day, my lord.
D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: You are almost come to part almost a fray.
Cald. We had like to have had our two noses stuffed off with two old men without teeth.
D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother: What think'st thou? Had we thought, I doubt we should have been too young for them.
Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true valour:
I came to seek you both.
Cald. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away: Wilt thou use thy wit?
Bene. It is in my scabbard; Shall I draw it?
D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?
Cald. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit.—I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw, to please us.
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale:—Art thou sick, or angry?
Cald. What! courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.
Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me:—I pray you, choose another subject.
Cald. Nay, then give him another staff; this last was broke into pieces.
D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more; I think, he be angry indeed.
Cald. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.
Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?
Cald. God bless me from a challenge!
Bene. You are a villain:—I jest not:—I will make it good to you, dare with what you dare, and when you dare:—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you: Let me hear from you.
Cald. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.
D. Pedro. What a feast! a feast?
Cald. I faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a capital head and a capon, the which if I do not carve most curiously, say, my knife's meat.—Shall I not find you then?
Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.
D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day: I said, thou hadst a fine wit; True, says she, a fine little one: No, said I, a great wit; Right, says she, a great good one: Nay, said I, a good wit; Just, said she, it hurts nobody: Nay, said I, the gentlemen is wise; Certain, said she, a wise gentleman: Nay, said I, he hath the tongues: That I believe, she said, for he shone a thing to me on Monday night, which he foresaw on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues. Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet, at last, she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the patron in man.
Cald. For the which she wert heartily, and said, she cared not.
D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly: the old man's daughter told us all.
Cald. All? and, moreover, God saw him when he was in the garden.
D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensible Benedick's head?
Cald. Yea, and text underneath, 'Bore duells Beneick the married man?'
Bene. Fare well, boy! you know my mind;
I will leave you now to your gossip-like humors, you break jests as braggers do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not.—My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you: I must discontinue your company: you brother, the bastard, is flees from Messina: you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady: For my lord Lack-head, there he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him.
[Exit Benedick.]

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.
Cald. In most profound earnest; and I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.
D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?
Cald. And quite, as you see.
D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!
Enter Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio.
Cald. He is then a giant to an apex: but then is an apex a doctor to such a man.
D. Pedro. But, soft you, let be; pluck up, my heart, and be sad! Did he not say, my brother was fied?
Dogb. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall never weigh more reasons in her balance: nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be hanged twice.
D. Pedro. How now, two of my brother's men bound! Borachio, one!
Cald. Hearken after their offence, my lord!
D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?
Dogb. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondly, they have lied; thirdly, they have belied a lady; thirdly, they have verified unjust things: and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.
D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done; thirdly, I ask thee what's their offence; sixth and lastly, why they are committed: and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge?
Cald. Rightly reasoned, and in his own division; and whereby there's one's meaning well sign'd.
D. Pedro. Whom have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood: What's your offence?
Boru. Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this comt kill me. I have deceived even your very eyes: what your wis-time our Sexton hath reformed signior Leonato of the matter: And masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.

{Exeunt. Here, here comes master signior Leonato, and the Sexton too.

Re-enter LEONATO and ANTONIO, with the Sexton.

Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes; That when I note another man like him, I may avoid him: Which of these is he? Boro. If you would know your wronger, look on me. Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast Mine innocent child? [kiss'd Boro. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so, villain; thou bel'st thyself; Here stand a pair of honourable men, A third is sedit, that had a hand in it:— I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death; Record it with your high and worthy deeds; 'Twas bravely done, if you be think it of you.

Claud. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speak: Choose your revenge yourself; Impose me to what penance your invention Can lay upon my sin: yet sin'd I not, But in mistaking.

D. Pedro. By my soul, nor I; And yet, to satisfy this good old man, I would bend under any weight That he'll enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live, That were impossible; but I pray you both, Possess the people in Messina here How innoctent she died: and, if your love Can labour aught in said invention, Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb, And sing it to her bones; sing it to-night: — To-morrow morning come you to my house; And since you could not be my son-in-law, Be yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter, Almost the copy of my child that's dead, And she alone is heir to both of us: Give her the right you should have given her cousin, And so dies my revenge.

Claud. O, noble sir, Your over kindness doth wring tears from me! I do embrace your offer; and dispose For hereafter of poor Claudio.

Leon. To-morrow, then I will expect your coming; To-night I take my leave.—This naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret, Who, I believe, was pack'd in all this wrong, Hid't to it by your brother.

Boro. No, by my soul, she was not; Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me; But always hath been just and virtuous, In any thing that I do know by her.

Dogb. Moreover, sir, (which, indeed, is not under white and black,) this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered In his punishment: And also, the watch heard then talk of one Deformed: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it; and borrows money in God's name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake: Pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dogb. Your over-weigh speak's like a most thankful and reverend youth; and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dogb. God save the foundation! [thank thee.

Leon. Go, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I

Dogb. I leave an arrant knife with your worship, which, I beseech your worship, to correct yourself, for the example of others. God keep your worship; I wish your worship well; God restore you to health: I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it.—Come neighbour.

{Exeunt DON PEDRO, VERGES, and Watch.

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell. Ant. Farewell, my lords; we look for you to- morrow.

Claud. To-night I'll morn with Hero.

[Exeunt DON PEDRO and CLAUDIO.

Leon. Bring you these fellows on; we'll talk with Margaret, How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter BENEDICK and MARGARET, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, desire well at my hands, by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Marg. To have no man come over me? why, shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth, it catches.

Marg. And your's as blunt as the fencer's foils, which bit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most maely wit, Margaret, it will not hurt a woman; and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the bucklers.

Marg. Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

Marg. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think, hath legs. [Exit MARGARET.

Bene. And therefore will come.

{Exeunt. The god of love,

Singing.

That sits above,

And knows me, and knows me,

How pitiful I deserve,—

I mean, in singing; but in loving. — Leander the good swimmer, Trobuls the first employer of panders, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over as my poor self, in love: Marry, I cannot shew it in rhyme: I have tried; I can find out rhyme to lady but baby, an innocent rhyme; for scorn, horn, a hard rhyme; for school, fool, a babbling rhyme; very vainous endings: No, I was not born under a thymany planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.

Enter BEATRICE.

Sweet Beatrice, would'st thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O, stay but till then!

Beat. Then, is spoken; fare you well now— and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for, which is, with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

K 2
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Bene. Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat. Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore I will depart unkinded.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit: But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge; and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer to love me?

Bene. Suffer love; a good epithet! I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think; alas! poor heart! If you spit it for my sake, I will spit it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confession; there's not one wise man among twenty, that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours: if a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question?—Why, an hour in clamour, and a quarter in ruination: therefore it is most expedient for the wise, (if Don Worm, his conscience, had no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself? So much for praising myself, (who, I myself will bear witness, is praise-worthy,) and now tell me, How doth your cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and meditate there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle, yonder's old coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abus'd; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone; will you come presently? beaat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Attendants, with music and tapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Attent. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reads from a scroll.]

Dedicated to death by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death, in guarding of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies:
So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tomb, [affixing it.

Praising her when I am dumb.—

Now, monst, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, Goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For which, with songs of love,
Round about her tomb they go.
Midnight, assist our moon;
Help us to sigh and groan,
Heavily, heavily;
Graves, yarn, and yield your dead,
Till death be uttered,
Heavenly, heavenly.

Claud. Now unto thy bones good night!

Yearly will I do this rite. [Out.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters; put your torches The wolves have prey'd: and look the gentle Before the wheels of Phebus, round about, [day,
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of gray:
Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters; each his several way. [speeds.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other And then to Leonato's we will go. [speeds.

Claud. And, hymen, now with luckier issue Than this, for whom we reader'd up this woe! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Ursula, Friar, and Hero.

Friar. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who accus'd Upon the error that you have heard debated: [her, But Margaret was in some fault for this; Although against her will, as it appears In the true course of all the question.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith c. o. c. o. To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all, Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves;

And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd! The prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour To visit me. — You know your office, brother; You must be father to your brother's daughter, And give her to young Claudio. [Exit.

Friar. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must intreat your pains, I think, Friar. To do what, signior?

Bene. To bind me, or undo me, one of them.— Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior, Your niece regards me with an eye of favour. [true.

Leon. That eye my daughter lent her; 'Tis most Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her. Leon. The sight, whereof, I think, you had from me, From Claudio and the prince; but what's your Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical; [will? But, if my will, my will is, your good will May stand with ours, this day to be confi'd in the estate of honourable marriage: In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.

Leon. My heart is with your liking, Friar. And my help, Here comes the prince, and Claudio.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow; Claudio;
We here attend you: Are you yet determin'd
To-day to marry with my brother's daughter?
Claud. I'll hold my mind, were she an Ethiop.
Leon. Call her forth, brother, here's the friar ready.
[Exit Friar.]
D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick: Why, what's the matter,
That you have such a February face.
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness?
Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull:—
Tush, fear not, man, we'll tip thy horns with gold,
And all Europa shall rejoice at thee;
As once Europa did at lusty Jove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.
Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low;
And some such strange bull leapt your father's
And got a calf in that same noble feat,
[cow, Much like you, for you have just his feet.
Re-enter Atronzo, with the Ladies masked.
Claud. For this I owe you: here come other recs—
Which is the lady I must seize upon? [konings.]
Ant. This same is she, and I do give you her.
Claud. Why, then she's mine: Sweet, let me see your face.
[hand.]
Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her
Before this friar, and swear to marry her.
Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar;
I am your husband, if you like of me.
Hero. And when I lived, I was your other wife:
[Unmasking.]
Claud. Another Hero? Nothing certain;
One Hero died des'd: but I do live,
And surely as I live, I am a maid.
D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!
Leon. She died my lord, but white's her slander.
Friar. All this amazement can I qualify; [lived.
When, after that the holy rites are ended,
I'll tell you largely of fair Hero's death:
Mean time, let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.
Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice?
Beat. I answer to that name; [Unmasking.
What is your will?
Bene. Do you not love me?
Beat. No, no more than reason.
Bene. Why, then your uncle, and the prince, and cudgelled out, for they swore you did.
Beat. Do not you love me?
Bene. No, no more than reason.
Beat. Why, then my cousin, Margaret, and Ur.
Are much deceiv'd: for they did swear, you did.
Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.
Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.
Bene. Tis no such matter:—Then you do not Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.
Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.
Claud. And I'll be sworn upon't, that he loves her;
For here's a paper, written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice.
Hero. And here's another.
Write in my cousin's hand a satire, or an epigram; No:
Containing her affection unto Benedick.
Bene. A miracle! here's our own hands against our hearts!—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity.
Beat. I would not deny you;—but, by this good day, I yield upon great persuasion; and, partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.
Bene. Peace, I will stop your mouth. Kissing her.
D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick the married man?
Bene. I'll tell thee what, prince; a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour: Dost thou think I care for a satire, or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, he shall wear nothing handsome about him: In brief, since I do propose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion— For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin.
Claud. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgelled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.
Bene. Come, come, we are friends;—let's have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives' heels.
Leon. We'll have dancing afterwards.
Bene. First, 'o my word; therefore, play music. —Prince, thou art said; get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, your brother John is ta'en in flight,
And brought with armed men back to Messina.
Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow; I'll devise thee brave punishments for him.—Strike up, pipers.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, oh, methinks, how slow This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires, Like to a step-dame, or a dowager, Long withering out a young man's revenue, nights; Hip. Four days will quickly steep themselves in Four nights will quickly dream away the time; And then the moon, like to a silver bow Now bent in heaven, shall behold the night Of our solemnities.

The. Go, Philostrate, Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments; Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth; Turn melancholy forth to funerals; The pale companion is not for our pomp.—

[Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta, I would thee with my sword, And won thy love; doing thee injuries; But I will wed thee in another key, With pomp, with triumph, and with reveling.

Enter Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke! [thee? The. Thanks, good Egeus: What's the news with

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.—

Stand forth, Demetrius.—My noble lord, This man hath my consent to marry her:—

Stand forth, Lysander;—and, my gracious duke, This hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child: Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes And interchanging love-tokens with my child: Thou hast by moon-light at her window sung, With feigning voice, verses of feigning love; And stol'n the impression of her fantasy With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, confections, Knacks, trifles, nose-gays, sweet-meats; messengers Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth: With cunning harts thou fitch'd my daughter's heart, Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me, To stubborn harshness — And, my gracious duke, Be it so she will not here before your grace Consent to marry with Demetrius, I beg the ancient privilege of Athens; As she is mine, I may dispose of her: Which shall be either to this gentleman, Or to her death; according to our law, Immediately provided in that case.

The. The what say you, Hermia? be advis'd, fair maid: To you your father should be as a god; One that compose your beauties; yea, and one To whom you are but as a form in wax, By him imprinted, and within his power To leave the figure, or disfigure it. Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

The. In himself he is: But, in this kind, wanting your father's voice, The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would, my father look'd but with my eyes.

The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment look; And, if according to his grace to pardon me I know not by what power I am made bold; Nor how it may concern my modesty, In such a presence here to plead my thoughts: But I beseech your grace that I may know The worst that may befall me in this case, If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. The either to die the death, or to abjure For ever the society of men.

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires, Know of your youth, examine well your blood, Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice, You can endure the livery of a nun; For aye to be in shady cloister mev'd, To live a barren sister all your life,

Chorus. The cold fruitless moon, Three times blessed they, that master so their blood, To undergo such maiden pilgrimage: But earthly happy is the rose distill'd, Than that, which, withering on the virgino thorn, Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

_The_. Take time to pause; and, by the next new (The scaling-day betwixt my love and me, [moon
For everlasting bondage; thereby, before,
On that day either prepare to die,
For disobedience to your father's will;
Or else, to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life.

_Demi_. Relent, sweet Hermia.—And, Lysander,
The cradle to my certain right.

_Lys_. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

_Ege_. Scornful Lysander! true he hath my love;
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine; and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.

_Lys_. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than bis;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
If not with vauntage, as Demetrius;
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia:
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius, I was betroth'd to him for love,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes,
Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry,
Upon this spotted and incomest man.

_The_. I must confess, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being overfull of all the matter,
My mind did lose it.—But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus; you shall go with me,
I have some private schooling for you both.—
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(Which by no means we may extenuate,)
To death, or to a loss of single life.—
Come, my Hippolita; What cheer, my love?
Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our cuspial; and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.
_Ege_. With duty, and desire, we follow you.

_Lys_. A ship, a ship, a mill, a water-train.

_Herm_. How now, my love? Why is your cheek so
How chance the roses there do fade so fast? [pale?
_The_. Delike for want of rain; which I could well
Betreem them from the tempest of mine eyes.

_Lys_. Ah me! for ought that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth:
But, either it was different in blood.

_Herm_. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low!

_Lys_. Or else misguid'd, in respect of years:

_Herm_. O spite! too old to be engag'd to young!

_Lys_. Or else it stood upon the choice of friends:

_Herm_. O hell! to choose love by another's eye!

_Lys_. Or, if there were sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness, did lay siege to it;
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning to the collid'd night,
That, in a spleen, unloos'd both heaven and earth,
And, ere a man hath power to say,—Behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up;
So quick bright things come to confusion.

_Herm_. If then true lovers have ever been over-cord;
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our trial patience

_Because it is a customary cross;_
As due to love, as thoughts and dreams, and sighs,
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

_The_. And for this purpose make me a sight,
I have a widow aunt, a dowager
Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us: If thou lovest me then,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night;
And in the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.

'Herm_. My good Lysander! I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow;
By his best arrow with the golden head;
By the simplicity of Venus' doves;
By that which knitteth souls, and8 prospers loves;
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In no more than seven years, and that so soon.
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

_Lys_. Keep promise, love: Look, here comes Helena.

_Enter_.

_Herm_. God speed fair Helena! Whither away?

_The_. Call you me fair? that fair again say.

_Demi_. loves you fair: O happy fair!
Your eyes are lead-stars; and your tongue's sweet air
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear,
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Sickness is catching; O, were favour so!
Your's would I catch, fair Hermia, etc I go.
My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest I'll give to be to you translated.
O, teach me how you look; and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.

_Herm_. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.

_The_. O, thy frowns would teach my smiles such skill!

_Herm_. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.

_The_. O, that my prayers could such affection move!

_Herm_. The more I hate, the more he follows me.

_Herm_. The more I love, the more he hate me.

_Herm_. His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine.

_Herm_. None, but your beauty; 'Would that fault
Were mine!

_Herm_. Take comfort; he no more shall see my face,
Lysander and myself will fly this place.—

_Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens like a paradise to me:
O thee, what graces in my love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven unto hell!

_Lys_. Helena, to you and mine minds we will unfold:
To-morrow night when Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
(At a time that lovers' flights doth still conceal,) Through Athens' gates have we devis'd to steal.
That in the wood, where we often you and I
Upon faint primrose beds were wont to lie.
Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet;
There my Lysander and myself shall meet;
And thence, from Athens, turn away our eyes,
To seek new friends and stranger companies.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Farewell, sweet playfellow; pray thou for us, And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius! — Keep word, Lysander: we must starve nor sight From lovers' food, till morrow deep midnight. [Exit Herm.] Lys. I will, my Hermia.—Helena adieu! As you on him, Demetrius dote on you! [Exit Lys. & Hel. How happy some, or other some can be! Through Athens I am thought as fair as the. But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so; He will not know what all he but do know. And as he eras, doting on Hermia's eyes, So I, admiring of his qualities. Things base and vile, holding no quantity, Love can transpose to form and dignity. Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind; And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind. Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste; Wings, and no eyes, figure unheeded haste: And therefore is love said to be a child, Because in choice he is so oft beguiled. As waggish boys in game themselves forswear, So the boy Love is perjur'd every where. For he, the lover, looking on Hermia's eye, He hail'd down oaths, that he was only mine; And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt, So he dissolve'd, and showers of oaths did melt. I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight; Then to the wood will he, to-morrow night, Pursue her; and for this intelligence If I have thanks, it is a dear expense: But herein mean I to enrich my pain, To have his sight thither and back again. [Exit.] SCENE II.—The same. A Room in a Cottage. Enter Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, Quince, and Starveling. Quin. Is all our company here? Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the script. Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and duchess, on his wedding-day at night. Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors; and so grow to a point. Quin. Marry, our play is—The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby. Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry.—Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll: Masters, spread yourselves. Quin. Answer, as I call you.—Nick Bottom, the weaver. Bot. Ready. Name, what part I am for, and proceed. Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus. Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant? Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallantly for love. Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: If I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms, I will compone in some measure. To the rest:—Yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split. "The raging rocks, "With shivering shocks, "Shall break the locks "Of prison-gates:" This was lofty!—Now name the rest of the players. —This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling. Quin. Flute, Francis Flute, the bellows-mender. Flu. Here, Peter Quince. Quin. You must take Thisby on you. Flu. What is Thisby? a wandering knight? Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love. Flu. Nay, faith let me not play a woman; I have a beard coming. Quin. That's all one; you shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will. Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too: I'll speak in a monarch's little voice.—Thisne, Thisne,—ah, Pyramus, my lover dear; thy Thisby dear! and lady dear! Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus, and, Flute, you Thisby. Bot. Well, proceed. Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor. Star. Here, Peter Quince. Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother.—Tom Snout, the tinker. Snout. Here, Peter Quince. Quin. You, Pyramus's father; myself, Thisby's father; though he join you, the lion's part:—and, I hope, here is a play fitted. Snug. Have you the lion's part written? I pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study. Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring. Bot. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say, Let him roar again, let him roar again. Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek; and that were enough to hang us all. All. That would hang us every mother's son. Bot. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies, and that they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 'twere any nightingale. Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus: for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely, gentleman-like man; therefore you must needs play Pyramus. Bot. But, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in? Quin. Why, what will you. Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-coloured beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, you prepare your yellow. Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play hare-faced.—But, masters; here are your parts: and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to come them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moon-light: there will we rehearse: for if we meet in the city, we shall be dog'd with company, and our devices known. In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you fail me not. Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse
ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Wood near Athens.

Enter a Fairy at one door, and Puck at another.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fai. Over hill, over dale,
Thorough bush, thorough briar,
Over park, over pale,
Thorough flood, thorough fire,
I do wander every where,
Swifter than the moones sphere;
And I serve the fairy queen,
To dew her orbs upon the green:
The cowslips tell her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see;
Those be rubies, fairy favours,
In those fleckles live their savours:
I must go seek some dewy millers by,
And hang a pear in every cowslip's ear.
Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone:
Our queen and all our elves come here anon.

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here-to-night;
Take heed, the queen come not within his sight.
For Oberon is passing fell and wrath,
Because that she, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy, stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling:
And jealous Oberon would have the child
Knight of his train, to trace the forests wild:
But she, perforce, withholds the loved boy,
Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy:
And now they never meet in grove, or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled star-light shen,
But they do square; that all their elves, for fear,
Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there.

Fai. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,
Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite, Call'd Robin Good-fellow: are you not he,
The tossing goblin of the village, skulking skulking,
Skin milk; and sometimes labour in the quern,
And bootless make the breathless housewife churn;
And sometimes make the drink to bear no harm;
Mislead night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do your work, and they shall have good luck:
Are not you he?

Puck. Thou speak'st aright;
I am that merry wanderer of the night,
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a silly foal:
And sometime lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a tossed crab;
And, when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd lap dew pour the ale.
The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,
Sometimes for three foot stool mistaketh me;
Then slip I from her bun, down topples she,
And tailor cries, and falls into a cough;
And then the whole quite hold their hips, and lose;
And waxen in their mirth, and neeze and swear
A merrier hour was never wasted there.—
But room, Faery, here comes Oberon.

Fai. And here my mistress:—Would that be were
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grew big belled, with the wanton wind:
Which she, with pretty and with swimming gait,
Following (her womb, then rich with my young
Would imitate; and sail upon the land, [square,]
To fetch me trifes, and return again,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandise,
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And, for her sake, I do rear up her boy;
And for her sake, I will not part with him.
Obe. How long within this wood intend you stay?
Tita. Perchance, till after Theseus's wedding-day.
If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moon-light revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.
Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.
Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom. Fairies away:
We shall chide down-right, if I longer stay.

[Exeunt Titania and her train.

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this Till I torment thee for this injury.— [grove,
My gentle Puck come hither: Thou remember'st
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Under the feet of Cupid, with her ditty,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song;
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, (but thou could'st not,)— Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid arms all: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal, thronged by the west;
And loo'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As if it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts:
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quenched in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon;
And the imperial v'rors passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,— Before, milk-white; now purple with love's wound,— And maides call it love-in-idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once;
The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.
Fetch me this herb: and be thou then here again,
Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about the earth In forty minutes. [Exit Puck.

Obe. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:
The next thing then she wakings looks upon,
(He it is lion, bear, or wolf, or bull.)
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,) She shall pursue it with the soul of love,
And ere I take this charm off from her sight,
(As I can take it, with another herb,) I'll make her render up her page to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible;
And I will over-hear their conference.

[Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander, and fair Hermia?
The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me. Thou told'st me, they were stol'n into this wood.
And here am I, and wander within this wood, Because I cannot meet with Hermia. Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant; But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: Leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? Do I speak you fair?
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you—I do not, nor I cannot love you?
Hel. And even for that do I love you the more,
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me, I will follow on: Use me but as your spaniel, spur me, strike me,
Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave,
Unworthy as I am, to follow you.
What worser place can I beg in your love,
(And yet a place of high respect with me,) Than to be used as you use your dog?

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit:
For I am sick, when I do look on thee.

Hel. And I am sick, when I look not on you.

Dem. You do impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the city, and commit yourself
Into the hands of one that loves you not;
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With my rich wealth of your virgin youth.

Hel. Your virtue is my privilege for that.
It is not night, when I do see your face,
Therefore I think I am not in the night:
Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company;
For you, in my respect, are all the world:
Then how can it be said, I am alone,
When all the world is here to look on me?

Dem. I'll run from thee, and hide me in the brakes,
And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts.

Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you.
Run when you will, the story shall be chang'd:
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase;
The dove pursues the griffin; the mild hind
Makes speed to catch the tiger; Bootless speed!
When cowardice pursues, and valor flies.

Dem. I will not stay thy questions; let me go;
Or, if thou follow me, do not believe
But I shall do thee mischief in the wood.

Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field,
You do me mischief. Yea, Demetrius!
Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex:
We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We are like wild-bee's, and were not made to woo.
I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell,
To die upon the hand I love so well.

[Exeunt Dem. and Hel.

Obe. Fare thee well, nymph; ere he do leave this grove,
Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.—

Re-enter Puck.

Hast thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.
Puck. Ay, there it is.

Obe. I pray thee, give it me.
I know a bank whereon the wild thyme blows,
Where ox-lips and the nodding violet grows;
Quite over-canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine;
There sleeps Titania, some time of the night.
Lull'd in these flowers with dances and delight;
And there the snake blows her enamell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in;
And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes,
And make her full of hateful fantasies.
Take some of it, and seek through this grove:
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes:
But do it, when the next thing he espies
May be the lady: Then shalt know the man
By the Athenian garments he hath on.
Effect it with some care; that he may prove
More food on her, than she upon his love:
And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.

    Puck. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so.

SCENE III.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter TITANIA, with her train.

Tita. Come, now a roundel, and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence;
Some, to kill cutters in the musk-rose buds;
Some, war with red-winged rackers; and the rest
To make my small elves coats; and some, keep back a
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
At our quaint spirits: Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

SONG.

I.

1 Fai. You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thou art my lord, be not seen;
Neats, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen:

    Philomel, with melody,
    Sing in our sweet lullaby;
    Lullu, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby;
    Never harm, nor spell nor charm,
    Come our lovely lady nigh;
    So, good night, with lullaby.

II.

2 Fai. Wearing spiders, come not here:
Hence, you long-legged’p spinners, hence;
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm, nor snail, do no offence.

CHORUS.

Philomel, with melody, &c.

1 Fai. Hence, away; now all is well:
One, aloof, stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Faeries. TITANIA sleeps.

Enter OBION.

Obe. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
[Squeezes the flower on TITANIA’s eye-lids]
Do it for thy true-love take;
Love and languish for his sake;
Be it ounce, or cat, or bear;
Pand, or bear with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wak’st, it is thy dear;
Wake, when some vile thing is near.

[Exit.

Enter LYSANDER and HERMIA.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the
And to speak truth, I have forgot our way; [wood;
We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
Her. Be it so, Lysander, find you out a bed,
For I upon this bank will rest my head.
Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both;
One heart, one bed, two bosoms and one troth.
Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear,
Lie further off yet, do not lie so near.
Lys. O take the sense, sweet, of my innocence;
Love takes the meaning, in love’s conference.
I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit;
So that but one heart we can make of it;
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath;
So then, two bosoms, and a single troth.

Then, by your side no bed-room me deck;
For, lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.
Her. Lysander riddles very prettily:—
Now much beschrew my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say, Lysander lied.
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy
Lie further off; in human modesty
Such separation, as may well be said,
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid:
So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend;
Thy love ne’er alter, till thy sweet life end!
Lys. Amen, so to that fair prayer, say I;
And then end life, when I end loyalty!
Here is my bed: Sleep give thee all his rest!
Her. With half that wish the wiser’s eyes he press’d!

[They sleep.

Enter PUCK.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none,
On whose eyes I might approve
This flower’s force in stirring love.
Night and silence! who is here?
Weeds of Athens he doth wear;
This is he, my master said,
Despised the Athenian maid;
And here the maiden, sleeping sound,
On the dark and dirty ground.
Pretty soul! she durst not lie
Near this hark-love, kill-courtesy.
Churl, upon thy eyes I throw
All the power this charm doth owe:
When thou wak’st, let love forbid
Sleep his seat on thy eye-lid.
So awake, when I am gone;
For I must now to Oberon.

[Exit.

Enter DEMETRIUS and HELENA, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.
Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.
Dem. Stay, on thy peril; I alone will go.

[Exit DEMETRIUS.

Hel. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase!
The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.
Happy is Hermia, where so’er she lies;
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt tears:
If so, my eyes are often wash’d thence.
No, no, I am as ugly as a bear;
For beasts that meet me, run away for fear:
Therefore, no marvel, though Demetrius Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia’s sphery eye?—
But who is here?—Lysander! on the ground!
Dead? or asleep? I see no blood, no wound!—
Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.

Lys. And run through fire I will, for thy sweet sake.

[Waking.

Transparent Helena! Nature here shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.
Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name, to perish on my sword!
Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so:
What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
Yet Hermia still loves you; then be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia? No: I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
Not Hermia, but Helena I love:
Who will not change a raven for a dove?
The will of man is by his reason swayed: And reason says you are the worthier maid. Things growing are not ripe until their season; So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason; And touching now the point of human skill, Reason becomes the marshal to my will, And leads me to your eyes; where I o'erlook Love's stories, written in love's richest book.

_Hel._ Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born? When, at your hands, did I deserve this scorn? Is 't not enough, is 't not enough, young man, That I did never, nor, nor never can, Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye, But you must find me insensible? Good truth, you do me wrong, good sooth, you do, In such dis disdainful manner we two. But fare you well: performe I must confess, I thought you lord of more true gentleness. O, that a lady, of one man refus'd, Should, of another, therefore be abus'd! [Exit.

_Lys._ She sees not Hermia.—Hermia, sleep thou And never may'st thou come Lysander near! [there; For, as a surfeit of the sweetest things The deepest loathing to the stomach brings; Or, as the heresies that men do leave, Are hated most of those they did receive; So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy, Of all be hated; but the most of me! And all my powers, address your love and might, To honour Helen, and to be her knight! [Exit. _Her._ [starting.] Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best, To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast! Ah me, for pity!—what a dream was here? Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear! Methought a serpent eat my heart away, And you sat smiling at his cruel pike:— Lysander! what, removed? Lysander! lord! What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word? Alack, where are you? speak, an if you hear; Speak, of all loves; I swoon almost with fear. No!—then I well perceive you are not nigh: Either death, or you, I'll find immediately. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The Queen of Fairies lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

_Bot._ Are we all met?

_Quin._ Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal: This green plot shall be our stage, this hatchmark brake our tyming-house: and we will do it in action, as we will do it before thy duke.

_Bot._ Peter Quince.

_Quin._ What say'st thou, bully Bottom? _Bot._ There are things in this comedy of _Pyramus and Thisby_, that will never please. First, _Pyramus_ must draw a sword to kill himself: which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?

_Snout._ By thakin, a parlous fear.

_Star._ I believe, we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

_Bot._ Not a whit; I have a device to make all well. Write me a prologue: and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords: and that _Pyramus_ is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance tell them, that I _Pyramus_ am not _Pyramus_, but _Bottom_ the weaver: This will put them out of fear.

_Qui._ Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.

_Bot._ No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.

_Snout._ Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?

_Star._ I fear it, I promise you.

_Bot._ Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing: for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion, living: and we ought to look to it very humbly.

_Snout._ Therefore, another prologue must tell, he is not a lion.

_Bot._ Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck: and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect,—Ladies, or fair ladies, I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would intreat you, not to take it to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: No, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are: and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly, he is Snug the joiner.

_Qui._ Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things: that is, to bring the moon-light into a chamber: for you know, _Pyramus_ and _Thisby_ meet by moon-light.

_Snout._ Doth the moon shine that night we play our play?

_Bot._ A calendar, a calendar! Look in the almanack; find out moon-shine, find out moon-shine.

_Qui._ Yes, it doth shine that night.

_Bot._ Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber-window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

_Qui._ Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say, he comes to disguise, or to present, the person of moon-shine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for _Pyramus_ and _Thisby_, says the man: let this wall through the chink of a wall.

_Snout._ You never can bring in a wall.—What say you, Bottom?

_Bot._ Some man or other must present wall: and let him have some plaster, or some lome, or some rough-cast about him, to signify wall: or let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranial shall _Pyramus_ and _Thisby_ whisper.

_Qui._ If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and hearuse your parts. _Pyramus_, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.

_Enter Puck behind.

_Puck._ What hempen home-spuns have we swag-So near the cradle of the fairy queen? [greeting here, What, a play toward? I'll be an auditor; An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

_Qui._ Speak, _Pyramus_;—_Thisby_, stand forth.

_Pyr._ _Thisby_, the flowers of odious savours sweet,— _Qui._ Odours, odours.

_Pyr._ —odours savours sweet: So doth thy breath, my dearest _Thisby_ dear.

_QUI._ But, hark, a voice! stay thou but a while, And by and by I will to thee appear. [Exit.

_Puck._ A stranger _Pyramus_ than e'er play'd here! [Aside. —Exit.

_This._ Must I speak now?
Quin. Ay, marry, must you: for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again. This. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily white of hue, Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier, Most brisky jocund, and the most lovely Jew, As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire, I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb. Quin. Ninny's tomb, man: Why you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your part at once, cues and all.—Pyramus enter; your cue is past; it is, never tire.

Re-enter Peck and Bottom with an ass's head. This. O.—As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Pyt. If I were fair, Thibby, I were only thine:— Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted. Pray, masters! fly! masters! help. [Exit Clowns. Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round, Through bog, through bush, through brake, through brier: Sometimes a horse I'll be, sometime a hound, A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire; And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn, Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. [Exit. Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afraid.

Re-enter Snout. Snout. O Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see on thee. Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own; Do you?

Re-enter Quince. Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated. [Exit. Bot. I see their knavery: this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid. [Sings.

The owlet-cock, so black of hue, With orange-tawney bill, The thrum with his note so true The wren with little quill.

Tit. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?—[Waking.

Bot. The fuch, the sparrow, and the lark, The plain-song cuckoo gray, Whose note full many a man doth mark, And dares not answer, nay:—

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the fie, though he cry cuckoo, never so?—

Tit. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again: Mine ear is much enamour'd of thy note, So is mine eye enthrall'd to thy shape: And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me, On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: And yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now a-days: The more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek upon occasion.

Tit. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful. Bot. Not so, neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tita. Out of this wood do not desire to go; Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no. I am a spirit, of no common rate; The summer still doth tead upon my state, And I do love thee: therefore, go with me; I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee; And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep, And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep And I will purge thy mortal grossness so, That thou shalt make like an airy spirit go. —Peas-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed!—

Enter four Fairies.

Tita. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman; Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes; Feed him with apricocks and dewberries; With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries; The honey bags steal from the humble bees, And, for night-tapers, crop their waxen thighs, And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes, To have my love to bed, and to arise; And pluck the wings from painted butterflies, To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes: To nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies. 1. Fai. Hail, mortal! 2. Fai. Hail! 3. Fai. Hail! 4. Fai. Hail! Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, heartily.—I beseech your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb. Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good master Cobweb: If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman! Peas. Peas-blossom. Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peas-cod, your father. Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mrs. Mustard-seed. Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house; I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed. [Exeunt. Bot. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my mother, methinks, looks with a watery eye; And when she weeps, weeps with every flower, Lamenting some enforced chastity, Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently.

Scene II.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder, if Titania be awak'd? Then, what it was that next came in her eye, Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Obe. Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit? What night-mule now about this haunted grove? Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love. Near to her close and consecrated bower, While she was in her dull and sleeping hour, A crew of patches, rude mechanicals, That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Wore we met together to rehearse a play,
Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.
The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented, in their sport
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake:
When I did him at this advantage take,
An ass's head I fix'd on his head;
Anon, his Thisbe must be answer'd,
And forth my mimic came: When they him spy,
As wild green as that the fowler's eye,
Or russet-paced choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gau's report
Sever themselves, and madly sweep the sky;
So at his sight, away his fellows fly:
And, at our stand, here o'er and o'er one falls;
He murder cries, and help from Athens calls: [strong]
Their sense, thus weak, lost with their fears, thus Made senseless things begin to do them harm:
For briers and thorns at their apparel snatch;
Some, sleeves; some, hats; from yielders all things
I led them on in this distracted fear, [catch.
And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment (so it came to pass,) Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an ass.
Durst this falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet latched the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?
Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finish'd too,—
And the Athenian woman by his side;
That when he wak'd, of force she must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.
Obe. Stand close; this is the same Athenian.
Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man.
Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter face.
Her. Now I butchide, but I should use thee worse;
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being or shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day,
As he to me: Would he have stole a way
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon,
This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon
May through the centre creep, and so dispulse
Her mother's noon-tide with the Antipodes.
It cannot be, but thou hast murdered him.
So should a murderer look; so dead, so grim.
Dem. So should the murder'd look; and so should I,
Pier'd through the heart with your stern cruelty:
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glittering sphere.
Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, will thou give him me?
Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.
Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
Oh! once tell true, tell true, even for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with double tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Dem. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood:
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.
But I pray thee, tell me then, that he is well.
Dem. An if I could, what should I get therefore?
Her. A privilege, never to see me more.
And from thy hated presence part I so:
See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit. Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now, in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay. [Lies down. Obe. What hast thou done! thou hast mistaken
And laid the love-juice on some true love's sight:
Of thy misprision must perfuce ease
Some true-love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.
Puck. Then fate o'er-rules; that, one man holding
A million fall, confounding oath on oath. [trotti,
Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helens of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer
With sighs of love, that cast the fresh blood dear
By some illusion see thou bring her here;
I'll charm his eyes, against she doth appear.
Puck. I go, I go; look, how I go;
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit.
Obe. Flower of this purple die,
With both Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye.
When his love he doth espy
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wak'st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand,
And the yvntl, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's fee;
Shall we their fond pageant see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!
Obe. Stand aside: the noise they make,
Will cause Demetrius to awake.
Puck. Then will two at once, woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me,
That betal preposterously.

Enter Lysander and Helena.
Lys. Why should you think, that I should woo in scorn,
And dearer love come in tears. [sconr
Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
How can these things in me seem scorn to you,
 Bearing the hedge of faith, to prove them true?
Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O devilish holy fray!
These vows are Hermia's: Will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh; and both as light as tales.
Lys. I had no judgment, when to her I swore.
Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o'er.
Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.
Dem. [awaking.] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfec t, divine! To what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?
Crystal is muddy. O, how ripe in show
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure concealed white, high Taurus' snow,
Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crow,
Whom thou holdest up thy hand: O let me kiss
This princes of pure white, this seal of bliss!
Hel. O spirit! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me, for your merit.
If you were civil, and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join, in souls, to mock me too?
If you be kind, in these harsh words, show
You would not use a gentle lady so.

To vow, and swear, and superpaise my parts,
When, I am sure, you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both rivals, to mock Helen:
A trim exploit, a manly enterprize.
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes,
With you derision! none, of noble sort,
Would so offend a virgin; and extort
A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius; be not so;
For you love Hermia: this, you know, I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;
And yours of Helen to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will none:
If ever I lov'd her, all that love is gone.
My heart with her but, as gnest-wise, sojourn'd;
And hers was Helen to it home return'd;
There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it bear.
—Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function
The ear more quick of apprehension makes; [takes,
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recom pense: —
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unliter'd didst thou leave me so? To go?
Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press
Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?
Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,
Fair Helen; who more engilds the night
Than all youerry iesies and eyes of light.
Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know,
The hate thou barest for thee thus so?
Her. You speak not as you think; it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!
Now I perceive they have conjoin'd, all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.

Injurious Hermia! most ungrateful maid!
Have you conspire'd, have you with these contriv'd
To bate me with this foul derision?
Is all the counsel that we two have shad'd,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time
For parting us,—O, and is all forgot?
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence!
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods;
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted;
But yet a union in partition.
Two lovely berries more were grown on one stem:
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.
And will you rend our ancient love asunder,
To join with men in scorning your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not naiiily:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it;
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Her. I am amazed in your passionate words:
I scorn you not; it seems that you scorn me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other love, Demetrius,
(Who even but now did spur me with his foot,) To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection?
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate;
But miserable most, to love unlod?'

This you should pity, rather than despise.
Her. I understand not what you mean by this.

Hel. Ay, do, perseverse, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mows upon me when I turn my back;
Wink at each other: hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you now any pity to our wrongs,
You would not make me such an argument,
But, fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault;
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helen; hear my excuse;
My love, my life, my soul, fair Hermia!

Hel. O excellent!—

Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entertain, I can compel.
Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat;
Thy threats have no more strength, than her weak
Helen, I love thee; by my life I do; [prayers.—
I swear by that which I will lose for thee.
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can do.
Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come,—

Her. Lysander, whereto teods all this?
Lys. Away, you Euphnius!

Dem. No, no, sir:—he will seem to break loose; take on, as you would follow;
But you are none of you a time to go.
Lys. Hang off, thou cat, thou burl: vile thing let
Or I will shake thee from me, like a serpent. [loose.
Her. Why are you grown so rude: what change
Sweet love!—

Lys. Thy love? out, twanny Tartar, out!
Out, loathed medicine! hated potion, hence!

Her. Do you not jest?

Hel. Yes, 'tis; and so do you.

Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would, I had your bond; for, I perceive
A weak bond holds you; I'll not trust your word.
Lys. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her
Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so. [dead
Her. What, can you do me greater harm, than hate?
Hate me! wherefore? O me! what news, my love?
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?
I am as fair now, as I was erevile.
Since night, you lov'd me; yet, since night you left me:
Why, then you left me,—O, the gods forbid!—
In earnest, shall I say?

Hel. Ay, by my life;
And never did desire to see thee more.
Therefore, be out of hope, of question, doubt.
Be certain, nothing truer; 'tis no jest,
That I do hate thee, and love Helen.
Her. O me! you juggler! you canker-blossom! You thief of love! what, have you come by night, And stolen my love’s heart from him?

Her. O! Fine, i’t faith! You have no modesty, no maiden shame, No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear Impatient answers from my gentle tongue? Fie, fie! you counterfeit, you puppet you!

Her. Puppet! why so? Ay, that way goes the game.

Now I perceive that she hath made compare Between our statures, she hath urg'd her height; And with her personage, her tall personage. Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail’d with him,— And are you grown so high in his esteem, Because I am so dwarfish, and so low?

Now how am I, thou painted maypole? speak; How low am I? am I not yet so low, But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen, Let her not hurt me: I was never cured; I have no gift at all in shrewishness; I am a right maid for my cowardice; Let her not strike me: You, perhaps, may think, Because she’s something lower than myself, That I can match her.

Hel. Lower! hark, again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me. I evermore did love you, Hermia,

Did ever keep your counsels, never wrong’d you; Save that, in love unto Demetrius,

I told him of your stealth unto this wood:

He follow’d you; for love, I follow’d him. But he hath chid me hence; and threaten’d me To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too: And now, so you will let me quiet go,

To Athens will I bear my folly back, And follow you no further: Let me go: You see how simple and how fond I am.

Her. Why, get you gone; Who is’t that hinders you?

Hel. A foolish heart that I leave here behind.

Her. What, with Lysander?

Hel. With Demetrius.

Lys. De not a friend: she shall not harm thee, Helena.

Dem. No, sir; she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O, when she’s angry, she is keen and shrewd; She was a vixen, when she went to school; And, though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little again! nothing but low and little!— What will you suffer her to flout me thus? Let me come to her.

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf; You minimus, of hind-ringing knot-grass made; You beast, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious, In her behalf that scorns your services.

Let her alone; speak not of Helena; Take not her part: for if thou dost intend Never so little show of love to her, Thou shalt aby it.

Lys. Now she holds me not. Now follow, if thou darst, to try whose right, Or thine or mine, is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow? nay, I’ll go with thee, cheek by jowl.

Her. You mistresse, all this coil is long of you: Nay, go not back.

Hel. I will not trust you, I; Nor longer stay in your curst company.

Your hands, than mine, are quicker for a fray; My legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit. Hel. I am amaz’d, and know not what to say. [Exit, pursuing Helena. Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistak’st, Or else commit thy knavery willfully.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook. Did not you tell me, I should know the man By the Athenian garments he had on? And so far blameless proves my enterprise, That I have noted an Athenian’s eyes: And so far am I glad it so did sort, As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Obe. Thou see’st, these lovers seek a place to fight; Hie therefore, Robin, overcast the night; He will winke cover thee and personage. With drooping fog, as black as Acheron; And lead these tvisty rivals so astray, As one come not within another’s way. Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue, Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong; And sometime rial thou like Demetrius; And from each other look thou lead them thus, Till o’er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep With legen legs and batty wings doth creep; Then crush this herb into Lysander’s eye; Whose liquor hath this virtuous property, To take from thence all error, with his might, And make his eye-balls roll with wented sight When they next wake, all this derision Shall be a dream, and fruitless vanity. And back to Athens shall the lovers wend, With league, whose date till death shall never end Whiles I in this affair do thee employ, I’ll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy; And then will I her charmed eye release From monster’s view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My fairy lord, this must be done with haste; For night’s swift dragons cut the clouds full fast, And yonder shines Aurora’s harbinger; At whose approach, ghosts, waudering here and there, Troop home to church-yards: damned spirits all, That in cross-ways and floods have burrial, Already to their wormy beds are gone; For fear lest day should lock their shame’s upon, They willfully themselves exile from light, And must for ay consort with black-brow’d night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort: I with the morning’s love have oft made sport; And, like a forester, the groves may tread, Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red, Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams, Turns into yellow gold his salt-green streams. But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay: We may effect this business yet to day. [Exit Oberon.

Puck. Up and down, up and down; I will lead them up and down; I am fear’d in field and town; Goblin, lead them up and down.

Here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Puck. Here villain; drawn and ready. Where art

Lys. I will be with thee straight. [ Thom? Puck. Follow me then

To plainest ground. [Exit Lys. as following the voice.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander! speak again. Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled? [head? Speak. In some bush! Where dost thou hide thy Puck. Thou coward, art thou braggart to the stars, Telling the bushes that thou look’st for wars, And wilt not come? Come, recreant; come, thou child,

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

TITANIA While I thy amiable cheeks do coy
Act IV Sc 1
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

I'll whip thee with a rod: He is deaf'd, That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea; art thou there? Puck. Follow my voice; we'll try no manhood here. [Exeunt.

Re-enter LSANDER.

Ly's. He goes before me, and still dares me on; When I come where he calls, then he is gone. The villain is much lighter heel'd than I: I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly; That fallen am I in dark uneven way, And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day! [Lies down.

If for but once thou show me thy grey light, I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite. [Sleeps.

Re-enter PUCK and DEMETRIUS.

Puck. Ho, ho! ho, ho! Coward, why com'st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st; for well I wot, Thou run'st before me, shifting every place; And dar'st not stand, nor look me in the face. Where art thou?

Puck. Come hither; I am here.

Dem. Nay, then thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy If ever I thy face by day-light see: [this dear, Now, go thy way. Fainness constrainteth me To measure out my length on this cold bed.— By day's approach look to be visited. [Lies down and sleeps.

Enter HELENA.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night, Abate thy hours: shine, comforts, from the east; That I may back to Athens, by day-light, From these that my poor company detest:— And, sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye, Steal me a while from mine own company. [Sleeps.

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more; Two of both kinds makes up four. Here she comes, curst and sad:— Cupid is a knavish lad, Thus to make poor females mad.

Enter HERMIA.

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe, Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briers; I can no further crawl, no further go; My legs can keep no pace with my desires. Here will I rest me, till the break of day. Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray! [Sleeps.

Puck. On the ground Sleep sound: I'll apply To your eye, Gentle lover, remedy. [Squeezing the juice on Lysander's eye. When thou wak'rt, Thou tak'st True delight In the sight Of the former lady's eye; And the country proverb known, That every man should take his own, In your waking shall be shewn: Jack shall have Jill; Nought shall go ill; The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be [Exit Puck.—Dem. Hel. &c. sleep.

ACT IV.—SCENE I—The same.

Enter TITANIA and BOTTOM, Fairies attending; Oberon behind unsee.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed. While I thy amiable cheeks do coy, And stiek musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head, And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy. Bot. Where's Peas-blossom?

Peas. Ready.

Bot. Monsieur Cobweb? Bot. Monsieur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red hipped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good monsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not; I would be loth to have you overthrown with a honey-bag, signior.—Where's monsieur Mustard-seed?

Bot. Nothing, good monsieur, but to help cavalero Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, monsieur; for, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face: And I am such a wander ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?

Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music: let us have the tongs and the bones.

Tit. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desir'st to eat. Bot. Truly, a peck of provender; I could munch your good dry roots. Methinks, I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.

Tit. I have a most sumptuous fairy that shall seek The squirel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts. Bot. I had rather have a handful, or two, of dried peas. But, I pray you, let some of your people stir me. I have an expectation of sleep come upon me.

Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms, Fairies, be gone, and be all ways away. So doth the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle, Gently entwist— the female ivy so Earring the barks fingers of the elm. O, how I love thee! how I doth on thee! [They sleep.

OBERON advances. Enter Puck.

Obe. Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet Her dotation now I do begin to pity. [sight? For meeting her of late, behind the wood, Seeking sweet savours for this hateful fool, I did upbraid her, and fall out with her; For she his hairy temples then had rounded With coronet of fresh and fragile flowers; And that same dew, which sometime on the buds Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls, Stood now within the pretty fiorets' eyes, Like tears, that did their own disgrace bewail. When I had, at my pleasure, taunted her, And she, in mild terms, begg'd my patience, I then did ask of her her changeling child; Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent To bear him to my bower in fairy land. And now I have the boy, I will undo This hateful imperfection of her eyes. And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp L.
From off the head of this Athenian swain;
That he awaking when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair;
And think no more of this night's accidents,
But as the fickle vexation of a dream.
But first I will release the fairy queen.
Be, as thou wanst wont to be;
[Teaching her eyes with an herb."
See, as thou wanst wont to see:
Diana's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power.
Now, my Titania, wake my sweet queen.
This Helena, old Nedar's Helena:
I wonder of their being here together.
The. No doubt, they rose up early, to observe
The file of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.
But, speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?
Ege. It is, my lord.
[Horus. The. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their Horns, and shout within, Demetrius, Lyndendr, Hermia, and Urrlea, wake and start up.
The. Good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is Begin these wood-birds but to couple now? [past; Lys. Pardon, my lord.
[He and the rest kneel to Theseus.
The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know, you are two rival enemies;
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?
Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazely,
Half 'sleep, half waking: But as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;
But, as I think, (for truly would I speak,—
And now I do bethink me, so it is;) I came with Hermia hither: our intent
Was, to couple here; which we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.
Ege. Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough
I beg the law, the law upon his head.—
They would have stol'n away, they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me:
You, of your wife; and me, of my consent;
Of my consent that she should be your wife.
Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither, to this wood;
And I in fury hither follow'd them;
Fair Helena in fancy following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,
(Dut, by some power it is,) my love to Hermia,
Melted as doth the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of a bygone gawd.
Which in my childhood I did dote upon:
And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:
But, like in sickness, did I loath this food:
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.
The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met:
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.—
Egeus, I will overbear your will;
For in the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knitt.
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purpose'd hunting shall be set aside.—
Away, with us, to Athens: Three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.—
Come, Hippolyta.

[Exeunt Theseus, Hippolita, Egeus, and train.

Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable.
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds. [able.
Herm. Metheaks, I see these things with parted eye;
When every thing seems double.
Hol. So, methinks:
And I have found Demetrius like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.
Dem. It seems to me,
That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do not you think,
ACT V.—SCENE 1.

The duke was here, and bid us follow him!

Hey. Yea; and my father.
He. And Hippolyta.

Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why then, we are awake; let’s follow him.

And, by the way, let us recount our dreams. [Exit.

As they go out, Bottom awakes.

Bot. When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer—no next is, Mait fair Pyramus.—Hey! he!

Bot. Peter Quince! Flute, the bellow-sounder! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God’s my life! stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream.—past the wit of man to say what dream it was:—Man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can call what. Methought I was, and methought I had.—But man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen; man’s hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom’s Dream, because it hath no thing since the latterend of a play, before the duke: Peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. A Room in Quince’s House.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom’s house? is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.

Flu. If he come not then, the play is marred; it goes not forward, doth it?

Quin. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens, able to discharge Pyramus, but he.

Flu. No; he hath simply the best wit of any handycraft man in Athens.

Quin. Yea, and the best person too: and he is a very paramour, for a sweet voice.

Flu. You must say, paragon: a paramour is, God bless us, a thing of sought.

Enter Snug.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made meg.

Flu. O sweet Bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a-day during his life; he could not have escaped sixpence a-day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I’ll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a-day, in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?

Quin. Bottom!—O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what; for if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.

Quin. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you, is, that the duke hath dined: Get your apparel together; good affection to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look o’er his part; for, the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case, let Thisby have clear贷款; and let not him that plays the lion, pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion’s claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions, nor garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath; and I do not doubt, but to hear them say, It is a sweet comedy. No more words; away; go away.

[Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE 1.—The same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolym, Philostrato, Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. ’Tis strange, my Thesens, that these lovers speak of.

The. The more strange than true. I never may believe These antique fables, nor these fairy toys. Lovers and madmen have such soothing brains, Such shaping fancies, that apprehend More than cool reason ever comprehends. The lunatic, the lover, and the poet, Are of imagination all compact: One sees more devils in a vast ball can hold, That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic, Sees Helen’s beauty in a brow of Egypt: The poet’s eye, in a fine frenzy rolling, Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to And, as imagination bodies forth [heaven. The forms of things unknown, the poet’s pen Turns what was forbid into things fair, And these their shapes, and gives to airy nothing A local habitation, and a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination; That, if it would but apprehend some joy, It comprehends some bringer of that joy; Or, in the night, imagining some fear, How easy is a bush suppos’d a bear! Hip. But all the story of the night told over, And all their minds transfigured so together, More witnesseth than fancy’s images, And grows to something of great constancy; But, howsoever, strange, and admirable.

Enter Lyssander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

The. Here come the lovers, ful of joy and mirth,— Joy, gentle friends! joy! joy, and fresh days of love, Accompany your joys! Lys. More than to us Wait on your royal walks, your board, your bed! The. Thee now come; what masks, what dances shall we have, To wear away this long age of three hours, Between our after-supper and bed-time? Where is our usual manager of mirth? What revels are in hand! Is there no play, To ease the anguish of a torturing hour? Call Philostrato.

Philostrato. Here, mighty Theseus, [ing? The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening? What mask, what music? How shall we beguile The lazy time, if not with some delight? Philostrato. Thereis a brief, how many sports are ripe; Make choice of which your highness will see first. [Giving a paper.

The. [reads] The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung, By an Athenian esquire to the harp. We’ll none of that that I told my love, In glory of my kinsman Hercules. The riot of the tipsy Bacchanales, Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage. That is an old device, and it was play’d
When I from Thebes came last a conqueror.
The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceased in letargy.
That is some satire, keen, and critical.
Not-sorting with a nuptial ceremony.
A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus,
And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth.
Merry and tragical! Tedium and brief!
That is, hot ice, and wonderous strange snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Philost. A play there is my lord, some ten words
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long.
Which makes it tedious: for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted.
And tragical, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.
Which when I saw rehearsed, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.
The. What are they that do play it? [Here,
Philost. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have told't their unbrach'd memories
With this same play, against your nuptial.
The. And we will hear it.

Philost. No, my noble lord,
It is not for you: I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretch'd and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.
The. I will hear that play;
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Enter Philostrate.

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'charged,
And duty in his service perishing.
The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.
Hip. He says, they can do nothing in this kind.
The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
Our sport shall be, to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do,
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purpos'd
To greet me with premediated welcomes;
Where I have seen them drive and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences.
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome: Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence, yet, I pick'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of savoy, and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
In least, speak most, to my capacity.

[Enter Philostrate.
Philost. So please your grace, the prologue is addrest.
The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets.

Enter Quince as Prologue.

Proli. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To shew our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then, we come but in despite,
We do not come as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,
We are not here. That you should here repeat you,
The actors are at hand; and, by their show,
You shall know all, that you are like to know.
The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.
Lys. He hath rid his prologue, like a rough colt;
he knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: It is not enough to speak, but to speak true.
Hip. Indeed he hath played on this prologue, like a child on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.
The. His speech was like a tangled chain; nothing impaired, but all disordered. Who is next?

Enter Pyramus and Thisbe, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion, as in dumb show.

Proli. "Gentles, perchance, you wonder at this show;
"But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
"This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
"This beauteous lady Thisby is, certain.
"This man, with lime and rough-cast, doth present
"Wall, that vile wall which did these lovers
"sunder;
"And through wall's chalk, poor souls, they are con-
"To whisper, at the which let no man wonder.
"This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
"Presenteth moon-shine; for, if you will know,
"By moon-shine did these lovers think no scorn
"To meet at Ninus' tomb, there, there to woo.
"This grisly beast, which by name lion hight,
"The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,
"Did scarce away, or rather did affright;
"And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall;
"Which lion vile with bloody mouth did stain:
"Amon comes Pyramus, sweet youth, and tall,
"And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain;
"Whereat with blade, with bloody blamful blade,
"He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
"And, Thisby tarrying in mulberry shade,
"His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
"Let lion, moon-shine, wall, and lovers twain,
"At large discourse, while here they do remain.

[Enter Proli. Time, Lion, and Moonshine.
The. I wonder, if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord: one lion may, when many asses do.

Proli. In this same interlude, it doth befall,
"That I, one Scout by name, present a wall;
"And such a wall as I would have you think,
"That had in it a cranny'd hole, or chink,
"Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby,
"Did whisper often very secretly.
"This leam, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth shew
"That I am that same wall; the truth is so:
"And this the cranny is, right and sinister,
"Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

The. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!

[Enter Pyramus.
Pyr. "O grim look'd night! O night with hue so black!
"O night, which ever art when day is not;
"O night, O night, alack, alack, alack,
"I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!—
"And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall, and I mine,
"That stand'st between her father's ground and
"Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall,
ACT V.—SCENE I.

After parting, we find Syr. Phoebe's, and Miss. Elinor's apartments:

"Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine eye.
[Wall holds up his fingers.
"Thanks, courteous wall! Jove shield thee well for "But what see I! No Thysib do I see.
[This!"
"O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss;
"Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me!"
Th. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.
Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. Deceiving me, is Thysib's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see it, it will fall past as I told you:—Yonder she comes.

Enter Thysib.

This. "O wall, full often hast thou heard my
For parting my fair Pyramus and me: [woans,
My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones;
Thy stones with lute and hair knelt up in thee."
Pyr. "I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
'To spy an I can hear my Thysib's face.

Thisthy!"

This. "My love! thou art my love, I think."
Pyr. "Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's
And like Linander am I trusty still."
[grace;
This. "And I like Hecaton, till the fate's mate"
Pyr. "Not Shafalus to Procris, was so true.
[This. "As Shafalus to Procris, I to you."
[wall."
Pyr. "O, kiss me through the hole of this vile
This. "I kiss the wall's hole, not thy lips at all."
Pyr. "Wilt thou at Thysib's tomb meet me straightway?"
This. "Tide life, tide death, I come without delay."
Wall. "Thus have I wall, my part discharged so;
And, being done, thus wall away doth go.
[Exeunt Wall, PYRAMUS, and THYSIB.

The. Now the mural down between the two neighbours.
Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so wilful to hear without warning.
Hipp. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.
Th. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worse are no worse, if imagination amend them.
Hipp. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

The. If we imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent masters.
Here come two noble beasts in, a moon and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.
Lion. "You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear
"The smallest monstrous-mouse that creeps on floor,"
May now, perchance, both quake and tremble here.
When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.
Then know, that I, one Smug, the joiner, am
A lion fell, nor else no lion's dam:
For if I should as lion come in strife
Into this place, 'twere pity on my life.
The. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.
Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that e'er I saw.

Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.
The. The true; and a goose for his discretion.
Dem. Not so, my lord, for his valour cannot carry his discretion; and the fox carries the goose.
The. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.
Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present; Myself the man i' the moon do seem to be."
The. This is the greatest error of all the rest: the man should be put into the lantern: How is it else the man i' the moon.

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle: for, you see, it is already in snuff box.
Hipp. I am aweary of this moon: Would, he would change!

The. It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane: but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, moon.

Moon. "All that I have to say, is, to tell you, that the lantern is the moon; I, the man in the moon; this thornbush, my thornbush; and this dog, my dog."
Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for they are in the moon. But, silence; here comes thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

[love?"
This. "This is old Ninny's tomb: Where is my [Lys. "Oh—"
[The Lion roars.—THYSIB runs off.

Dem. Well roared, lion.

The. Well run, Thisbe.

Hipp. Well shone, moon.—Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

The. Where is the moon's d. lion.
[The Lion tears Thisbe's mantle, and ext.
Dem. And so comes Pyramus.

Lys. And then the moon vanishes.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;"
I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright:
For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams,
I trust to taste of truest Thisby's sight.
But stay:—O spite!
But mark:—Poor knight,
What dreadful dole is here!
Eyes, do you see!
How can it be?
O dainty duck! O dear!
Thy mantle good,
What, stain'd with blood?
Approach, ye furies fell!
O fates! come, come;
Cut thread and thurum;
Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

Th. The. This passion, and the death of a dear friend would go near to make a man look sad.
Hipp. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.
Pyr. "O, wherefore, nature, didst thou frames me!
Since lion vile bath here defoure my dear:
Which is—no, no—which was the fairest danye,
That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with:
"Come, tears, confound;
"Out, sword, and wound
"The pap of Pyramus:"
"At, that left papp,
Where heart doth hop:—
Thus die I, thus, thus, thus,
"Now am I dead,
"Now am I fled;
"My soul is in the sky:
"Tongue, loose thy light!
"Moon, take thy flight!
"Now die, die, die, die, die."

Die.—Exit Moonshine.

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one. Lys. Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing.
The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and prove an ass.

Hip. How chance moonshine is gone, before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?

The. She will find him by star-light,—Here she comes; and her passion costs the play.

Enter Thisbe.

Hip. Methinks, she should not use a long one, for such a Pyramus: I hope, she will be brief.

Dem. A note will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better.

Lyt. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she means, videlicet.—

This. "'Asleep, my love?"

"What, dead, my love?"

"O Pyramus, arise,"

"Speak, speak. Quite dumb?"

"Dead, dead? A tomb"

"Must cover thy sweet eyes;"

"These lily lips,"

"This cherry nose,"

"These yellow cowalip cheeks,"

"Are gone, are gone:"

"Lovers, make moon!"

"His eyes were green as becks."

"O sisters three;"

"Come, come to me,"

"With hands as pale as milk;"

"Lay them in gore,"

"Since you have shore"

"With shears his thread of silk.

"Tongue, not a word:—"

"Come, trusty sword;"

"Come, breast-nude:"

"And farewell, friends:—"

"Thus Thisbe ends:"

"Adieu, adieu, adieu."  [Dies.

The. Moonshine and lion are left to bury the dead.

Dom. Ay, and wall too.

Bot. No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance, between two of our company.

The. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it had played Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thisbe's garter, it would have been a fine tragedy, and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

[Here a dance of Clowns.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve:—

Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fair time.

I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn,
As much as we this night have overwatch'd.

This palpable gross play hath well beguill'd

The heavy gait of night.—Sweet friends, to bed. —

A fortnight hold we this solemnity,

In nightly revels, and new jollity.  [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Enter Puck.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars,

And the wolf bewails the moon;

Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,

All with weary task forborne.

Now the wasted brands do glow,

Whilst the scratch-owl, scratching loud,

Puts the wretch that lies in woe,

In remembrance of a shroud.

Now it is the time of night,

That the graves, all gaping wide.

Every one lets forth his sprite,

In the church-way paths to glide:

And we fairies, that do rue

By the triple He-cat's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolic; not a mouse

Shall disturb this hallow'd house:

I am sent, with broom, before,

To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania, with their train.

Obe. Through this house give glistening light,

By the dead and drowsy fire:

Every elf, and fairy sprite,

Hop as light as bird from brier;

And this ditty, after me,

Sing, and daunce it trippingly.

Tita. First, rehearse this song by rote:

To each word a warbling note.

Hand in hand, with fairy grace,

Will we sing, and bless this place.

SONG, AND DANCE.

Obe. Now, until the break of day,

Through this house each fairy stray.

To the best bride-bed will we,

Which by us shall blessed be;

And the issue there create,

Ever shall be fortunate.

So shall all the couples three

Ever true in loving be;

And the plots of nature's hand

Shall not in their issue stand;

Never mole, bare-lip, nor scar,

Nor mark prodigious, such as are

Despised in nativity,

Shall upon their children be.—

With this field dew consecrate,

Every fairy take his gait;

And each several chamber bless,

Through this palace with sweet peace:

Ever shall in safety rest,

And the owner of it blest.

Trip away:

Make no stay:

Meet me all by break of day.

[Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.

Puck. If we shadows have offended,

Think but this, (and all is mended,)—

That you have but slumber'd here,

While these visions did appear.

And this weak and idle theme,

No more yielding but a dream,

Gentles, do not reprehend;

If you pardon, we will mend.

And, as I am an honest Puck,

If we have unearned luck

Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,

We will make amends, ere long:

Else the Puck a liar call.

So, good night unto you all,

Give me your hands, if we be friends,

And Robin shall restore amends.  [Exit.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Published in 1594. Mr. Malone supposes this play to have been written in 1594. The title page in the quarto states it to have been newly corrected and augmented by W. Shakespeare, and perhaps these corrections and augmentations constituted his only share of the production.

and Princess.

SCENE.—NAVARRE.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live registred upon our brazen tomb,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death.
When, spite of corneorant devouing time,
The endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall hate his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity.
Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are,
That war against your own affections,
And the huge army of the world's desires,—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force:
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world;
Our court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living art.
You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me,
My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes,
That are recorded in this schedule here;
Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names;
That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein:
If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do,
Subscribe to your deep oath, and keep it too.

Long. I am resolv'd: 'tis but a three years' fast;
The mind shall banquet, though the body pine:
Fat paunches have lean rates; and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits.
Dum. My loving lord, Dumain is mortified;
The grosser manner of these world's delights
He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves:
To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and she,
With all these living in philosophy.
Biron. I can but say their protestation over,

So much, dear liege, I have already sworn,
That is, To live and study here three years.
But there are other strict observances:
As, not to see a woman in that term;
Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:
And, one day in a week to touch no food;
And to know the thing I am forbid to know,
The which, I hope, is not enrolled there;
And then, to sleep but three hours in the night,
And not be seen to wink of all the day;
(When I was wont to think no harm all night,
And make a dark night too of half the day;) Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:
Q, these are barren things, too hard to keep;
Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep,
King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.
Biron. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please;
I only swore, to study with your grace,
And stay here in your court for three years' space.
Long. You swear to that, Biron, and to the rest.
Biron. By and by, sir, then I swore in jest.—
What is the end of study? let me know.
King. Why, that to know, which else we should not know.
Biron. Things hid and barr'd, you mean, from common sense?
King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.
Biron. Come on then, I will swear to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know.
As thus,—To study where I well may dine,
When I to feast expressly am forbid;
Or, study where to meet some mistress fine,
When mistresses from common sense are hid:
Or, having sworn too hard-a-keeping oath,
Swell, to break it, and not break my truth.
If study's gain be thus, and yet the be so,
Study knows that, which yet it doth not know.
Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no.
King. These be the stops that hinder study quite,
And train our intellects to vain delight.

Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most
Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain: y'ain,
As, painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eye-sight of his look:
Light, seeking light, doth light of light beguile:
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye to be so,
Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heel,
And give him light that was it blinded by.
Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks;
Small have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from others' books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star,
Have no more profit of their shining nights,
Than those that walk, and wot not what they are.
Too much to know, is, to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name.

King. How well he's read, to reason against reading!
LOVE'S LABOURS LOST.

Dum. Proceed well, to stop all good proceeding.
Long. He weeds the corn, and still lets grow the weed.
Biron. The spring is near, when green greece are a
Dum. How follows that? [breeding.
Biron. Fit in his place and time.
Dum. In reason nothing.
Biron. Something then in rhyme.
Long. Biron is like an envious snapping frost,
That beed the first-born infants of the spring.
Biron. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast,
Before the birds have any cause to sing?
Why should I joy in an abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled shows;
But like of each thing, that in season grows.
So you, to study how it is too late,
Climb o'er the house to unlock the little gate.
King. Well, sit you out: go home, Biron; adieu! I Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay with you:
And, though I have for barbarism spoke more,
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confidently I'll keep what I have swore,
And hide the penny of each three years' day.
Give me the paper, let me read the same;
And to the strictest decrees I'll write my name.
King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!
Biron. [Reads.] Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my court.—
Must this this been proch'im? [Four days ago.
Long. Biron, Let's see the penalty.
[Reads.]—On pain of losing her tongue.—
Who devi'd this?
Long. Marry, that did I.
Biron. Sweet lord, and why?
Long. It, well behind them here, with that dread penalty.
Biron. A dangerous law against gentility.
[Reads.] Item, If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise.
This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For well you know, here comes in embassy
The French King's daughter with yourself to speak,—
And therefore, sir, I rise in your Grace's presence.
About surrender-up of Aquitania.
To her decrep't, sick, and bed-ridd father:
Therefore this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes the admiring princess hither.
King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite Biron. So study evermore is over-shot; [forgot.
While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to do the thing it should:
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire: so won, so lost.
King. We must, of force, dispense with this de-
She must lie here on mere necessity.
[ere;
Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn
Three thousand times within this three years!
For every man with his affairs is born;
Not by might master'd, but by special grace:
If I break faith, this word shall speak for me,
I am forsworn on mere necessity.—
So to the laws at large I write my name: [Subscribers.
And he that breaks them in the least degree,
Stands in attendant of eternal shame:
Suggestions are to others, as to me;
But, I believe, although I seem so loth;
I am the last that will last keep his oath.

But is there no quick recreation granted?
King. Ay, that there is: our court, you know, is
With a refined traveller of Spains bright;
[haunted
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain
One, whom the music of his own vane tongue
Doth ravish, like enchanting harmony;
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny:
This child of fancy, that Armado bright.
For interim to our studies, shall relate,
In high-born words, the worth of many a knight
From tanwy Spain, lost in the world's debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I;
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie,
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.
Biron. Armado is a most illustrous wight,
A man of fire-now words, fashion's own knight.
Long. Costard the swain, and he, shall be our sport
And, so to study, three years is but short.

Enter Dull, with a letter, and Costard.
Dull. Which is the duke's own person?
Biron. This, this fellow; What would't?
Dull. This, this person, he is my own person, for I am This grace's tharborough: but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This be.
Dull. Sigoio Armé—Armé—commends you.
There's villany abroad; this letter will tell you more.
Cost. Sir, the contents thereof are as touching me.
King. A letter from the magnificent Armado.
Biron. Low sover, the matter, I hope in God for high words.
Long. A high hope for a low having: God grant us patience!
Biron. To hear? or forbear hearing?
Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.
Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to climb in the merriness.
Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.
Biron. In what manner?
Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman: for the form, in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?
Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; And God defend the right?
King. Will you hear this letter with attention?
Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.
King. [Reads.] Great deity, the welkin's vice-rent, and sole dominator of Nature, my soul's earth's God, and body's fostering patron,—
Cost. Of other man's Costard yet.
King. So it is;—
Cost. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so, so.
King. Peace.
Cost. —be mine, and every man that dares not fight!
King. No words.
Cost. —not other men's secrets, I beseech you.
King. So it is, besieg'd with sable-coloured melancholy, I did command the black-oppressing humour to ACT I.—SCENE II.

Sirrah, come on.

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore, Welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again, and till then, Sit thee down, sorrow! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Another part of the same. Armado's House.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear inp.

Moth. No, no; O lord, sir, no.

Arm. How canst thou then part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenal?

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough senior.

Arm. Which is my tender senior? why tough senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenal? why tender juvenal?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenal, as a congruent epitheton, appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name longh.

Arm. Pretty, and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir; I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. Thou pretty, because little.

Moth. Little pretty, because little: Wherefore apt?

Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.

Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Arm. Is thy condivg praise.

Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

Arm. What? that an eel is ingenious?

Moth. That an eel is quick.

Arm. I do say, thou art quick in answers: Thou hearest my blood.

Moth. I am answered, sir.

Arm. I love not to be crossed.

Moth. He speaks the mere contrary, crosses love not him.

[Aside. Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.

Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one thrice told?

Arm. I am ill at reckoning, it fitteth the spirit of a tapaster.

Moth. You are a gentleman, and a gamester, sir.

Arm. I confess both; they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross suit of deuce-ace amounts to.

Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.

Moth. Which the base vulgar do call, three.

Arm. True.

Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?

Now here is three studied, ere you 'll thrice wink: and how easy it is to put years to the word three, and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Arm. A most fine figure!

Moth. To prove you a cipher. [Aside. Arm. I will hereupon confess, I am in love: and, as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the repro-bait thought of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new devised courtesy. I think scorn to sigh; methinks, I should out-swear Cupid. Comfort me, boy: What great man have been in love?

Moth. Hercules, master.
Arm. Most sweet Hercules!—More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Moth. Sampson, master; he was a man of good carriage, great carriage; for he carried the town-gate his back, like a porter; and he was in love.
Arm. O well-knit Sampson! strong-jointed Sampson! I do excel thee in my rapiers, as much as thou didst me in carrying gates. I am in love too,—Who was Sampson's love, my dear Moth?

Moth. A woman, master.
Arm. Of what complexion?
Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or the two; or one of the four.
Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion?
Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.
Arm. Is that one of the four complexions?
Moth. As I have read, sir: and the best of them too.
Arm. Green, indeed, is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, methinks, Sampson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.
Moth. It was so, sir; for she had a green wit.
Arm. My love is most immaculate white and red.
Moth. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.
Arm. Define, define, well-educated infant.
Moth. My father's wit, and my mother's tongue assist me.
Arm. Sweet invitations of a child; most pretty, and pathetical!

Moth. If she be made of white and red,
Her faults will ne'er be known;
For blushing cheeks by faults are bred.
And fears by pale white shewn:
Then, if she fear, or be to blame,
By this you shall not know;
For still her cheeks possess the same,
Which native she doth owe.

A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

Arm. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?

Moth. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since: but, I think now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.

Arm. I will have the subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent. Boy, I do love that country girl, that I look in the park with the rational hind Costard; she deserves well.

Moth. To be whipped; and yet a better love than my master. [Aside.

Arm. Sing, boy; my spirit grows heavy in love.
Moth. And that's great marvel, loving a light wench.
Arm. I say, sing.

Moth. Forbear till this company be past.

Enter Dell, Costard, and Jaquenetta.

Dull. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must let him take no delight, nor no painence; but 'a must fast three days a-week.
For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day-woman. Fare you well.

Arm. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.

Jag. Man.
Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jag. That's hereby.

Arm. I know where it is situate.

Jag. Lord, how wise are you?
Arm. I will tell thee wonders.

Jag. With that face?
Arm. I love thee.

Jag. So I heard you say.

Arm. And so farewell.

Jag. Fair weather after you!

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away.

[Exeunt Dell, and Jaquenetta.

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences, ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you, than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Arm. Take away this villain; shut him up.

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave; away.

Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir; I will fast, being loose.

Moth. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Cost. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall see—

Moth. What shall some see?

Cost. Nay nothing, master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words; and, therefore, I will say nothing; I thank God, I have as little patience as another man;
and, therefore, I can be quiet.

[Exeunt Moth and Costard.

Arm. I do affect the very ground, which is base, where her shoe, which is baser, guided by her foot, which is basest, doth tread. I shall be forewarned, (which is a great argument of falsehood,) if I love:
And how can that be true love, which is falsely at-tempered? Love is a familiar; love is a devil: there is no evil angel but love. Yet Sampson was so tempted; and he had an excellent strength; yet was Solomon so seduced; and he had a very good wit.
Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Herencles' club,
and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapiers.
The first and second cause will not serve my turn;
the passado he respects not, the duello he regards not; his disgrace is to be called boy; but his glory is, to subdue men. Adieu, valour! rust, rapiers! be still, drum! for your manager is in love; yea, he lovest. Assist me some extemporal god of rhyme, for, I am sure, I shall turn sonneeter. Deviso wit;
write pen; for I am for whole volumes in folio.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same. A Pavillion and tents; a distance.

Enter the Prince of France, Rosaline, Marie,
Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest
Consider who the king your father sends; [spirits;
To whom he sends; and what's his embassy:
Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem;
To parley with the sole inheritor
Of all perfections that a man may owe,
Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight
Than Aquitain; a dowry for a queen.
With such bedecking ornaments of praise?

Mar. Here comes Boyet.

Re-enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord?

Boyet. Navarre hath notice of your fair approach;
And he, and his competitors in oath,
Were all address’d to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt,
He rather means to lodge you to the field,
(Like one that comes here to besiege his court,)
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre.

Enter King, Longaville, Duman, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prin. Fair, I give you back again; and, welcome
I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours; and welcome to the wild fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.

Prin. I will be welcome then; conduct me thither.

King. Hears he, dear lady; I have swor’n an oath.

Prin. Our lady help my lord! he shall be forsworn.

King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.

Prin. Why, will shall break it; will, and nothing.

King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is. [Exit.

Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear, your grace hath sworn-out house-keeping:
’Tis daily sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it:
But pardon me, I am too sudden bold;
To teach a teacher ill beseecheth me.
Vouchsafe to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in my suit. [Gives a paper.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.

Prin. You will the sooner, that I were away;
For you’ll prove perfidious, if you make me stay.

Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Biron. I know you did.

Ros. How needless was it then
To ask the question?

Biron. You must not be so quick.

Ros. ’Is long of you that spur me with such questions.

[will tire.

Biron. Your wit’s too hot, it speeds too fast,

Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.

Biron. What time of day?

Ros. The hour that fools should ask.

Biron. Now fair befal your mask!

Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!

Biron. And send you many lovers!

Ros. Amen, so you be none.

Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Being but the one half of an entire sum,
Dispensed by my father in his wars;
But say, that he, or we, (as neither have,) Received ’tis sum; yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more; in surety of the which,
One part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money’s worth.
If then the king your father will restore
But the one half wags is unsatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitain,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purposeth,
For here he doth demand to have repaid
An hundred thousand crowns; and not demands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain;
Which we much rather had depart withal,
And have the money by our father lent,
Than Aquitain so gelled as it is.
Dear princess, were not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding, 'gainst some reason, in my breast,
And go well satisfied to France again.

Boyet. You do the king my father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeing to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.

King. I do protest, I never heard of it;
And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back,
Or yield up Aquitain.

Prin. We arrest your word;—
Boyet, you can produce acquittances,
For such a sum, from special officers
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.

Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come,
Where that and other specialties are bound;
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.

King. It shall suffice me: at which interview,
All liberal reason I will yield unto.

Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand,
As honour, without breach of honour, may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness:
You may not come, fair princess, in my gates;
But here without you shall be so receiv'd.
As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart,
Though so denied fair harbour in my house.
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell:
To-morrow shall we visit you again. [Grace]

Prin. Sweet health; and fair desires consort your King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!

[Exit KREUZ, and his train.

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to my own heart.
Ros. 'Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.

Biron. I would, you heard it groan.
Ros. Is the fool sick?

Biron. Sick at heart.
Ros. Alack, is it bad?

Biron. Would that it do it good!
Ros. My physic says, I.

Biron. Will you prick 't with your eye?
Ros. No payt, with my knife.

Biron. Now, God save thy life.
Ros. And yours from long living.

Biron. I cannot stay thanksgiving. [Retiring.

Dum. Sir, I pray you, a word: What lady is that same?

Boyet. The heir of Alencon, Rosaline her name.

Dum. A gallant lady! Monsieur, fare you well.

[Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word; What is she in the white [light.

Boyet. I mean sometimes, as you saw her in the Long. Perchance, light in the light; I desire her name.
[were a shame.

Boyet. She hath but one for herself; to desire that,
Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?

Boyet. Her mother's, I have heard.
Long. God's blessing on your head!

Boyet. Good sir, be not offended:
She is an heir of Faltrackridge.
Long. Nay, my choleric is cured.
She is a most sweet lady.

Boyet. Not unlike, sir; that may be. [Exit Long.

Biron. What's her name, in the cap?

Boyet. Katherine, by good hap.

Biron. Is she wedded, or no?

Boyet. To her will, sir, or so.

Biron. You are welcome, sir; adieu

Boyet. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you.

[Exit Biron.—Ladies unmask.

Mar. The last is Biron, the merry mad-cap lord:
Not a word with him but a jest.

Boyet. And every jest but a word.

Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word.

Boyet. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to Mar. Two hot sheeps, merry!

Boyet. And wherefore not ships?

Mar. You sheep, and I pasture; shall that finish
Boyet. So you grant pasture for me. [the jest?

Prin. Not so, gentle beast;
My lips are no common, though several they be.

Boyet. Belonging to whom?

Mar. To my fortunes and me.

Prin. Good wits will be laureling; but, gentle,
The civil war of wits were much better used [agree:
On Navarre and his book-men; for here 'tis abused.

Boyet. If my observation, (which very seldom lies,) By the heart's still rhetoric, disclosed with eyes,
Decieve not now, Navarre is infected.

Prin. With what?

Boyet. With that which we lovers entitle, affected.

Prin. Your reason.

Boyet. Why, all his behaviours did make their retire
To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire:
His heart, like an agate, with your print impressed,
 Proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed:
His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see,
Did stumble with haste in his eye-sight to be;
All senses to that sense did make their repair,
To feel only looking on fairest of fair:
Methought all his senses were lock'd in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; [glass'd,
Who, tendering their own worth, from where they were
Did point you to buy them, along as you pass'd.
His face's own margent did quote such amazens,
That all eyes did his eyes enchant'd with gazes:
I'll give you Aquitain, and all that is his,
An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

Prin. Come, to our pavilion: Boyet is disposed—Boyet. But to speak that in words, which his eye
I only have made a mouth of his eye, [hath disclos'd:
By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.

Ros. Thou art an old love-monger, and speak'st skilfully.

Mar. He is Cupid's grandfather, and earns money
Ros. Then was Venus like her mother; for her father is but grim.

Boyet. Do you hear, my mad wenches?

Mar. No.

Boyet. What then, do you see?
Ros. Ay, our way to be gone.

Boyet. You are too hard for me. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter ARMADO and MOITH.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.
Moth. _Conclineth._

[Singing.]
Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderness of years! take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him festively hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love. [Exit.]

_Moth._ Master, will you win your love with a French _Arm._ How mean'st thou? brawling in French?

_Moth._ No, my complete master: but to jog off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eye-idee; sigh a note, and sing a note; sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometime through the nose, as if you snuffed up love by snuffling love; with your hat penthouse-like, over the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly-doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away: These are compliments, these are honours; these betry nice wenches—that would be betrayed without these; and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that most are affected to these.

Arm._ How hast thou purchased this experience?

_Moth._ By my penny of observation.

Arm._ But O,—but O.

_Moth._—the hobby-horse is forgot?

Arm._ Callest thou my love, hobby-horse?

_Moth._ No, master; the hobby-horse is but a colt, and your love, perhaps, a hackney. But have you forgot your love?

Arm._ Almost I had.

_Moth._ Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm._ By heart, and in heart, boy;

_Moth._ And out of heart, master: all those three I will prove.

Arm._ What wilt thou prove?

_Moth._ A man, if I live; and this, by, in, and without, upon the instant: By heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her, because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm._ I am all these three.

_Moth._ And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all. [a letter.]

Arm._ Fetch hither the swain; he must carry me.

_Moth._ What meanest thou sympathized; a horse to be embassador for an ass!

Arm._ Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

_Moth._ Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the horse, for he is very slow-gaited: But I go.

Arm._ The way is but short; away.

_Moth._ As swift as lead, sir.

Arm._ Thy meaning, pretty ingenious?

Is not lead a metal heavy, dull, and slow?

_Moth._ Mistime, honestmaster; or rather, master, no.

Arm._ I say, lead is slow.

_Moth._ You are too swift, sir, to say so:

Is that lead slow which is fr'd from a gun?

Arm._ Sweet smoke of rhetoric!

He reproves me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he:—

_I shoot thee at the swain._

_Moth._ Thump then, and I fce. [Exit.]

Arm._ A most acute juvenal; voluble and free of grace!

By thy favour, sweet welkin, I must sigh in thy face: Most rude melancholy, valour gives thee place.

_My herald is return'd._

Re-enter Moth and Costard._

_Moth._ A wonder, master: here's a Costard broken in a shin

Arm._ Some enigma, some riddle: come,—thy _l'envoy_;—begin.

_Cost._ No egma, no riddle, no _l'envoy_; no salve in them all, sir: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain; no _l'envoy_, no _l'envoy_, no salve, sir, but a plantain!

Arm._ By virtue, thou laurel-laughter; thy silly thought, my spleen; the heaving of my lungs provokes me to ridiculous smiling: O, pardon me, my stars! Both the inconsiderate take salve for _l'envoy_, and the word, _l'envoy_, for a salve!

_Moth._ Do the wise think them other? is not _l'envoy_ a salve, as I make plain.

_Cost._ No, page: it is an epilogue or discourse, to some obscure precedence that hath before been said. I will example it:

_The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,_

_We're still at odds, being but three._

_There's the moral: Now the _l'envoy._

_Moth._ I will add the _l'envoy_. say the moral again.

Arm._ The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,_

_We're still at odds, being but three;_

_Moth._ Until the goose came out of door,

_And stay'd the odds by adding four._

Now will I begin your moral, and do you follow with my _l'envoy._

_The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,_

_We're still at odds, being but three;_

_Moth._ Until the goose came out of door,

_Staying the odds by adding four._

_Cost._ A good _l'envoy_, ending in the goose; Would you desire more?

_Cost._ The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goose,

Sir, your pennworth is good, an your goose be fat.—

To sell a bargain well, is as cunning as fast and loose.

Let me see a fat _l'envoy_; ay, that's a fat goose.

Arm._ Come hither, come hither: How did this argument begin?

_Moth._ By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin.

_Then call'd you for the _l'envoy_.

_Cost._ True, and I for a plantain: Thus came your argument in;

_Then the boy's fat _l'envoy_, the goose that you bought;

And he ended the market._

Arm._ But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

_Moth._ I will tell you sensibly.

_Cost._ Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth; I will speak that _l'envoy._

I, Costard, running out, that was safely within,

Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin._

Arm._ We will talk no more of this matter.

_Cost._ Till there he more matter in the shin.

Arm._ Sirrah Costard, I will enfranchise thee.

_Cost._ O, marry me to one Frances;—I smell some _l'envoy_, some goose, in this._

Arm._ By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enfreedoming thy person; thou wert immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

_Cost._ True, true; and now you will be my purga_ tion, and let me loose._

Arm._ I give thee thy liberty, set thee from dur_ance; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: Bear this significant to the country maid

Jaquenetta: there is remuneration; [giving him _money._] for the best ward of mine honour, is, rewarding my dependents. Moth, follow. [Exit._

_Moth._ Like the sequel, I.——Signior Costard, adieu._

_Cost._ My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my incroy_babe! [Exit Morri._

Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration! O, that's the Latin word for three farthings:

three farthings—remuneration.—What’s the price of this tinkle? a penny.—No, I’ll give you a remuneration: why, it carries it.—Remuneration! why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Biron.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.
Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carat'ion ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?
Biron. What is a remuneration?
Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing.
Biron. O, why then, three-farthings-worth of silk.
Cost. I thank your worship: God he with you!
Biron. O, stay, slave; I must employ thee:
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave, Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.
Cost. When would you have it done, sir?
Biron. O, this afternoon.
Cost. Well, I will do it, sir: Fare you well.
Biron. O, thou knowest not what it is.
Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.
Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.
Cost. Will come to your worship to-morrow morning.
Biron. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this:—
The princess comes to hunt here in the park, And in her train there is a gentle lady; [name, When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her And Rosaline they call; ask for her; And to her white hand see thou do commend This seal’d-up counsel. There’s thy guerdon; go.

Cost. Guerdon.—O sweet guerdon! better than remuneration; eleven-pence farthing better: Most sweet guerdon!—I will do it, sir, in print.—Guerdon —remuneration.

Biron. O!—And I, forsooth, in love! I, that have been love’s whip;
A very beadle to a humours sigh;
A critic; nay, a night-watch constable;
A domineering pedant o’er the boy,
Than whom no mortal so magnificent!
This wimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy;
This, this senior-junior, giant heart, Dan Cudip,
Regent of love-rythmes, lord of folded arms,
The anointed sovereign of signs and groans,
Lige of all loiterers and malcontents,
Dread prince of 픽لك스, king of codpieces,
Sole emperor, and great general
Of trotting paritors, O my little heart!—
And to be a corporal of his field,
And wear his colours like a tumbler’s hoop:
What? I! I love! I sue! I seek a wife!
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing; ever out of frame;
And never going right, being a watch,
But being watch’d that it may still go right?
Nay, to be perjur’d, which is worst of all;
And among three, to love the worst of all;
A whitely wanton with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes;
Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,
Though Argus were her eunuch and her guard:
And to sigh for her! to watch for her!
To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague
That Cupid will importune for my neglect
Of his Almighty dreadful little might.
Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan;
Some men must love my lady, and some Joan.

ACT IV.

SCENE L.—Another part of the same.

Enter the Princes, Rosaline, Maria, Katherine, Boyle, Lords, Attendants, and e Forestier.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurr’d his horse so Against the steep uprising of the hill? [hard Boyet. I know not; but, I think, it was not be.
Prin. Whoe’er he was, he shew’d a mounting mind. Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch; On Saturday we will return to France.—
Then, forestier, my friend, where is the bush, That we must stand and play the murderer in.
For, Here by, upon the edge of yonder coppie; A stand, where you may make the fairest shoot.
Prin. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot, And thereupon thou speak’st, the fairest shoot.
For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.
Prin. What, what! first praise me, and again say,
O short-lived pride! Not fair! slack for wee! [oo!
For. Yes, madam, fair.
Prin. Nay, never paint me now;
Where fair is not, praise I must mend the brow.
Here, good my glass, take this for telling true;

[Giving him money,
Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.
Prin. Sue, see, my beauty will be sav’d by merit
O heresy in fair, fit for these days:
A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.—
But come, the bow—Now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:
Not wounding, pity would not let me do’;
If wounding, then it was to shew my skill,
That more for praise, than purpose, meant to kill.
And, out of question, so it is sometimes;
Glory grows guilty of her distracted errors.
When, for fame’s sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart:
As I, for praise alone, now seek to spill
The poor deer’s blood, that my heart means no ill.
Boyle. Do not curse wives hold that self-sovereignty
Only for praise’ sake, when they strive to be Lords o’er their lords?
Prin. Only for praise; and praise we may afford
To any lady that subdues a lord.

Enter Costard.

Prin. Here comes a member of the common-wealth.
Cost. God dig-you-den all! Pray you, which is the head lady?
Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest That have no heads.
Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest. [his truth.
Cost. The thickest, and the tallest! it is so; truth
An your waist, mistresse, were as slender as my wit,
One of these maid’s girdles for your waist should be Her.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest
Prin. What’s your will, sir! what’s your will?
Cost. I have a letter from monsieur Biron, to one lady Rosaline.

[Of mine:
Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter; he’s a good friend
Stand aside, good bearer.—Boyet, you can carve;
Break up this capon.

[Boyet.

I am bound to serve.—
This letter is mistook, it importeth none here;
It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Prin.

We will read it, I swear:
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

175

Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear.

Boyet. [Reads.] By heaven, that thou art fair is most infallible; true, that thou art bounteous; truth itself, that thou art lovely: More fair than fair, beautiful than beautiful; truer than truth itself have commotion on thy Heretical Vassal! The magnanimous and most illustrious king Copheus set eyes upon the precious and indubitable beggar Zenepollion; and he it was that might right say, veni, vidi, vici; which to anatomize in the vulgar, (O base and obscure vulgar!) videlect, he came, saw, and overcame: he came, one; saw, two; overcame, three. Who came? the king; Why did he come? to see? Why did he see? to overcome: To whom came he? to the beggar: What saw he? the beggar; Who overcame he? the beggar: The conclusion is victory; On whose side? the king's: the captive is enrich'd; On whose side? the beggar's: The catastrophe is a nuptial: On whose side? The king's!—no, on both in one, or one in both. I am the king; for so stands the comparison: thou, the beggar; for so witnesseth thou baseness. Shall I command thee love? I may; Shall I enforce thy love? I could: Shall I entreat thee love? I will. What shall thou exchange for vagabonds? For tittles; titles: For thyself, me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I confesse my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

Thine, in the name of the king.

DON ARDIANO DE ARMAZO.

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar 'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey; Submissive fall his princely feet before, And he from forage will incline to play: But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then? Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

Prin. What plume of feathers is he, that inditted this letter? [better] What vane? what weather-cock? did ever thou hear Boyet. I am much deceived, but I remember the style. [while]

Prin. Else thy memory is bad, going o'er it ere Boyet. This Armazo is a Spanishid, that keeps here in court; A phantasm, a Monarch, and one that makes sport To the prince, and his book-mates.

Prin. Thou, fellow, a word: Who gave thee this letter? Cost. I told you; my lord. Prin. To whom should'st thou give it? Cost. From my lord to my lady. Prin. From which lord, to which lady? Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of mine; To a lady of France, that he call'd Rosaline. [away]

Prin. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come, lords, Here, sweet, put up this; 'twill be thine another day. [Exit Princess and train.

Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the suitor? Ros. Shall I teach you to know? Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.

Ros. Why, she that bears the bow.

Finely put off! [marry]

Boyet. My lady goes to kill horses; but, if thou hang me by the neck, if horns that year miscarry, Finely put on! [endear]

Ros. Well then, I am the shooter.

Boyet. And who is your dear? Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself; come Finely put on, indeed! [near]

Mer. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower: Have I hit her now? Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a man when king Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Ros. Thou canst not hit it, kiss it, hit it; [Singing Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot, An I cannot, another can.

[Exit ROS. and KATRIN.

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant! how both did I did hit it.

Mer. A mark marvellous well shot: for they both Boyet. A mark! O, mark but that mark; A mark, says my lady!

Let the mark have a prick in't, at mete if, it may be. Mer. Wide o' the bow hand! if thy hand is at the clout.

Cost. Indeed, a must shoot nearer, or he'll ne'er Boyet. An if my hand be out, then, believe your hand is in.

[the pin.

Cost. Then will she get the upshot by cleaving Mer. Come, come, you talk rashly, your lips grow foul. [lenege her to bowl.

Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir; chal Boyet. I fear too much roughing; Good night my [deep good owl. [Exit BOYET and MAJN.

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple clown! Lord, lord! how the ladies and I have put him down! O' my troth, most sweet jests! most inconcey vulgar wit! [were, so fit.

When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it Armatho o' the one side.—O, a most dainty man! To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fae To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a will swear!—

And his page o' t' other side, that handful of wit! Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit! Sola, sola! [Shouting within.

[Exit COSTARD, running.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter HOLOFERNES, Sir NATHANIEL, and DULL.

NATH. Very reverent sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, in sanguis,— blood; ripe as a pommeater, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of ocel.—the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab, on the face of terre,—the soild, the land, the earth.

NATH. Truly, master Holofernes, the epithets are sweety varied, like a scholar at the least: But, sir, I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.

Dull. 'Twas not a haud credo; 'twaas a pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of in- insiation, as it were, in vie, in way, of explication; fascere, as it were, replication, or, rather, utenture, to shew, as it were, his inclination,—after his undress ed, unpolished, uneducated, untrained, or rather unlettered, or rather unconstituted, in unconformed fashion, —to insert again my haud credo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a haud credo; 'twas a pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicity, bis coetus! O thou monster ignorance, how dost thou let thou look! Nath. Sir, he hath never feel of the daunties that are bred in a book; he hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink: his intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal, only sensible in the duffer parts;
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

And such barren plants are set before us, that we thankful should be (Which we of taste and feeling are) for those parts that do fructify more than he.
For as it would till become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool,
[a school: So, were there a patch set on learning, to see him in But, once bene, say 1; being of an old father's mind, Many can brook the weather, that love not the wind.
Dull. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your wit,
What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?
Hol. Dictyenna, good man Dull; Dictyenna, good man Dull.
Dull. What is Dictyenna?
Nath. A title to Phoebe, to Luna, to the moon.
Hol. The moon was a month old, when Adam was no more;
And raught not to five weeks, when he came to five-
The allusion holds in the exchange.
Dull. 'Tis true indeed; the allusion holds in the exchange.
Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.
Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange; for the moon is never but a month old; and for, why beside, that 'twas a pricket that the princess kill'd.
Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epithap on the death of the deer; and, to humour the ignorant, I have call'd the deer the princess kill'd, a pricket.
Nath. Perge, good master Holofernes, perge; so shall I excuse you to abrogate securitly.
Hol. I will something affect the letter; for it argues facility,
The praiseful princes pirc'd and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket; [with shooting.
Some say, a sore; but not a sore, till now made sore
The dogs did yell; put i to sore then sorel jumps from thicket;
Or pricket, sore, or else sore; the people fall a howling.
If sore be sore, then L to sore makes fifty sores; Osore L!
Of one sore I an hundred make, by adding but one more L.
Nath. A rare talent!
Dull. If a talent be a claw, how he claws him with a talent.
Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple:
A foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions: these are begot in the vestriecle of memory, nourish'd in the wond of pia mater; and deliver'd upon the mellowing of occasion; But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.
Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you; and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutor'd by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.
Hol. Meherce, if their sons be ingenious, they shall want no instruction: if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them: But, vir sopit, qui paene liqucat: a soul female saluteth us.

Enter Jacquesetta and Costard.

Jacq. God give you good morrow, master person.
Hol. Master person, — quasi pers-on. And if one should be pierced, which is the one?
Cost. Master, master schoolmaster, he that is likest to a hog's head.

Hol. Of piercing a hog's head! a good lustre of conceit in a turf of earth; fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine: 'tis pretty; it is well.
Jacq. God master parson, be so good as read me this letter; it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado; I beseech you, read it.
Hol. Fanste, precor getild quando pecas onne sub umbra Ruminat,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantuan! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice: —

VINCE,

Chi non te vede, et non te prega.

Old Mantuan! old Mantuan! Who understandeth thee not, loves thee not. — Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa—
Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or, rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?
Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.
Hol. Let me hear a staff, a stanza, a verse; Lege, donatia.

Nath. If love make me forsowen, how shall I swear to love?
Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vowed! Though to myself forsowen, to thee I'll faithful prove;
Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers bowed.
Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes;
Where all those pleasures live, that art would benedict.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend:
All ignorant that soul, that sees thee without wonder;
(Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire.)
Thy eye in lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which, not to anger bent, is music, and sweet fire.
Celestial, as thou art, oh pardon, love, this wrong,
That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue!
Hol. You find not the apostrophes, and so mass the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified; but, for the elegance, facility, and golden cadence of poetry, care, Ovidius Naso was the man: and why, indeed, Naso; but for smelling out the edifierious flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? Ismari, is nothing: so doth the bound his master, the ape hiskeeper, the tired horse his rider. But donnasilla virgin, was this deditio to you?
Jacq. Ay, sir, from one monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen's lords.
Hol. I will overglance the superscript. To the snow-white hand of the most beautiful Lady Rosaline, I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto.

Your Ladyship's in all desired employment, Biron. Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the votaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which, accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried.—Trip and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much: Stay not thy command, I forgive thy duty; adieu.

Jacq. Good Costard, go with me. — Sir, God save your life!
Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

[Exeunt Cost. and Jacq.]

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously; and, as a certain father saith —
Hol. Sir, tell not me of the father, I do fear colourable colours. But, to return to the verses; Did they please you, sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvellos well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where if, before repast, it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the fore-said child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention: I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you too:—for society, (saith the text,) is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, certes, the text most infallibly concludes it,—Sir, [to Dulc.] I do invite you too; you shall not say me, nay: pauca verba. Away; the gentlemen are at their game, and we will to our recreation. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the same.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself: they have pitch'd a toll; I am toiling in a pitch; pitch that defiles it! a foul word. Well, Set thee there, heavens I sorrow! for so they say, the fool said, and so say I, and I the fool. Well proved, wit! By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, I a sheep: Well proved again on my side! I will not love: if I do hang me; if faith, I will not. O, but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye. I would not love her; yes, fou her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my throat. By heaven, I do love: and it hath taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy; and here is part of my rhyme, and here my melancholy. Well, she hath one o' my sons already; the clown bore it, the fool seat it, and the lady hath it; sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a pin if the other three were in: Here comes one with a paper; God give him grace to groan. [Gets up into a tree.

Enter the King, with a paper.

King. Ah me!

Biron. [Aside.] Shot by heaven!—Proceed, sweet Cupid; thou hast thump'd him with thy bird-bolt under the left page:—I'faith secrets.—

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not, To those fresh morning drops upon the rose, At the eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows: Nor shines the silver moon half so bright Through the transparent boughs of the deep, As doth thy face through tears of mine give light: Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep; No drop but as a coach doth carry thee, So rides thou triumphing in my soul: Do but behold the tears that swell in me, And they thy glory through my grief will show: But do not love thyself: then thou wilt keep My tears for glasses, and still make me weep. O queen of queens, how far dost thou excel! No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell,— How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper; Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here? [Steps aside.

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What, Longaville! and reading! listen, ear.

Biron. Now, in thy likeness, one more foul, appear! [Aside.

Long. Ah me! I am forsworn.

Biron. Why, he comes in like a perjure, wearing papers. [Aside.

King. In love, I hope, sweet fellowship in shame! [Aside.

Biron. One drunkard loves another of the name. [Aside.

Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so? Biron. [Aside.] I could put thee in comfort; not by two, that I know: Thou mak'st the trumitarian, the corner cap of society, The shape of Love's Tyburn that hangs up simplicity. [move:

Long. I fear, these stubborn lines lack power to O sweet Maria, empress of my love!

These numbers will I tear and write in prose.

Biron. [Aside.] O, rhymes are guards on wanton Disguise not his slop. [Cupid's hose: Long. This same shall go. He reads the sonnet.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye (Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,) Persuade my heart to this false perjury?

Vows for thee broke, deserve not punishment.

A woman I foreswear; but, I will prove,

Thou being a goddess, I foresware not thee:

My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;

Thy grace being gain'd, ensues all disgrace in me.

Vows are but breath, and breath a vapour is:

Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine,

Exhalest this vapour now; in thee it is:

If broken then, it is no fault of mine;

If by me broke. What foot is not so wise.

To lose an oath to win a paradise?

Biron. [Aside.] This is the liver vein, which makes flesh a deity:—

A green goose, a goddess: pure, pure idolatry. [way.

God amend us, God amend! we are much out o' the Enter Dumiain, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company! stay. [Stepping aside.

Biron. [Aside.] All bid, all bid, an old infant play;

Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky,

And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

More sack's to the mill! O heavens I have my wish; Dumiain transform'd: four wood-cocks in a dish! Duni. O most divine Kate! Biron. O most prophane cockcomb! [Aside. Dumiain. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye! Biron. By earth she is but corporal: there you lie. [Aside. Dumiain. Her amber hairs for foul have amber coted. Biron. An amber-coloured raven was well noted. [Aside. Dumiain. As upright as the cedar.

Biron. Stoop, I say; Her shoulder is with child.

[Aside.

Biron. Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine. [Aside. Dumi. O that I had my wish! Long. And I had mine! [Aside. Biron. And I mine too, good lord! [Aside. Biron. Amen, so I had mine: Is not that a good thing? [Aside. Dumiain. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be. Biron. A fever in your blood, why, then incision
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Would let her out in saucers; sweet misprision!

[Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.
Biron. Once more I'll mark how love can vary

[Dum. On a day, (aock the day!)

Love, whose mouth is ever May,
Spied a blossom, passing fair,
Playing in the wat'rous air:
Through the veiled leaves the wind,
All unseen, you passage find;
That the bough to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But alack, my hand is worn,
Nè'er to pluck thee from thy thor'n:
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet;
Youth so op't to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am averse for thee:
Thou for whom even Jove would swear,
Juno but an Ethiopian;
And deny myself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

This will I send; and something else more plain,
That shall express my true and tender pain.
O, would the King, Biron, and Longaville,
Were lovers too! ill, to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'od note;
For now offend, where all alike do dote.
Long, Dumain, [advancing:] thy love is far from
That in love's grief desir'd society.
Charity, you may look pale, but 1 should blush, I know,
To be o'erlooked, and taken plying so.
King. Come, sir, [advancing:] you blush; as his your case is such;
You chide at him, offending twice as much:
You do not love Maria; Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile;
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush,
And mark'd you both, and for you both I did blush.
I heard your guilty rhymes, observ'd your fashion;
Saw sighs rek'n from you, noted well your passion:
Ah me! says one; O Jove! the other cries;
One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:
You would for paradise break faith and truth.

[To Long.
And Jove, for your love, would infringe an oath.

[To Dumain.

What will Biron say, when that he shall hear
A faith infringing'd, such a zeal did swear;
How will he scorn? how will he spend his wit?
How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it?
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him keep so much by me.
Biron. Now step I forth to whip hypocrisy.
Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me:
[Descends from the tree.

Good heart, what grace hast thou, thus to reprove
These worms for loving, that art most in love!
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears,
There is no certain princess that appears:
You'll not be perjur'd, 'tis a hateful thing;
Tush, none but minstrels like of sonneting.
But are not you ashamed? I say, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot?
You found his mot; the king your mot did see;
But I a beam do find in each of thee,
Of sights, of groans, of sorrow, and of ten!
O me, with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformed to a goat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gigot.

And profound Solomon to tune a jigg,
And Nester play at push-pin with the boys,
And critie Timon laugh at idle toys!
Where lies thy grief, O tell me, good Dumain?
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my hege's! all about the beast:
A candle, ho! Too bitter is thy jest.
Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?

Biron. Not you by me, but I betray'd to you:
I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in;
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With moon-like men, of strange inconstancy,
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for Joan? or spend a minute's time,
In prining me? When shall you hear that I
Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb!—

King. Soft; Whither away so fast?
A true man, or a thief, that gally's so?
Biron. I post from love; good lover, let me go.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

Jaq. God bless the king!
King. What present hast thou there?
Cost. Some certain treason.
King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.
King. If it mar nothing neither
The treason, and you, go in peace away together.
Jaq. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read;
Our parson misdoubts it; twas treason, he said.
King. Biron, read it over. [Giving him the letter.

Where hadst thou it?
Jaq. From a fellow.
King. Where hadst thou it?
Cost. Of Dan Adramadio, Dan Adramatio. [it?
King. How now! what is in you? why dost thou fear Biron. A toy, my liege, a toy; your grace needs not fear it. [let's hear it.
Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore Dum. It is Biron's writing, and he, as you see, [Pick up the pieces.
Biron. Ah, you whoreson loghead, [to Costard you were born to do me shame.

Guilty, my lord, guilty; I confess, I confess.
King. What? [up the mess;
Biron. That you three fools lack'd me fool to make me, he, and you, my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.
O, dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.
Dum. Now the number is even.
Biron. True, true; we are four.
Will these turtles be gone?
King. Hence, sirs; away.
Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors
[Excuse Cost. and Jaquenett.
Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O let us embrace!
As true we are, as flesh and blood can be:
The sea will ebb and flow, heaven shew his face;
Young blood will not obey an old decree;
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore, of all hands must we be forsworn.
King. What! did these rest lines move some love of thine?—Evelyn Rosaline,
Biron. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the hea-
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Biron Where lies thy grief, O tell me, good Dumain?

Act IV Sc. 2
ACT IV.—SCENE III.

That, like a rude and savage man of Isla,
At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
Bows not his vassal head; and, strucken blind,
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?
What peremptory eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty?
King. What real, what fury, hath inspired thee now?
My love, her mistress, is a gracious moon;
She, an attending star, scarce seen alight.
Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron:
O, but for my love, day would turn to night!
Of all complexities the cul'd'sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek;
Where several worthies make one dignity;
Where nothing wants, that want itself doth seek.
Lead me the flourish of all gentle tongues,— Fye, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not:
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs;
She passes praise; then praise too short doth blot.
A wither'd hermit, five score winters worn,
A bishop's nun, and a monk's Laos brother eye:
Beauty doth varnish age, as if new-born.
And gives the erudite the child's infancy.
O, 'tis the sun, that maketh all things shine!
King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.
Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood would felnecity.
O, she would give us the answer to her book?
That I may swear, beauty doth beauty lack;
If that she learn not of her eye to look:
No face is fair, that is not full of black.
King. O paradox! Black is the badge of hell,
The hue of dangerous, and the scowl of night;
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.
Biron. Devils most meanly that would resemble spirits of.
O, if in black my lady's brows he deck,
[Light.] It morns, that painting, and usurping hair,
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of the days;
For native blood is counted painting now;
And therefore red, that would aver the praise,
Paints itself black, to imitate her beauty.
Dum. To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black.
Long. And, since her time, are colliers counted bright.
[Crack.
King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion
Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.
Biron. Devils most meanly that would resemble spirits of.
For fear their colours should be wash'd away.
King. Were good, yours did; for, sir, to tell you
I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day. [plain,
Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till dooms-day here.
King. No devil will fright thee then so much as she,
Dum. I never knew man bold vile stuff so dear.
Long. Lock, here's thy love; my foot and her face sex.
[Shewing his shoe.
Biron. O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread!
Dum. O vile! then as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see as she walk'd over head.
King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?
Biron. O, nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.
King. Then leave this chat; and, good Biron, now
Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn. [prove
Dum. Ay, marry, there;—some flattery for this evil.
Long. O, some authority how to proceed;
Some tricks, some quilletts, how to cheat the devil.
Dum. Some salve for perjury.
Biron. O, 'tis more than need—
Have at you then, affiction's men at arms;
[Consider, what you first did swear unto;—
To fast,—to study,—and to see no woman;—
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.
Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young;
And abstinence engenders maladies.
And where that you have vowed to study, lords,
In that each of you hath forsworn his book:
Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look?
For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,
Have found the ground of study's excellence,
Without the beauty of a woman's face?
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They are the ground, the books, the academies,
Whence doth spring the true Prometheus fire
Why, universal) pledging prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion, and long-during action, tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller.
Now, for not looking on a woman's face,
You have in that forsworn the use of eyes;
And study too, the earer of your vow:
For who is any other eye when the world?
Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?
Learning is but an adjunct to ourself;
And where we are, our learning likewise is.
Then, when ourselves we see in ladies eyes,
Do we not likewise see our learning there?
O, we have made a vow to study, lords;
And in that vow we have forsworn our books;
For when would you, my liege, or ye, or you,
In leaden contemplation, have found out
Such fiery numbers, as the prompting eyes
Of beauteous tutors have enrich'd you with?
Other slow arts entirely keep the brain;
And therefore finding barren practisers,
Shew a harvest of their labour poor;
But love, first learned in a lady's eyes,
Lives not alone immured in the brain;
But with the motion of all elements,
Courses as swift as thought in every power,
And gives to every power a double power,
Above their functions and their offices.
It adds a precious blessing to the eye;
A lover's eye will gaze an eagle blind;
A lover's ear will hear the lowest sound,
When the suspicious head of theft is stopp'd;
Love's feeling is more soft, and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cocked snails;
Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste:
For valor, who was ever valiant for himself?
Still climbing trees in the Hesperides?
Subtle as sphinx; as sweet, and musical,
As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair;
And, when love speaks, the voice of all the gods
Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony.
Never darst poet touch a pen to write,
'Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs.
O, then his lines would ravish savage ears,
And plant in tyrants mild humility.
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They sparkle still the right Prometheus fire;
They are the books, the arts, the academies,
That shew, contain, and nourish all the world;
Else, none at all in ought proves excellent:
Then fools you were these women to enforce;
Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.
For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love;
Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men;
Or for men's sake, the authors of these women;
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men;
Let us our eyes to see and find out:
Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths.

M 2
LOVE’S LABOUR’S LOST.

It is religion to be thus forsworn:
For charity itself fulfils the law,
And they that can no more from charity?

King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!

Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them,

Pells-mell, down with them! but be first advis’d,

Long. To own plain dealing; lay these glories by;
Shall you assist to work these girls of France?

King. And win them too: therefore let us devise

Some entertainment for them in their tents. [ther;

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thi-
Then, homeward, every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress: in the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shape;
For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours,
Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted,

That will be time, and may but be fitted.

Biron. Alons! Alons!—Saw’d cockle reap’d no corn;

And justice always whirs in equal measure:
Light wenches may prove plagues to men forsworn;

If so, our copper buyes no better treasure. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quid sufficat.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir: your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without servility, witty without affectation, audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this guanoud day with a companion of the king’s, who is intimated, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Non hominum tantum te: His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue fired, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and brachial. He is too nicely too, so proue, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epithet.

[Take out his table book.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such fanatical fantasies, such insociable and point-devise companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak, dunt, fine, when he should say, don’t; det, when he should, pronounce doubt; d. e. b. t; not

t. e. t.; he cephal a calf, can’t; half, hauf; neighbour, vecot, nebour, neigh, abbrevitated, ne: This is abominable, (which he would call abominable,) it insinuates me of insanee; Na intelligis domine? to make frantic, lunatic.

Nath. Luns Deo bone intelligo.

Hol. Bone?—Bone for bone: Priscian a little scratch’d; I will serve.

Enter Armado, Moth, and Costard.

Nath. Videste quis visuit?

Hol. Vides, et guiones.

Arm. Chirn!

[To Moth.

Hol. Quare chirna, not sirrah?

Arm. Men of peace, well encounter’d.

Hol. Most military sir, salutation.

Moth. They have been at a great deal of languages, and stolen the scraps. [To Costard aside.

Cost. O they have lived long in the alms-basket of words! I marvel, thy master hath not eaten thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorum liber tantidem: thou art easier swallowed than a flap-dragon.

Moth. Peace; the peal begins.

Hol. Mousiere, [to Hol.] are you not letter’d?

Moth. Yes, yes; he teaches boys the horn-book:—

What is a b, spelt backward with a horn on his head?

Hol. Eat, puertia, with a horn added.

Moth. He is but a silly sheep, with a horn:—You hear his learning.

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant?

Moth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i, —

Moth. The sheep: the other two concludes it: ; u, u.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick venew of wit; snip, snap,

quick and home; it rejoiceth my intellect: true wit.

Moth. Offer’d by a child to an old man; which is wit-old.

Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?

Moth. Horns.

Hol. Thou disputest like a infant: go, whip thy gig.

Moth. Lend me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infancy circum circa; A gig of a cuckold’s horn.

Cost. As I had but one penny in the world thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is half-penny purse of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion.

O, an the heavens were so pleased, that thou hadst art such a friend! what a joyful father wouldst thou make me! Go to; thou hast it ad dughill, at the fingers’ ends, as they say.

Hol. O, I smell false Latin; dughill for unguem.

Arm. Arts-man, praebambula; we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or, most, the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain?

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king’s most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pavilion, in the posterior of this day; which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruous and advisable for the afternoon:

the word is well call’d, chose; sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman; and my familiar, I do assure you, very good friend. —For what is inward between us, let it pass: —I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy; —I beseech thee, ap-pal thy head; —and amongst other impomtante and most serious bargain, —and of great import indeed, too; —but let that pass: —for I must tell thee, it will please his grace, (by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder; and with his royal finger, thus dally with my excrement, with my mustachio:
bout, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable; some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world: but let that pass.

—The very all of all is, but, sweet heart, I do improve secrecy,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antic, or fire-work.

Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self, are good at such eruptions, and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.
ACT V.—SCENE II.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine worthies.—Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistance,—the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrious, and learned gentleman,—before the princess; I say, none so fit as to present the nine worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?

Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself, or this gallant gentleman, Judas Macabæus; this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass Pompey the great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Darnel, sir, error; he is not quantity enough for that worthy's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology for that purpose.

Arm. What excellent device! so, if any of the audience hiss, you may cry: well done, Hercules! now thou crum'st the snake! that is the way to make an audience gracious; though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the worthies—

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman! An I shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this fadge not, an antic. I beseech you, follow.

Hol. Yea, Goodman Dull! thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Hol. Alas, we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the tabour to the worthies, and let them dance the hay.

Hol. Most dull, honest Dull, to our sport, away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the same. Before the Princess's Pavilion.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Rosal. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart.

If fairings come thus plentifully in:

A lady wall'd about with diamonds

Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Prince. Nothing, but this lyes, as much love in rhyme,

As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper,

Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all;

That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.

Ros. That was the way to make his god-head wax;

For he hath been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Ros. You'll ne'er be friends with him; he kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;

And so she died: had she been light like you,

Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit,

She might have been a grandam ere she died;

And so may you; for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll bear the light, by taking it in snuffs.

Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.

Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still i' the dark.

Kath. So do not you; for you are a light wench.

Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you; and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not,—O, that you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for, Past cure is still past care.

Prince. Well banded both; a set of wit well play'd.

But Rosaline, you have a favour too:

Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would, you knew?

An if my face were but as fair as yours,

My favour were as great; be witness this.

Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron:

The numbers true; and, were the number ring too,

I were the fairest goddess on the ground:

I am compar'd to twenty thousand fairies.

O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter.

Prince. Any thing like?

Ros. Much, in the letters; nothing in the praise.

Prince. Beauteous as ink; a good conclusion.

Ros. Dost think it so? thou dost not think it so. I have a lasting love to me:

Some thousand verses of a faithful lover;

A huge translation of hypocrisy,

Vilely compil'd, profound simplicity.

Mar. This, and these pearls, to me sent Longaville;

The letter is too long by half a mile.

Prince. I think no less: Dost thou not wish in heart,

The discourses or the letter short?

Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.

Prince. We are wise girls, to mock our lovers so.

Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.

That same Biron! I'll torture ere I go.

O, that I knew he were but in by the week!

How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seek;

And wait the season, and observe the times,

And make him say his prodigal acts in heartless rhymes:

And shape his service wholly to my behests;

And make him proud to make me proud that jests!

So potent-like would I o'erways his state,

That he should be my fool, and I his fate.

Prince. None are so surely caught, when they are exact

As wit that's fool'd: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,

Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school;

Andwit's own grace to grace a learned fool.

Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such excess,

As gravity's revolt to wantoness.

Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note,

As folly in the wise, when wit doth dote.

Since all the power thereof it doth apply,

To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prince. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Arm. Wenchens, arm! arm! encounters mounted are Against your peace: Love doth approach disguis'd,

Armed in arguments; you'll be surpris'd:

Muster your wits; stand in your own defence;

Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.

Prince. Saint Dennis to Saint Cupid! What are they,

That charge their breath against us? say, scout, say.

Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore,
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour:
When lo! to interrupt my purport'd rest,
Toward that shade I might behold address
The king and his companions: variably
I stole into a neighbour thicket by,
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That, by and by, disguis'd they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart, hath con'd his embauscage:
Action and accent, did they teach them there;
Thus must thou speak, and thus thy body bear:
And ever and anon they made a doubt,
Presence majestical would put him out;
For, quoth the king, An angel shalt thou see;
Yet fear not this, but speak audaciously.
The buy reply'd, An angel is not evil;
I should have fear'd her, had she been a devil.
With that all laugh'd, and clapp'd him on the shoulder;
Making the bold way by their praises bolder.
One rubb'd his elbow, thus; and fierc'd, and swore,
A better speech was never spoken before:
Another with his finger and his thumb,
Cry'd, Via! we will do't, come what will come:
The third he caper'd and cried, as it goes well;
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
That in this spleen ridiculous appears,
To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.

Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?

Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparell'd thus,— Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess,
Their purpose is, to parole, to court, and dance;
And every one his love-feat will advance
Unto his several mistress; which they'll know
By favours several, which they did bestow.

Prin. And will they so? the gallants shall be task'd:—
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd;
And not a man of them shall have the grace,
Design of suit, to see a lady's face.—
Hold, Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear;
And then the king will court thee for his dear;
Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine;
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.—

Rose. And change your favours too:—so shall your loves
Woo contrary, deceive'd by these your guesses.
Rose. Come on the scene: wear the favours most in sight.
Kath. But, in this changing, what is your intent?

Prin. The effect of my intent is, to cross theirs:
They do it but in mocking merriment;
And mock for mock is only my intent.
Their several counsels they unbossom shall
To loves mistook; and so be mock'd withal,
Upon the next occasion that we meet,
With visages display'd to talk and greet.
Rose. But shall we dance, if they desire us to't?

Prin. No; to the death, we will not move a foot:
Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace:
But, while 'tis spoke, each turn away her face.

Boyet. Why, that contemn will kill the speaker's heart.
And quite divorce his memory from his part.

Prin. Therefore I do it; and, I make no doubt,
The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport, as sport by sport o'erthrown;
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own:
So shall we stay, mocking intended game;
And they, well mock'd, depart away with shame.

Boyet. The trumpet sounds; be mask'd, the maskers come.

Enter the King, Biron, Longavile, and Dumain, in Russian habits, and masked; Moth, Musicians,
and Attendants.

Moth. All hail the richest beauties on the earth!
Boyet. Beauties no richer than rich taffata.

Moth. A holy parcel of the fairest dams,
That ever turn'd their backs to him.

Biron. Their eyes, villain, their eyes.

Moth. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortal views!

Out—

Boyet. True; out, indeed.

Moth. Out of your favours, heavenly spirits, vouchsafe
Not to behold—

Biron. Once to behold, rogue.

Moth. Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes—

Boyet. They will not answer to that ephephet,
You were best call it, daughter-beamed eyes.
Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.
Biron. Is this your perfectness? be gone, you rogue.

Ros. What would these strangers I know their purpose?

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will
That some plain man recount their purposes
Know what they would.

Boyet. What would you with the princess?
Biron. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. What would they, say they?

Boyet. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.
Boyet. She says, you have it, and you may be gone.

King. Say to her, we have measure'd many miles,
To tread a measure with her on this grass.
Boyet. They say that they have measure'd many a
To tread a measure with you on this grass. [mike.
Ros. It is not so: ask them, how many inches
Is in one mile: if they have measure'd many,
The measure then of one is easily told.

Boyet. If, to come hither you have measure'd miles,
And many miles; the princess bids you tell,
How many inches doe fill up one mile.

Biron. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.
Boyet. She hears herself.

Ros. How many weary steps,
Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,
Are number'd in the travel of one mile?

Biron. We number nothing that we spend for you;
Our duty is so rich, so infinite,
That we may do it still without acc ramp.
Vouchsafe to shew the sunshine of your face,
That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

King. Blessed are clouds, to do as such clouds do!
Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine.
(Those clouds remov'd,) upon our watery eyene.

Ros. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter;
Thou now request'st but moonshine in the water.

King. Then, to our measure do but vouchsafe one change:
Thou bid'st me beg; this begging is not strange.

Ros. Play, music, then: say, you must do it soon.

[Musick plays.

Not yet,—no dance:—thus change I like the moon.

King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estrang'd?

Chang'd. Ros. You took the moon at full: but now she's King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

Music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

King. But your legs should do it.
Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance,
We'll not be nice: take hands;—we will not dance.
King. Why take we hands then?
Ros. Only to part friends:—
Court'ly, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.
King. More measure of this measure; be not nice.
Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.
King. Prize you yourselves; What buys your com-
Ros. Yee our absence only.
King. That can never be.
Ros. Then cannot we be bought: and so adieu;
Twice to your visor, and half once to you!
King. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.
Ros. In private then.
King. I am best pleas'd with that.
[They converse apart.
Biron. White-handied mistress, one sweet word with thee.
Prin. Honey, and milk, and sugar; there is three.
Biron. Nay then, two treys, (an if you grow so nice.)
Metheglin, wort, and malmsay;—Well run, dice!–
There is half a dozen sweet.
Prin. Seventh sweet, adieu! Since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.
Biron. One word in secret.
Prin. Let it not be sweet.
Biron. Thou griev'st my gall.
Prin. Gall! bitter.
Biron. Therefore meet.
[They converse apart.
Dum. Will you voues safe with me to change a
Mar. Name it.
[Word?
Dum. Fair lady,—
Mar. Say you so? Fair lord,—
Take that for your fair lady.
Dum. As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.
[They converse apart.
Kath. What was your visor made without a tongue?
Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.
Kath. O, for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.
Long. You have a double tongue within your mask,
And would afford my speechless visor half.
Kath. Yeal, quoth the Dutchman;—Is not veal a Long. A calf, fair lady? [call?
Kath. No, a fair lord call.
Long. Let's part the word.
Kath. No, I'll not be your half;
Take all, and wear it; it may prove an ox.
Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp
Will you give horns, chaste lady? I do not so. [mocks
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.
Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.
Kath. Bleat softly then, the butcher hears you cry,
[They converse apart.
Boget. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen
As is the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen;
Above the sense of sense: so sensible
Seemeth their conference; their conceits have wings,
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.
[break off.
Ros. Not one word more, my maids; break off;
Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scoff.
King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple wits [Exit King, Lords, Music, & Attendants.
Prin. Twenty abusers, my frozen Muscovites.—
Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at?
Boget. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out.
Ros. Well-likeing wits they have; gross, gross; fat
Poor poverty in wit, kingly-poor hout! [fat
Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night?
Or ever, but in visors, show their faces?
This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.
Ros. O! they were all in lamentable cases!
The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.
Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.
Mar. Duman was at my service, and his sword:
No point, quoth I; my servant straight was more.
Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;
And trow you, what he call'd me?
Prin. Qualm, perhaps, in good faith.
Prin. Go, sickness as thou art.
Ros. Well, betterwits have worn plain statutes.
But will you hear! the king is my love sworn.
Prin. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.
Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.
Mar. Duman is mine, as sure as bark on tree.
Boget. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear:
Immediately they will again be here
In their own shapes. I can never be
They will digest this harsh indignity.
Prin. Will they return?
Boget. They will, they will, God knows,
And leap for joy, though they are lane with blows:
Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair,
Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.
—stood.
Prin. How blow? how blow? speak to be under-
Boget. Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in their bud;
Dismak'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn,
Are augels vailing clouds, or roses blown.
Prin. Avant, perplexity! What shall we do,
If they return in their own shapes to woo?
Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advis'd,
Let's mock them still, as well known, as disguis'd;
Let us complain to them what foods were hore,
Disguis'd like Muscovites, in shapeless gear;
And wonder what they were; and to what end
Their shallow shows, and prolonge vilely penn'd,
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should be presented at our tent to us.
Boget. Ladies, withdraw these; the galants are at hand.
Prin. Whip to our tents, as rays run over land.
[Exit Princess, Ros, Kath, and Maria.
Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Duman,
in their proper habits.
King. Fair sir, God save you! Where is the princess?
Boget. Gone to her tent: Please it your majesty,
Command me any service to her thither?
King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.
Boget. I will; and so will she, I know my lord.
[Exit.
Biron. This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peas;
And utter it again when God doth please:
He is wit's pellar; and retails his wares
At wakes, and vassels, meetings, markets, fairs;
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with such show.
This gallant puts the wenches on his sleeve;
Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve:
He can carve too, and lisp: Why, this is he,
That kiss'd away his hand in courteous:
This is the ape of form, monsieur the nice,
That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honourable terms; nay, he can sing
A mean most meanly; and, lo ushering,
Mend him who can: the ladies call him, sweet;
The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet:
This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To shew his teeth as white as whales' bone:
And conscience, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.

King. A blaster on his sweet tongue, with my heart,
That put Armado's page out of his part!

Enter the Princess, ushered by Boyet; Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, and Attendants.

Biron. See where it comes!—Behaviour, what wert thou,
Till this man shew'd thee? and what art thou now?
King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!
Biron. For, in all hail, as I conceive.

King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.

Biron. Then wish me better, I will give you leave.
King. We came to visit you; and purpose now
To lead you to our court; vouchsafe it then.

Biron. This field shall hold me; and so hold your

Nor God, nor I, delight in perjur'd men. [vow:
King. Repute me not for that which you provoke:
The virtue of your eye must break my oath.
Biron. You nick-name virtue: vice you should have spoken;
For virtue's office never breaks men's truth.

Now, by my maiden honour, yet as pure
As the asuullied lily, I protest,
A world of torments though I should endure,
That God would not yield to be your house guest:
So much I hate a breaking cause to be
Of heavenly oaths, vow'd with integrity.

King. O, you live liv'd in desolation here,
Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame.

Biron. Not so, my lord, it is not so, I swear;
We have had pastimes here, and pleasant game;
A mess of Russians left us but of late.

Biron. Ay, in truth, my lord;
Trim gallants, full of courtship, and of state.

Ros. Madam, speak true:—It is not so, my lord;
My lady (to the manner of the days,) in courtesy, gives undeserving praise.
We four, indeed, confronted here with four
To Russian habit; her, and I, staid an hour
And talk'd pace; and in that hour, my lord,
They did not bless us with one happy word.
I dare not call them fools; but this I think,

When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.

Biron. This jest is dry to me.—Fair, gentle sweet,
Your wit makes wise things foolish; when we greet
With eyes best seeing heaven's fiery eye,
By light we lose light: Your capacity
Is of that nature, that to your huge store
Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor.

Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my eye—
Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty.

Biron. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
Biron. I, I own yours, and all that I possess.

Ros. All the fool mine?
Biron. I cannot give you less.

Ros. Which of the visors was it, that you wore?
Biron. Where? when? what visor? why demand you this?

Ros. There, then, that visor; that superfluous case,
That hid the worse of her, she shoul'd the better face.

King. We are deseri'd: they'll mock us now down-
Dun. Let us confess, and turn it to a jest. [right.

Pri. Amaz'd, my lord, why looks your highness sad?
Ros. Help, hold his brows! he'll swoon! Why look you pale?—

Sea-seek, I think, coming from Muscovy.

Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for per-
Can any face of brass hold longer out? [jury.
Here stand I, lady; dart thy skill at me;
Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a flout;
Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit,
And I will wish thee never more to dance,
Nor never more in Russian habit wait.
O! never will I trust to speeches pen'd,
Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue;
Nor never come in visor to my friend;
Nor woo in rhyme, as a blind harper's song:
Taffata parrot, silken, precise, clear,
That pil'd hyperboles, spruce affection,
Figures pedantical; these summer-sites
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them: and I here protest,
By this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows!)—

Henceforth my working mind shall be express'd
In recent years, and honest kersey noes:
And, to begin, wench,—so God help me, la!—
My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.

Ros. Sans sana, I pray you.
Biron. Yet I have a trick
Of the old rage:—bear with me, I am sick;
I'll leave it by degrees. Soft, let us see:—
Write, Lord's, and Alas, never on the three;
They are infected, in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes;
These lords are visited; you are not free,
For the Lord's tokens on you do I see. [us.

Prin. No, they are free, that gave these tokens to Biron. Our states are forfeit, seek not to undo us.
Ros. It is not so; For how can this be true,
That you are, and forfeit, being those that sue?
Biron. Peace; for I will not have to do with you.
Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak for yourselves, my wit is at an end.

King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude trans-
Some fair excuse. [gression.

Prin. The fairest is confession.

Ros. Were you not here, but even now, disguis'd?
Biron. Madam, I was.

Pri. And were you well advis'd?
King. I was, fair madam.

Prin. When you then were here
What did you whisper in your lady's ear? [her.
King. That more than all the world I did respect

Prin. When she shall challenge this, you will King. Upon mine honour, no; [reject her,
Prin. Peace, peace, forbear;
Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.

King. Despise me, when I break this oath of mine.

Prin. I will: and therefore keep it.—Rosaline,
What did the Russian whisper in your ear?
Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear
As precious eye-sight: and did value me
Above the world: but take theroeto, moreover,
That he would wed me, or else die my lover.

Prin. God give thee joy of him the noble lord
Most honourably doth uphold his word. [troth,
King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my
I never swore this lady such an oath.

Ros. By heaven you did; and to confirm it plain,
You gave me this: but take it, sir, again.
King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give;
I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.

Prin. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear;

And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear:—
What; will you have me, or your pearl again?

Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twin.—
ACT V.—SCENE II.

I see the trick on’t;—Here was a consent, (Knowing beforehand of our erriment.)
To dash it like a Christmas comedy:
Some carry-tale, some please man, some slight zany,
Someumble news, some treacher-knight, some Dick,—
That smiles his cheek in years; and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh, when she’s disposed—
Told our intents before: which once disclosed,
The ladies did change faces; and then we,
Following the signs, would but the sign of she.
Now, to our perjury to add more terror,
We are again forsworn: in will, and error.
Much upon this it is: And might not you, [To BOYET.
Forestal our sport, to make us thus untrue!
Do not you know my lady’s foot by the squire,
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her back, sir, and the fire,
Holding a treacher, jesting merrily?
You put our page out: Go, you are allowed;—
Die when you will, a smack shall be your shroud.
You leer upon me, do you? there’s an eye,
Wounds like a leaden sword.
Biron. Full merrily
I hath this brave manage, this career, been run.
Biron. Lo, he is tilting straight! Peace; I have done.

Enter Costard.
Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know,
Whether the three worthies shall come in, or no.
Biron. What, are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is varie fine,
For every one pursents three.
Biron. And three times thrice is nine. [is not so:
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope it.
You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know:
I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,—
Biron. Is not nine.
Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereuntil it doth amount.
Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.
Cost. O Lord, sir, if were pity you should get your living by reckoning.
Biron. How much is it?
Cost. O Lord, sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will shew whereuntil it doth amount:
for my own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect one man,—e’en one poor man; Pompion the great, sir.
Biron. Art thou one of the worthies?
Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompiion the great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the worthy; but I am to stand for him.
Biron. Go, bid then prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care. [Exit Costard.
King. Biron, they will shame us, let them not approach, sir. [Some palpery
Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord: and ’tis
To have one show worse than the king’s and his King. I say, they shall not come. [company.
Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o’er rule you now?
That sport best pleases, that doth least know how:
Where zeal strives to content, and the contents
Die in the zeal of them which it presents,
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth;
When great things labouring perish in their birth.
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armando.
Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.
[Armando converses with the King, and delivers
Him a paper.
Prin. Doth this man serve God?
Biron. Why ask you?
Prin. He speaks not like a man of God’s making.
Arm. That’s all one, my fair, sweet, honey-mo-urch: for, I protest, the school master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain: but we will put it, as they say, to fortuna della guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal complemt!
[Exit Armando.
King. Here is like to be a good presence of worthies: He presents Hector of Troy: the swain, Pompey the Great; the parish curate, Alexander;
Armando’s page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Machabaeus.
And if these four worthies in their first show thrive,
These four will change habits, and present the other five.
Biron. There is five in the first show.
King. You are deceiv’d, ’tis not so.
Biron. The pedant, the bragget, the hedge-priest the fool, and the boy:—
Abate a throw at novium; and the whole world again,
Cannot prick out five such, take each one in his vein,
King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.
[Seats brought for the King, Princess, &c.

Pageant of the Nine Worthies.

Enter Costard arm’d, for Pompey.
Cost. I Pompey am,—
Boyet. You lie, you are not he
Cost. I Pompey am, —
Boyet. With libbard’s head on knee.
Biron. Well said, old mocker; I must needs be friends with thee.
Cost. I Pompey am, Pompey sur nam’d the big.—
Dem. The great.
Cost. It is great, sir;—Pompey sur nam’d the great:
That oft in held, with targe and shield, did make my sio to sweat: [sion
And travelling along this coast, I here am come by
And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lust of France. [done.
If your Lordship would say, Thanks, Pompey, I had Prin. Great thanks, great Pompey.
Cost. ’Tis not so much worth; but, I hope, I was perfect: I made a little fault in, great.
Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best worthy.

Enter Nathaniel arm’d, for Alexander.
Nath. When in the world I liv’d, I was the world’s commander; —[ing might:
By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquerly’s scutcheon plain declares, that I am Alixander.
Boyet. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right. [smelling knight.
Biron. Your nose smells, no, in this, most tender-
Prin. The conqueror is dismay’d: Proceed, good
Alexander. [commander;
Nath. When in the world I liv’d, I was the world’s Boyet. Most true, ’tis right; you were so, Alixander.
Biron. Pompey the great,
Cost. Our parent, and Costard. [sander.
Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away Ali-
Cost. O, sir, [To Nath.] you have overthrown Alixander the conqueror! You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this: your liein, that holds his poll are sitting on a close stool, will be given to
A-jay: he will be the ninth worthy. A conqueror, and afraid to speak! run away for shame, Alidand. [Nay, nay! They can't shall please you; a fool-dy mild man; an honest man, look you, and so don't! He is a marvellous good neighbour, insooth; and a very good bowler: but, for Alidand, alas, you see, how 'tis:—a little o'erparted:—But there are worthes coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

Pri. Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter Holofemnes arm'd, for Judea; and Moth arm'd, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Holofemnes is prevented by this imp.

If houseclub killed Cerberus, that three-handed canus;
And, when he was a bole, a child, a shrew,
Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus:
Quonian, he seemeth in minority;
Ego, I come with this apology.—
Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish. [Exit Morn.

Hol. Judas, I am,—

Dum. A Judas!

Hol. Not hecquarit, sir.

Judas I am, yeilded Machabaeus.

Dum. Judas Machabaeus elipt, is plain Judas.

Biron. A kissing traitor:— How art thou prov'd

Hol. Judas, I am,—

Judas! [Judas!]

Hol. The more shame for you, Judas.

Hol. What mean you, sir?

Biron. To make Judas hang himself.

Hol. Begin, sir; you are my elder. [elder.

Biron. Well follow'd: Judas was hanged on an

Hol. I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron. Because thou hast no face.

Hol. What is this?

Biron. A clitter head.

Dum. The head of a bokein.

Biron. A death's face in a ring.

Hol. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.

Biron. The pommel of Caesar's fanlechion.

Dum. The carve'd face on a flask.

Biron. St. George's half check in a brooch.

Dum. Ay, and in a brooch of lead.

Biron. Ay, and worn in the cap of a tooth-drawer:

And now, forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol. You have put me out of countenance.

Biron. False: we have given thee faces.

Hol. But you have out-fac'd them all.

Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.

Biron. Therefore, as he is, an ass, let him go.

And so aside, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Biron. For the ass to the Jude:—give it him

Judas, away.

Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Biron. A light for monarch Judas: it grows dark,

He may stumble. [United!.

Pri. Alas, poor Machabaeus, how hath he been Enter Armano arm'd, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles; here comes

Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will

Arm. The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift:—

Dum. A better nutmeg.

Biron. A lemon.

Long. Stuck with cloves.

Dum. No, cloven.

Arm. Peace!

The armipotent Mars, of lances the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift, the heir of Ilium:

A man that breth'd, that certain he would fight, sea

From morrow till night, out of his pavilion.

I am that flower,—

That mint.

Long.

Arm. Sweet lord Longaville, rain thy tongue

Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

Arm. The swee: war-man is dead and rotten;

sweet cheeks, beat not the bones of the buried:

when he breath'd, he was a man:—But I will forward with my device: Sweet royalty, to the Princess, bestow on me the sense of hearing.

[Bynow whispers Costard.

Pri. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.

Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.

Biot. Loves her by the foot.

Dum. He may no' by the yard.

Arm. This Hector for summounted Hannibal,—

Cost. The party is gone, fellow Hector, she is gone; she is two months on her way.

Arm. What meanest thou?

Cost. And less you play the honest Trojan, the poor wench is cast away: she's quick; the child brags in her belly already; 'tis yours.

Arm. Doost thou inamoratize me among potenates? thou shalt die.

Cost. Then shall Hector be whipp'd, for Jaquenetta that is quick by him; and hang'd for Pompey that is dead by him.

Dum. Most rare Pompey!

Biron. Renowned Pompey!

Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the huge!

Dum. Hector trembles.

Biron. Pompey is mov'd:—More Ares, more

Ares; stir them on! stir them on!

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Biron. Ay, if he have no more man's blood in his belly than will sup a flea.

Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.

Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man; I'll slash; I'll do by the sword:—I pray you, let me borrow my arms again.

Dum. Room for the incense worthies.

Cost. I'll do it my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey!

Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower.

Do you not see, Pompey is uncasing for the combat? What mean you? you will lose your reputation.

Arm. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.

Dum. You may not deny it; Pompey hath made the challenge.

Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.

Biron. What reason have you for't?

Arm. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt;

I go woolward for penance.

Biot. True, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, he wore now, but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's; and that a wears next his heart, for a favour, Enter Mercadre.

Mer. God save you, madam!

Prin. Welcome, Mercadre;

But that thou interrupt'st our merriment.

Mer. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring,

Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—

Prin. Dead for my life.

Mer. Even so; my tale is told.

Biron. Worthies, away; the scene begins to cloud.

Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath;

I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exit Worthies.

King. How fares your majesty?

Prin. Boyet, prepare; I will away to-night.

King. Madam, not so, I do beseech you, stay.

Prin. Prepare, I say—I thank you, gracious lords,

For all your fair endeavours: and entreat,

Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe

In your rich wisdom, to excuse, or hide,

The liberal opposition of our spirits:

If ever-boldly we have borne ourselves

In the converse of breach, or vanity,

Was vanity of it—Farewell, worthy lord!

A heavy heart bears not an humble tongue:

Excuse me so, coming so short of thanks

For my great suit so easily obtained.

King. The extreme parts of time extremely form

All causes to the purpose of his speed;

And often, at his very base desiring you,

That which long process could not arbitrate:

And though the mourning brow of progeny

Forbid the smiling courtesy of love,

The holy suit which faint it would convince;

Yet, since love's argument was first on foot,

Let not the cloud of sorrow jostle it

From what it purposed: since to suit friends lost,

Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,

As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not; my griefs are double.

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of

And by these badges understand the king. [grief;—

For your fair sakes have we neglected time,

That fond play with our oaths; your beauty, ladies,

Is by their defects deform'd us.

Even to the opposed end of our intents;

And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—

As love is full of unbefitting strains;

All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain;

Form'd by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye

Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,

Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll

To every varied object in his glance:

Which party-coated presence of loose love

Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,

Have misbecon'd our oaths and gravities,

Those heavenly eyes, that look into these faults,

Suggested us to make: Therefore, ladies,

Our love being yours, the error that love makes

Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false,

By being once false for ever to be true

To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you:

And even that falsehood, in itself a sin,

Thus purifies itself, and turns to grace.

Prin. We have now read your letters, full of love;

Your favours, the embassadors of love;

And in our maiden council, rated them

At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,

As bombast, and as lining to the time:

But more devout than this, in our respects,

Have we not been; and therefore met your loves

In their own fashion, like a merriment.

Dum. Our letters, madam, shew'd much more than Long. So did our looks.

Jest.

Ros. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,

Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time, methinks, too short

To make a world without end bargain in:

No, no, my lord, your grace is perjur'd much,

Full of dear guiltiness; and, therefore this,—

If for my love (as there is no such cause)

You will do aught, this shall you do for me:

Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,

Remote from all the pleasures of the world;

There stay, until the twelve casual signs

Have brought about their annual reckoning:

If this austere insensible life

Change not your offer made in heat of blood;

If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging, and thin weeds,

Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love,

But that it bear this trial, and last love;

Then, at the expiration of the year.

Come, and challenge me in these deserts.

And, by this virgin palm, now kissing thine,

I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut

My woeful self up in a mourning house;

Raining the tears of lamentation,

For the remembrance of my father's death.

If this thou do deny, let our hands part;

Neither entitling in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,

To fatter up these powers of mine with rest,

The sudden hand of death close up mine eye!

Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

Biron. And what to me, my love? and what to me?

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank;

You are attaint with faults and perjury;

Therefore, if you my favour mean to get,

A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,

But seek the weary beds of people sick.

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

Kath. A wife!—A heard, fair health, and honesty;

With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. I thank you, I thank you, most noble wife!

Kath. Not so, my lord;—a twelvemonth and a day

I'll mark no words that smooth-fac'd wooers say:

Come when the king doth to my lady come,

Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

Dum. I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be forsworn again.

Long. What says Maria?

Merc. At the twelvemonth's end

I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time is long

Merc. The liker you; fewer tallow are so young.

Biron. Studies my lady? mistress, look on me,

Delight the window of my heart, mine eye,

What humble suit attends thy answer there;

Impose some service on me for thy love.

Ros. Oft have I heard of you, my Lord Biron,

Before I saw you: and the world's large tongue

Proclaims you for a man repellet with mocks;

Full of comparisons and wondering fonts;

Which you on all estates will execute,

That I within the mercy of your wit:

To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain;

And, therewithal, to win me, if you please.

(Without the which I am not to be won;)

You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day

Visit the speechless sick, and still converse

With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible;
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Rou. Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fuels:
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Deaf'd with the clamours of their own dear groans,
Will hear your idle scorns, continue then,
And I will have you, and that fault withal;
But, if you do not, I will, in that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

Biron. A twelvemonth? well, befal what will bela,
I'll just a twelvemonth in an hospital.

Prin. Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.

To the King.

King. No, madam: we will bring you on your way.

Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.

King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day,
And then 'twill end.

Biron. That's too long for a play.

Enters Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—

Prin. Was not that Hector?

Arm. The worthy knight of Troy.

Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave:
I am a votary; I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled, in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed in the end of our show.

King. Call them forth quickly, we will do so.

Arm. Holla! approach.

Enters Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and others.

This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring; the one maintain'd by the owl, the other by the cuckoo.

Ver. begin.

SONG.

Spring. I. When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lily-smocks all silver-white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he,

Cuckoo;

Cuckoo, cuckoo.—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

II. When shepherds pipe on aaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughman's clocks,
When turtles tread, and vooks and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he,

Cuckoo;

Cuckoo, cuckoo.—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

Winter. III. When sires hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears legs into the half,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,

To-who;

Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV. When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drousens the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs kiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,

To-who;

Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You, that way; we, this way.

[Exeunt.

In this play, which all the editors have concurred to censure, and some have rejected as unworthy of our poet, it must be concluded that there are many passages mean, childish, and vulgar; and some which ought not to have been exhibited, as we are tells they were, to a maiden queen. But there are scattered through the whole many sparks of genius: nor is there any play that has a more evident mark of the hand of Shakespeare.—

JOHNSON.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall on the 2nd of July, 1596; but must have been exhibited before that time, as it was mentioned by Nabbes, in the First Folio, which was published early in the same year. The first known edition of this comedy is the quartino printed by J. K. for Thomas Heyes, 1597. It was most probably written in 1596. Mr. Malone places it three years earlier; but he has no authority to support his hypothesis, but a smile of Portia's—

"I thy music is
"As sweet as the flourish when true subjects how
"To a new crowned monarch."

This passage he supposes to refer to the recent coronation of Henry the Fourth of France, of which description was published in this country immediately after the event.

SCENE,—partly at Venice, and partly at Belmont, the Seat of Portia, on the Continent.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Antonio, Salarino, and Salano.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad; It wearies me; you say, it wearies you: But how I caught it, found it, or came by it, What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn; And such a want-wit sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean; There, where your argosies with portly sail,— Like ships and rich burghers of the flood, Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea,— Do overpeer the petty traffickers, That curt'sy to them, do them reverence, As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salar. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth, The better part of my afflictions would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind; Peering in maps, for ports, and piers, and roads; And over every object, that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind, cooling my broth,
Bass. I will not fail you.

Grat. You look not well, signior Antonio; you have too much respect upon the world: they lose it, that do buy it with much care. Believe me, you are marvellously chang’d. Ant. I hold the world but as the world; Gratiano; and a state, where every man must play a part, and mine a sad one.

Grat. Let me play the Fool: with mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come; and let my liver rather heat with wine, than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, sit as an altar in a dank and smoky house? Sleep when he wakes? and creep into the jaundice by being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,—I love thee, and it is my love that speaks;—there are a sort of men, whose visages do cream and maeste, like a standing pond; and do a willful stillness entertain, with purpose to be dress’d in an opinion of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit; as who should say, I am Sir Oracle, and, when I open my lips, let no dog bark! O, my Antonio, I do know of these, that therefore only are reputed wise, for saying nothing; who, I am very sure, if they should speak, would almost damn these ears, which, bearing them, would call their brothers, fools. I’ll tell thee more of this another time: but fish not, with this melancholy bait, for this fool’s gudgeon, this opinion.—Come, good Lorenzo: Fare ye well, a while; I’ll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner-time. I must be one of these same dumb wise men, for Gratiano never lets me speak.

Grat. Well, keep me company but two years more, then shall not know the sound of thine own tongue.

Ant. Farewell: I’ll grow a talker for this gear.

Grat. Thanks, i’ faith; for silence is only commendable.

In a neat’s tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

ant. Is that any thing now?

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice: his reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them; and, when you have them, they are not worth the search.

Ant. Well; tell me now, what lady is this same, to whom you swore a secret pilgrimage, that you to-day promised to tell me of?

Bass. Tis not unknown to you, Antonio, how much I have disabled mine estate, by something shewing a more swelling port than my faint means would grant continuance: nor do I now make mean to be abridg’d from such a noble rate; but my chief care is, to come fairly off from the grace of debts, wherein my time, something too prodigal, hath left me gaged: To you, Antonio, I owe the most, in money, and in love; and from your love I have a warranty to unburthen all my plots, and purposes, how to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassiano, let me know it; and, if it stand, as you yourself still do, within the eye of honour, be assur’d; my purse, my person, my extremest means, lie all unlook’d to your occasions, Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father:—Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous; and holy men, at their death, have good inspirations; therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests, of gold, silver, and lead, (whereof who chooses his meaning, chooses you,) will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly, but one who you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee, overname them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that's a colt, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great appropriation to his own good parts, that he can shoie himself: I am much afraid, my lady his mother placed false with a smith.

Ner. Then, is there the county Palatine.

Por. He doth nothing but frown; as who should say, And if you will not have me, choose: he hears merry tules, and smiles not: I fear, he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather see him caller to a death's head, than his month, than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, Monsieur Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a monarch as well as a man: he hath a horse and a better than the Neapolitan's; a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine: he is every man in no man: if a throat sing, he falls straight a capering: he will fence with his own shadow: if I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands: if he would despise me, I would forgive him: for if he love me to madness, I shall never require him.

Ner. What say you then to Faunecbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know, I say nothing to him; for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor pennyworth in this match of mine: But alas! who can converse with a dwarf show? How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour every where.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able: I think, the Frenchman became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober; and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast: and the worst fall that ever fell, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right one you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do any thing, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponde.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords; they have acquainted me with their determinations: which is, indeed, to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit; unless, you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will: I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dole on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the Marquis of Montefratt?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio; as I think, so was he.

Ner. True, madam; he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well; and I remember him worthy of thy praise.—How now! what news?

Enter a Servant.

Ser. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave: and there is a fore-maner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco; who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me. Come, Nerissa.—Sirrah, go before.—Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Venice. A public Place.

Enter BASSANO and SHYLOCK.

Shy. Three thousand ducats.—well.

Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months.—well. [be bound.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall Shy. Antonio shall become bound.—well.

Bass. May you succeed me? Will you have pleasure me? Shall I know your answer? [Antonio bound.

Shy. Three thousand ducats, for three months, and Shy. Your answer to that.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man. [stary?

Bass. Have you heard any imputation to the con Shy. He, no, no, no, no,—my meaning, in say Shy. I mean, pirates; and then, there is the peril of Shy. You have assured me.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Shy. I will be assured, I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me: May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.
Shy, Yes, to small pork; to eat of the habitation which your prophet, the Naratite, conjured the devil into; I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following: but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto?—Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Shy. [Aside.] How like a fawning publican he looks! I hate him, for he is a Christian: But more, for that, in low simplicity, he lends out money gratis, and brings down The rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails, Even there where merchants most do congregate, On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift, Which he calls interest: Cursed be my tribe, If I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store: And, by the near guess of my memory, I can count hardly in the gross Of full three thousand ducats: What of that? Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe, Will furnish me: but soft; How many months Do you desire?—Rest you fair, good signior:

[To Antonio.

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow, By taking, nor by giving of excess, Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend, I'll break a custom:—Is he yet possess'd, How much you would? Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot,—three months, you told me so. Well then, your bond; and, let me see,—but hear you: Methought, you said, you neither lend, nor borrow, Upon advantage.

Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep, This Jacob from our holy Abraham was (As his wise mother wrought in his behalf,) The third possessor; he was the bird. Ant. And what of him? did he take interest? Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would say, Directly interest: mark what Jacob did. When Laban and himself were compromis'd, That all the earnings which were streaked, and pied, Should fall, as Jacob's hire; the ewes, being rank, In the end of autumn turned to the rams: And when the work of generation was Between these woolly brooders in the act, The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands, And, in the doing of the deed of kind, He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes; Who, then conceiving, did in eaning time Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. This was a way to thrive, and he was blest; And thrift is blessing, if men steal it not.

Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd for; A thing not in his power to bring to pass, But sway'd, and fashion'd, by the hand of heaven. Was this inserted to make interest good? Or is your gold and silver, ewes and rams? Shy. I cannot tell; I make it breed as fast:— But note me, signior.

Ant. [aside.] Mark you this, Bassanio,
The devil can cite scripture for his purpose. An evil soul, producing holy witness, Is like a villain with the smiling cheek; A goodly apple rotten at the heart; O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

Shy. Three thousand ducats—'tis a good round sum Three months from twelve, then let me see the rate

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beheld to you? Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft, In the Rialto you have rated me About my monies, and my usances: Still have I borne it with a patient shrug; For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe: You call me—infidel, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish gaberline, And all for use of that which is mine own. Well then, it now appears, you need my help: Go to then; you come to me, and you say, Shylock, we would have monies; You say so; You, that did void your ducats upon my beard, And foot me, as you spur a stranger on Over your threshold; monies is your suit. What should I say to you? Should I not say, Hath a dog money? is it possible, A customer lend three thousand ducats? or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key, With bated breath, and whispering h umbleness, Say this,— Fair sir, you spuit on me on Wednesday last: You spurr'd me such a day: another time You call'd me—dog; and for these courtesies I'll lend you such monies, and such terms As I am like to call thee so again, To spit on thee again, to spur thee on. If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not As to thy friends: (for when did friendship take A breed for barren metal of his friend?) But lend it rather to thine enemy: Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face Exact the penalty. Shy. Why, look you, how you storm! I would be friends with you, and have your love, Forget the shame which you have staid me with, Supply your present wants, and take no doot Of usance for my monies, and you'll not hear me. This is kind I offer.

Ant. This were kindness.

Shy. This kindness will I shew:— Go with me to a notary, seal me there Your single bond; and, in a merry sport, If you repay me not on such a day, In such a place, such sum, as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit Be nominated for an equal pound Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, in faith; I'll seal to such a bond, And say, there is much kindness in the Jew. Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me, I'll rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it Within these two months, that's a month before This bond expires, I do expect return Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. O father Abraham, what these Christians are; Whose own hard dealings teach us suspect The thoughts of others! Pray you, tell me this; If he should break his day, what should I gain By the exaction of the forfeiture? A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man, Is not so estimable, profitable neither, As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. I say,
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. A Room in Portia’s House.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his Train; Portia, Nerissa, and other of her Attendants.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion, The shadow’d livery of the burnish’d sun, To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Bring me the fairest creature northward born, Where Phlebus’ fire scarce thaws the icicles, And let us make lucrative for your love, To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine. I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine Hast fear’d the valiant; by my love, I swear, The best-regarded virgins of our clime Have lov’d it too: I would not change this hue, Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen. Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led By nice direction of a maiden’s eyes: Besides, the lottery of my destiny Bars me the right of voluntary choosing: But, if my father had not scanted me, And hedg’d me by his wit, to yield myself His wife, who wins me by that means I told you, Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair, As any comer I have look’d on yet, For my affection. Mor. Even for that I thank you; Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets, To try my fortune. By this skirmish,— That slew the Sophy, and a Persian prince, That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,— I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look, Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth, Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear, Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey, To win thee, lady: But, alas the while! If Hercules and Lachas, play at dice Which is the better man, the greater throw May turn by fortune from the weaker hand: So is Alcides beaten by his page; And so may I, blind fortune leading me, Miss that which one unworthy may attain, And die with grieving.

Por. You must take your chance, And rather not attempt to win it all, Or swear before you choose,—if you choose wrong, Never to speak to lady afterward In way of marriage; therefore be advis’d. Mor. Nor will not; come, bring me my own chance. Por. First forward to the temple; after dinner Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then! [Corns. To make me bless’t, or curse’d among men. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Venice. A Street.

Enter LAUNCELOT GOBBO.

Lau. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master: The fiend is at mine elbow; and tempts me, saying to me, Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot, or good Gobbo, or good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away! My conscience says,—no; take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo; or as aforesaid, honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run: “Who runs with thy heels? Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack; via! says the fiend; away! says the fiend, for the heavens; rouse up a brave mind, says the fiend, and run. Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me,—“my honest friend, Launcelot, being an honest man’s son, or rather an honest woman’s son,—for, indeed, my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste;—well, my conscience says, Launcelot, budge not; budge, says the fiend; budge not, says my conscience: Conscience, say I, you counsel well; fiend, say I, you counsel well: to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who, (God bless the mark!) is a kind of devil: and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself: Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnate: and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience, to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew: The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your commandment, I will run.

Enter Old GONZO, with a basket.

Gob. Master, young man, you, I pray you; which is the way to master Jew’s?

Lau. [Aside.] O heavens, this is my true begotten father! who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not,—I will try conclusions with him.

Gob. Master young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew’s?

Lau. Turn up on your right hand, at the next turning, but, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew’s house.

Gob. By God’s sounes, ’twill be a hard way to it. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?

Lau. Talk you of young master Launcelot?—Mark me now; [aside] now will I raise the waters:—Talk yon of young master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man’s son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man, and, God be thanked, well to live.

Lau. Well, let his father be what he will, we talk of young master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship’s friend, and Launcelot, sir. Lau. But I pray you ergo, old man, ergo, I beseech you; Talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, an’t please your mastership. Lau. Ergo, master Launcelot: talk not of master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman (according to fates and destinies, and such odd sayings, the sisters three, and such branches of learning), is, indeed, deceased; or, as you would say, in plain terms, gone to heaven.

N
MERCHANT

Gob. Marry, God forbid! the boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Laun. Do I look like a cugel, or a hovel-post, a staff, or a prop? — Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day, I know you not, young gentleman; but, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, (God rest his soul!) alive or dead?

Laun. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind, I know you not.

Laun. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fall of the knowing me: it is a wise father, that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son: Give me your blessing: truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long a man's son may; but, in the end, truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up; I am sure, you are not Launcelot, my boy.

Laun. Pray you, let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing; I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think, you are not my son.

Laun. I know not what I shall think of that: but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man: and, I am sure, Margery, your wife, is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord worshipp'd might he be! what a heard hast thou got? thou hast got more hair than thy chin, than Dobbin my thill-horse has on his tail.

Laun. It should seem then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward; I am sure he had more hair on his tail, than I have on my face, when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord, how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present; How 'gree you now?

Laun. Sir, very well; but, for mine own part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground: my master's a very Jew; Give him a present! give him a halter: I am famish'd in his service; you may tell every finger I have with my ribs. Father, I am glad you are come; give me your present to one master Bassanio, who, indeed, gives rare new liveliness; if I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground. — O rare fortune! here comes the man; — to him, father; for I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter Bassanio, with Leonardo, and other Followers.

Bass. You may do so: — but let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock: See these letters deliver'd; put the liveries to making; and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exeunt Bassanio, Leonardo, and Followers.

Laun. To him, father.

Gob. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy; Would 'st thou aught with me?

Gob. Not, sir, a poor boy.

Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man; that would, sir, as my father shall specify.

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve.

Laun. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and I have a desire, as my father shall specify.

Gob. His master and he, (saving your worship's reverence,) are scarce eater-cousins.

Laun. To be brief, the very truth is, that the Jew having done me wrong, doth cause me, as my father, being I hope an old man, shall frutify onto you,—

Gob. I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is,—
ACT II.—SCENE V.

Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends
That purpose merriment: But fare you well, •
I have some business.
and I must to Lorenzo, and the rest;
But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Shylock's House.

Enter Jessica and Launcelot.

Jes. I am sorry, thou wilt leave my father so;
Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness:
But fare thee well: there is a ducat for thee.
And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see
Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest:
Give him this letter, do it secretly,
And so farewell: I would not have my father
See me talk with thee.

Laun. Adieu!—tears exhibit my tongue.—Most beautiful Pagans, most sweet Jew! If a Christian do not play the knave, and get thee, I am much deceived:
But, adieu! these foolish drops do somewhat drown my manly spirit; adieu! [Exit.

Jes. Farewell, good Launcelot.

Alack, what honourable sin is it in me,
To be ashamed to be my father's child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners: O Lorenzo,
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife:
Become a Christian, and thy loving wife. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Street. A Street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salario, and Salanio.

Lor. Nay, we will slink away in supper-time;
Disguise us at my lodging, and return
All in an hour.

Gra. We have not made good preparation.

Sali. We have not spoken as yet of torch-bearers.

Salan. Tis' vile, unless it may be quixtly order'd;
And better, in my mind, not undertook.

Lor. Tis now but four o'clock; we have two hours
To furnish us:—

Enter Launcelot, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Laun. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand;
And whiter than the paper it writ on.
Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith.

Lau. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whither guest thou?

Laun. Marry, sir, to bid my old master the Jew to sup to-night with my new master the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this:—tell gentle Jessica,
I will not fail her;—speak it privately: go.—

Gentlemen. [Exit Launcelot.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night?
I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salan.  Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Salan. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me, and Gratiano,
At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Sali. 'Tis good we do so. [Exeunt Sali. and Salan.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all: She hath directed,
How shall I take her from her father's house;
What gold, and jewels, she is furnished with;
What page's part she hath in readiness,

If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle daughter's sake:
And never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless she do it under this excuse.—
That she is issue to a faithless Jew.
Come, go with me; perseve this, as thou goest:
Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. Before Shylock's House.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio:
What, Jessica!—thou shalt not gormandize,
As thou hast done with me:—What, Jessica!—
And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out;
—Why, Jessica, I say!—

Laun. Why, Jessica!

Shy. Who bids thee call! I did not bid thee call.

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me, I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? What is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;—
There are my keys:—But wherefore should I go?
I am not bid for love; they flatter me:
But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon
The prodigal Christian.—Jessica, my girl,
Look to my house:—I am right loath to go;
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go on; my young master doth expect your approach.

Shy. So do I his.

Laun. And they have conspired together,—I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black Monday last, at six o'clock: the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday, was four year in the afternoon.

Schi. What? are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica,
Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum,
And the vile squeaking of the wry-neck'd sife,
Chamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head int he public street,
To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces.

But stop my house's ears. I mean my casements;
Let not the sound of shallow poppery enter
My sober house.—By Jacob's staff, I swear,
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night:
But I will go. —Go you before me, sirrah;
Say, I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir,—

Mistress, look out at window, for all this; [aside.
There will come a Christian by.

Will he be worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit Laun.

Shy. What says that fool of Hagar's offspring, ha?—

Jes. His words were, Farewell, mistress; nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kind enough; but a huge forder, Snaill-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat; drones hive not with me;
Therefore I part with him; and part with him
To one that I would have him help to waste
His box'd purse.—Well, Jessica, go in;—
Perhaps, I will return immediately;
Do, as I bid you.

Shut doors after you:— Fast bind, fast find;
A proverb never stale in thirsty mind. [Exit.

Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost,
I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.
SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masked.

Gra. This is the pent-house, under which Lorenzo
Desir'd us to make stand.

Sal. O, this his hour is almost past,
For lovers ever run before the clock.

Sal. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To real love's bonds new made, than they are wont,
To keep oblig'd faith unforfeited!

Gra. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast,
With that keen appetite that he sits down?
Where is the horse that doth unstead again
His tedious measures with the unbated fire
That he did pace them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd.
How like a younger, or a prodigal,
The scar'd bark puts from her native bay,
Hug'd and embraced by the strompet wind!
How like the prodigal cloth she returns;
With his rattle'd ribs, and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strompet wind!

Enter Lorenzo.

Gra. Here comes Lorenzo;—more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long
Not 1, but my affairs, have made you wait: [Aside.
When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,
I'll watch as long for you then. — Approach ;
Here dwells my father Jew:—Ho! who's within?

Enter Jessica, above, in boy's clothes.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty,
Allent I'll swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love;
Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and my love, indeed;
For who love I so much? and now who knows,
But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours? [Thou art.
Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts, are witness that
Jes. Here, catch this casket; it is worth the pains,
I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,
For I am much ashamed of my exchange;
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Capit' might well blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Jes. How, that? What must I do? I have a
Blind credit to pay to my shame's?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be observ'd.

Lor. So are you, sweet,
Even in the lovely garnish of a boy,
But come at once;
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stand for at Bassanio's feast.

Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight [Exit, from above.

Gra. Now, by my good, a Gentle, and no Jew.
Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily:
For she is wise, if I can judge of her;
And fair she is, if that same eyes be true;
And true she is, as she hath prov'd herself;
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, below.

What, art thou come?—On, gentleman, away;
Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

[Exit, with Jessica and Salario.
A coin, that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold; but that's inscribed upon; If here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within.—Deliver me the key:
Here do I choose, and thrive as I may!
Por. There, take it, prince, and if my form lieth, Then I am yours. [He116ee's the golden easket.
Mor. O hell! what have we here!
A carnion death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll! I'11 read the writing.

All that glitters is not gold,
Often have ye heard that told:
Many a man his life hath sold,
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tomb3 do worms inflold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscr0bl:
Fare you well; your suit is cold.
Cold; indeed; and labour lost:
Then, farewell, heat; and, adl, welcome, frost.—
Portia, adieu! I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: to the book parts.
[Exit.
Por. A gentle riddance;—Draw the curtains, go;—
Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exit.

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salario and Salanio.

Salar. Why man, I saw Bassanio under sail;
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship, I am sure, Lorenzo is not.
Sali. They villain few with outcries rait'd the duke;
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail;
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica;
Besides, Antonio certify'd the duke,
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Sali. I never heard a passion so courfus'd,
Strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As they did say did utter in the streets:
My daughter!—O my daucats!—O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian!—O my christian daucats!—
Justice! the law! my daucats and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags 3 daucats.
Of doubt daucats, stoll'n from me by my daughter.
And jewels; two stones, two rich and precious stones,
Stoll'n by my daughter! Justice! find the girl!
She hath the stones upon her, and the daucats!
Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,
Crying.—his stones, his daughter, and his daucats.
Sali. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.
Salar. Marry, well remember'd;
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday;
Who told me,—in the narro seas, that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught:
I thought upon Antonio, when he told me;
And wish'd in silence, that it were not his.
Sali. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear;
Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman treats not the earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part;
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return; he answered.—Do not so,
Shudder not business for my sake, Bassanio.
But stay the very riping of the time;

And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your mind, or let it
Be memory; and expunging your fairest thoughts
To courtesies, and such false outsets of love
As shall conversely become you there:
And even then, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him.
And with affectation wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted.
Sali. I think, he only loves the world for him.
I pray thee, let us go, and find him out,
And quicken his unbridled heaviness
With some delight or other.
Salar. Do we so. [Exit.

SCENE IX.—Belmont. —A Room in Portia's House

Enter Portia, with a Servant.

Por. Quick, quick, I pray thee, draw the curtain
The prince of Arragon hath tain'd his oath. Straightway,
And comes to his election presently.

Flourish of Cornets. Enter the prince of Arragon, Portia, and their Train.

Por. Behold, here stand the caskets, noble prince;
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd;
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.
Ar. I am enjoiy'd by oath to observe three things:
First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket was I chose; next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage; Lastly,
If I do fail in fortune of my choice,
Immediately to leave you and be gone.
Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear,
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.
Ar. And so have I address'd me: Fortune now
To my heart's hope!—Gold, silver, and base lead.
Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath;—
You shall look fairer, ere I give, or hazard.
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see—
Who chooseth me, shall have such men desire;
What many men desire.—That many may be meant
By the fool multitude, that choose by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach;—
Which prises not to the interior, but, like the martlet,
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what title thou dost bear.
Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves;—
And well said too; For who shall go about
To consent fortune?—Let none presume
Without the stamp of merit! Let none presume
To wear an undeserved dignity.
O, that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriv'd corruptly! and that clear honour
Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer;
How many then should cover, that stand bare!
How many be pronounced, that command!
How much low parrisany could then be glean'd
From the true seed of honour! and how much honour
Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times;
To be new varnish'd! Well, but to my choice:
Who chooseth me, shall get us much as he deserves;
I will assume desert;—Give me a key for this,
And instantly unlock my fortresses here.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salan and Salaniz.

Sal. Now, what news on the Rialto?

Salar. Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd on the narrow seas; the Goodwins, I think they call the place; a very dangerous flat, and fatal, where the carcases of many a tall ship lie buried, as they say, if my gossip report be an honest woman of her word.

Sal. I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as ever knapp'd ginger, or made her neighbours believe she went for the death of a third husband: But it is true,—without any ships of prolixity, or crossing the plain high-way of talk,—that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—O that I had a title good enough to keep his name company!—

Salar. Come, the full stop.

Sulan. Ha,—what say'st thou?—Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Salar. I would it might prove the end of his losses!

Sulan. Let me say amen betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer; for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.—

Enter Shylock.

How now, Shylock? what news among the merchants?

Shy. You knew, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

Salar. That's certain; I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.

Sulan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fleg'd; and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damn'd for it.

Sulan. That's certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!

Sulan. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods, than there is between red wine and sherry: But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce shew his head on the Rialto,—a beggar, that used to come so smug upon the mart; let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer,—let him look to his bond! he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy,—let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh; What's that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scoured my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooledmy friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew: Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? is it not therefore, that you show kindness even to a Christian?—

Salar. Why, as much as with kindness or as much as with charity.

Shy. Yet I will not deny you have a tongue; you shall have it:—Is there no law, but what is bye-law and custom? can a Jew have none? is it not lawful for a Jew to deal with a Jew?

Salar. All the law, that a Jew may not.

Shy. I would you knew it, for it is the law; I am a Jew: and there is none but I, that know the law, and can make it answer for a Jew:—

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Where is my lady?

Shy. Here; what would my lord?

Serv. Madam, there is alighted at your gate A young Venetian, one that comes before To signify the approaching of his lord: From whom he bringeth sensible regrets; To wit, besides commendations, and courteous breath, Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen So likely an ambassador of love: A day or two since he was here; To shew how costly summer was at hand, As this fore-spurrer comes before his lord.

Serv. No more, I pray thee; I am half afraid, Thou wilt say anon, he is some kin to thee, Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.—

Come, come, Nerissa; for I long to see Quick Cupid's post, that comes so mannerly.-

Ner. Bassanio, lord love, if thy will it be.

[Exeunt.]
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SHYLOCK  The villany you teach me, I will execute Act III Sc. 1. cannot he matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew.

[Enter Salan, Salan, and Segret.]

Shy. How now, Tubal! what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! I cursed ne'er fell upon our nation till now! I never felt it till now!—two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, precious jewels,—I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she were heard’sd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them!—Why, so:—and I know not what’s spent in the search: Why, thou loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief; and no satisfaction, no revenge: nor no ill luck stirring, but what lights o’ my shoulders; no sighs, but o’ my breathing; no tears, but o’ my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men have ill luck too; Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. I thank God, I thank God:—Is it true? is it true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. Why, thank thee, good Tubal;—Good news, good news: ha! ha!—Where is in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats!

Shy. Thou stickst a dagger in me:—I shall never see my gold again: Fourscore ducats at a sitting! fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio’s creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it: I’ll plague him; I’ll torture him; I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them shewed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. What, upon her? Thou tormentest me, Tubal: it was my turquoise: I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that’s true, that’s very true: Go, Tubal, fee me an officer, bespeak him a fortnight before: I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandize I will: Go, go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue, go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal. [Exit.

ACT III.—SCENE II.

Belmont. A Room in Portia’s House.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, Nerissa, and Attendants. The caskets are set out.

Por. I pray you, tarry; pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose your company; therefore, forbear a while: There’s something tells me, (but it is not love,) I would not lose you; and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality: But lest you should not understand me well, (And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought,) I would detain you here some month or two, Before you venture for me. I could teach you, How to choose right, but then I am foresworn; So will I never be: so may you miss me:

But if you do, you’ll make me wish a sin, That I had been forsworn. Deshew your eyes, They have her locked in. This is not the casket: One half of me is yours, the other half yours, —

MINE own, I would say; but if mine, then yours, And so all yours: O! these naughty times Put bars between the owners and their rights; And so, though yours, not yours.—Prove it so, Let fortune go to hell for it,—not, I speak too long; but 'tis to petrize the time; To cke it, and to draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Bass. Let me choose; For, as I am, I live upon the rack.

Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio? then confess What treason there is mingled with your love.

Bass. None, but that ugly treason of untruth, Which makes me fear the enjoying of my love: There may as well be unity and life 'Tween snow and fire, as treason and my love.

Por. Ay, but I fear, you speak upon the rack, Where men enforced do speak any thing.

Bass. Promise me life, and I’ll confess the truth.

Por. Well then, confess, and live.

Bass. Confess, and love, Had been the very sum of my confession: O happy torment, when my torturer Doth teach me answers for deliverance! But let me to my fortune and the caskets.

Por. Away then: I am lock’d in one of them: If you do love me, you will find me out—

Nerissa, and the rest, stand all aloof.— Let music sound, while he doth make his choice, Then, if he lose, he makes a swain-like end, Fading in music: that the comparison May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream, And waft ye death-bed for him: He may win; And what is music then? then music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow To a new-crowned monarch: such it is, As are those dulcet sounds in break of day, That creep into the dreaming bridegroom’s ear, And summons him to marriage. Now he goes, With no less presence, but with much more love, Than young Alcides, when he did redeem The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice, The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives, With bleared visages, come forth to view The issue of the exploit. Go, Hercules! Live thou, I live:—With much much more dismay I view the fight, than thou that makst the fray.

Music, whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself:

SONG. 1. Tell me where is fancy bred, Or in the heart, or in the head? How beget, how nourished?

Reply. 2. It is engender’d in the eyes, With guising fed; and fancy dies in the cradle where it lived me; Let us all ring fancy’s knell; I’ll begin it, —Ding, dong, bell.

All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass.—So may the outward shows be least them: The world is still deceiv’d with ornament. [selves; In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt, But, being season’d with a gracious voice, Obscures the show of evil? In religion, What damned error, but some sober brow Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament!
There is no vice so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules, androwning Mars;
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk?
And these assume but valour's excrement,
To render them redoubled. Look on beauty,
And you shall see 'tis half the meaneast lead,
Which therein works a miracle in nature;
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
So are those crisp'd snaky golden locks,
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind,
Upon supposed fairness, often known
To be the dowry of a second head,
The scull that bred them, in the sepulchre.
This ornament is but the gilded shore
To a most dangerous sea; the beauteous scarf
Velling an Indian beauty; in a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wiser. Therefore, thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee:
Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge
Tame and tame thou warn'st the meaneast lead,
Which rather threat'nest, than doth promise aught,
Thy plainness moves me more than eloquence,
And here choose I; Joy be the consequence!
Por. How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair,
And shoul'd ring fear and green-ey'd jealousy.
O love, be moderate, alway thy ecstasy,
In measure rain thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For I surfeit!

Fair Portia's counterfeit? What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or, whether, riding on the halls of mine,
Seem they in motion? Here are never, sweet lips,
Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar
Should sunder such sweet friends: Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider; and hath woven
A golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in coebwps: But her eyes,—
How could be see to do them? having made one,
Methinks, it should have power to steal both his,
And leave him nothing: but this is; Yea, look how for
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprizing it, so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance.—Here's the scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune.
You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair, and choose as true!
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content, and seek no more.
If you be well pleas'd with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss.

A gentle scroll;—Fair lady, by your leave!
I come by note, to give and to receive, [Kissing her.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause, and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So thrice fair lady, stand I, even see
As in a glass, whether what I see be true,
Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratify'd by fate.
Por. You see me, lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such as I am: though, for myself alone,
I would not be ambitious in my wish
To wish myself much better; yet, for you,
I would be troubled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times
More rich;
That only to stand high on your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, living, friends,
Exceed account; but the full sum of me
Is something of something; which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesso'nd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd:
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn; and happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, is, that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself, and what is mine, to you, and yours
Is now converted: but now I was the fool
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself,
Are yours, my lord; I give them with this ring;
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Is thine in truth. And let me have the praise,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you.
Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins:
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As, after some oration fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the bustling phalanx multitudes
Where every thing is being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy,
Express'd, and not express'd: But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence;
O, then be bold to say, Bassanio's dead.

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by, and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, and joy; Good joy, my lord and lady!

Gra. My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish;
For I am sure, you can wish none from me:
And, when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. I do beseech you, so thou must get a wife
Gra. I thank your lordship; I have got me one
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You lov'd, I lov'd; for intermission
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there;
And so did mine too, as the matter falls.
For freezing here, until I sweet again;
And swearing, till my very roof wans dry
With oaths of love; at last,—if promise last,—
I got a promise of this fair one here,
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiev'd her mistress.

Por. To wish myself such, Is this true, Nerissa?
Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas'd withall.
Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?
Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your Gra. We'll play with them, the first boy for
A thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and stake down!
Gra. No; we shall ne'er win at that sport, and
But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his infidel!
What, and my old Venetian friend, Salerio?
Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.

Bass. Lorenzo, and Salerio, welcome hither;
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome—By your leave,
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por.
So do I, my lord;
They are entirely welcome.

Sale.
And I have reason for it.

Signior Antonio
Commends him to you.

Bass.
I ere I ope his letter,
I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

Sale.
Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind;
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will shew you his estate.

Gra. Neriassa, chief stranger: bid her welcome.

Yor.
What's the news from Venice? I
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know, he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jacons, we have won the fleeces.
[Lost!]

Sale.
Would you had won the fleeces that he hath,
Por. There are some shrewd contents in you'ae same
That steal the colour from Bassano's cheek;
paper,
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse?
With have, Bassano; I am half yourself,
And I must freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass.
O sweet Portia,
Here are a few of the unpleasant words,
That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And then I told you true: and yet, dear lady,
Racing myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a bragart: When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing; for, indeed,
I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound,
Issuing life-blood. But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What not one hit
From Tripolis, from Mexico, and England,
From Lisbon, Barby, and India;
And not one vessel 'scape the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marving rocks?

Sale.
Not one, my lord.
Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it: Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man:
He plies the duke at morning, and at night;
And doth impeach the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice: twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all persuad'd with him;
But none can drive him from the unwise plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

Lor.
When I was with him, I have heard him swear,
To Tubal, and to Chus, his countrymen,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him; and I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.

Por.
Is it your dear friend, that is thus in trouble?

Bass.
The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition'd and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appears,
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

Por.
What sum owes he the Jew?

Bass.
For me, three thousand ducats.

Por.
What, no more?
Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond,
Double six thousand, and then trouble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through Bassano's fault.
First, go with me to church, and call me wife:
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you be by Portia's side
With an empty purse. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over;
When it is paid, bring your true friend along:
My maid Neriassa, and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Come, away;
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day:
Did your friends welcome, show a merry cheer:
Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear.
But let me hear the letter of your friend.

Bass.
[Reads.] Sweet Bassanio, my ship have all miscarried, my creditors grow envious, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeited; and since, in paying it, I am impossible I should live, all debts are erected between you and I, if I might but see you at my death; notwithstanding, use your pleasure: if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter.

Por.
O love, despacht all business, and be gone.
Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make haste: but, till I come again,
No bed shall e'er be guilty of my stay.

No rest be interposer' twixt us twain.
[Exit.]

ACT III.—SCENE III.

Enter Shylock, Salano, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy.
Gaoler, look to him; Tell not me of mercy;—
This is the fool that lent out money gratis;—
Gaoler, look to him.

Ant.
Hear me yet, good Shylock.

Shy.
I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond,
I have sworn an oath, that I will have my bond:
Thou call'dst me dog, before thou hadst a cause:
But, since I am a dog, beware my fangs:
The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder,
Thou naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.
Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak.

Shy.
I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak:
I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I'll have no speaking; I will have my bond.

[Exit Shylock.

Salan.
It is the most impenetrable cur,
That ever kept with men.

Ant.
Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with boodless prayers.
He seeks my life; his reason well I know;
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Many that have at times made moan to me;
Therefore he hates me.

Sultan. I am sure, the duke will never grant this forfeit to stand.

Portia. The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the justice of the state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go;
These griefs and losses have so hathed me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of mah
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.—
Well, gaoler, on:—Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay my debt, and then I care not! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A Room in Portia’s House.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthazar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you know to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of your lord your husband,
I know, you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
While souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord: If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestow’d,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty?
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Therefore, no more of it: hear other things.—
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Until my lord’s return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breath’d a secret vow,
To devote in prayer and pilgrimages,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord’s return:
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you,
Not to deny this imposition;
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart,
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Fair thoughts, and happy hours, attend on you! Jes. I wish your fulness in all your heart’s content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleas’d
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.— [Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.

Now, Balthazar,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still: Take this same letter,
And show it to that whom thou shalt apprize in
In speed to Padua; see thou render this Into my cousin’s hand, Doctor Bellario;

And, look, what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagination speed.
Unto the transept, to the common larry
Which trades to Venice: waste no time in words,
But get thee gone; I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

[Exit.

Por. Come on, Nerissa; I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of: we’ll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Ner. What shall they see us?

Por. They shall, Nerissa; but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With what we lack. I’ll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accouter’d like young men,
I’ll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak, between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do with all: then I’ll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill’d them.
And yet in these thy sayings I’ll laugh:—
That men should swear, I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth:—I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these orraging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Ner. Why, shall we turn to men?

Por. Fye! what a question’s that,
If thou once name law among us:—but come,
I’ll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The same. A Garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Lau. Yes, truly;—for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise you, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter: Therefore, be of good cheer; for, truly, I think, you are dam’d. There is but one hope in this; and that is a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lau. marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew’s daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed; so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Lau. Truly then I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Sylva, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother; well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Lau. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians enough before; even as many as could well trades to Venice: this making of Christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

[Exit.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I’ll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say, here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners.
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo; Launcelot and I are out: he tells me flatly, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter; and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth, for, in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the Moor is with child by you, Launcelet.

Laun. It is much, that the Moor should be more than reason: but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word! I think, the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence; and discourse grow commendable in none but parrots.—Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

Laun. That is done, sir, they have all stomachs.

Lor. Goodly lord, what a wit-snapper are you! then bid them prepare dinner.

Laun. That is done, too, sir: only, cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover then, sir?

Laun. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Will thou shew the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning; go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Laun. For the table, sir, it shall be served in; for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conceits shall govern. [Exit LAUNCELOT.

Lor. O dear discretion, how his words are suited! The fool hath planted in his memory An army of good words; And I do know A many fools, that stand in better place, Garish'd like him, that for a tricky word Defy the matter. How cheer'st thou, Jessica? And now, good sweet, say thy opinion, How dost thou like the lord Bassanio's wife?

Jes. Past all expressing: it is very meet, The lord Bassanio live an upright life; For he is such a blessing to his lady, He finds the joys of heaven here on earth; And, if on earth he do not mean it, It reason he should never come to heaven. Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match, And on the wager lay two earthly women, And Portia one, there must be something else Pawn'd with the other; for the poor rude world Hath not her fellow.

Lor. Even such a husband Hath thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion too of that.

Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk; Then, howsoever thou speakest, 'mong other things I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes; Antonio, Bassa- nio, Gratiano, Salario, Solano, and others.

Duke. I am sorry for thee; thou art come to an. A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch [sner Uncapable of pity, void and empty From any drain of mercy.

Ant. I have heard, Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate, And that no lawful means can carry me Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose My patience to his fury; and am arm'd To suffer, with a quietness of spirit, The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Solano. He's ready at the door: he comes, my lord.

Enter SHYLOCK.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too, [face.— That thou but lead'st this fashion of thy malice To the last hour of act; and then, 'tis thought, Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse, more strange Than is thy strange apparent cruelty: And where thou now exact'st the penalty, (Which is a bond of this most usurious flesh,) Thou wilt not only lose the forfeiture, But touch'd with human gentleness and love, Forgive a meeky of the principal; Glancing an eye of pity on his losses That have of late so huddled on his back, Enough to press a royal merchant down, And pluck commiseration of his state From brassy bonnets, and rough hearts of flint, From stubborn Turks, and Tartars, never trai'd To offices of tender courtesy.

We all expect a gentle answer, Jew. Sky. I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose; And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn, To have the due and forfeit of my bond: If you deny it, let the danger light Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. You'lt ask me, why I rather choose to have A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that. But, say, it is my humour; Is it answer'd? What if I buy a house to treble my lady, And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats To have it ban'd? What, are you answer'd yet? Some men there are, love not a gaping pig; Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat; And others, when the bagpipe sings 'tis the nose, Cannot contain their urine; for affection, Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood Of what it likes, or loathes: Now, for your answer, As there is no firm reason to be render'd, Why he cannot abide a gaping pig; Why he, a harmless necessary cat; Why he, a swollen bagpipe; but of force Must yield to such inevitable shame, As to offend, himself being offended; So can I give no reason, nor I will not, More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing, I bear Antonio, that I follow thus A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd?

Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man, To excurse the current of thy cruelty. Sky. I am not bound to please thee with my answer. Bass. Do all men kill the things they do not love? Sky. Hates any man the thing he would not kill? Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first. [twice Sky. What, would'st thou have a serpent sting thee Ant. I pray you, think you question with the Jew: You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main flood bate his usual height;
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleed for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that (than which what's harder?)
His Jewish heart.—Therefore, I do beseech you,
Make no more offers, use no further means,
But, with all brief and plain convenience,
Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will.

Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.
Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats,
Were in six parts, and ever part a ducat,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond.

Duke. How shall thou hope for mercy, reading none?

Shy. What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?
You have among you many a purchaser's slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish parts,
Because you bought them.—Shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs;
Why sweat they under burdens? let their beds
Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates
Be season'd with such viands? you will answer,
The slaves are ours.—So do I answer you;
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will have it:
If you deny me, I, by your own law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice:
I stand for judgment: answer, shall I have it?

Duke. Upon my power, I may dismiss this court,
Unless Bellario, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come here to-day.

Sol. My lord, my lord stays without
A messenger with letters from the doctor.

Duke. Bring us the letters; call the messenger.

Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man! courage yet!
The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.
Let them be tender, whip them to your heirs.
Meetest for death; the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me:
You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio,
Than to live still, and write mine epitaph.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

Ner. From both, my lord: Bellario greets your grace.

[Present a letter.

Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?
Shy. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt there.

Gro. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,
Thou mak'st thy knife keen: but no metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keeness
Of the sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Shy. No, none that thou hast writ easy enough to make.

Gro. 0, be thou damn'd, inexorable dog!
And for thy life let justice be accus'd.
Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the ranks of men; thy curish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soulfleet,
And, whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallowed dam,
Infus'd itself in thee; for thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

Shy. Till thou can'st rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud:
Repair thy wit, good youth; or it will fall
To curseless ruin. I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend
A young and learned doctor to our court:—
Where is he? He attendeth here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

Duke. With all my heart:—some three or four of you,
Go give him courteous conduct to this place.—
Meantime, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[Clerk reads.] Your grace shall understand, that,
at the receipt of your letter, I am very sick:
but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome, his name is Balchus:
I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio the merchant; we turned over many books together: he is full of my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, (the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend,) comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of yours be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation; for
I never knew so young a body with so old a head.
I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendations.

Duke. You hear the learned Bellario, what he
And here, I take it, is the doctor come.—
[writes:—

Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.

Give me your hand: Came you from old Bellario?

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome: take your place.
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?

Por. I am informed throughly of the cause.

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth?

Por. Is your name Shylock?

Shy. Shylock is my name.

Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such a rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you, as you do proceed.

You stand within his danger, do you not?

[To Antonio.

Ant. Ay, so he says.

Por. Do you confess the bond?

Ant. I do.

Por. Then must the Jew be merciful.

Shy. On what compulsion must I? tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
His sceptre shews the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty.
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings:
But mercy is above this scepter'd sway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth then shew likest God's
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this—
That in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation; we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

The deeds of mercy I have spoke thus much,
To mitigate the justice of thy plea;
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence against the merchant there.
Shy. My deeds appeal to heaven; I crave the law,
The penalty and forfeit of my bond.
Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?
Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court;
Yea, thrice the sum: if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times over,
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart:
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth. And I beseech you,
Wrest once the law to your authority:
To do a great right do a little wrong;
And curb this cruel devil of his will.
Por. It must not be; there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established;
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state: it cannot be.
Sly. A Daniel came to judgment! yea, a Daniel!
O wise young judge, how do I honour thee!
Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.
Sly. Here it is: it most reverend doctor, here it is.
You see, there is the old penalty,
And twice the money offer'd then.
Sly. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I lay perjury upon my soul?
No, not for Venice.
Por. Why, this bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearer my heart, or farther—be merciful:
Take thrice thy money: bid me tear the bond.
Sly. When it is paid according to the tenour,—
It doth appear, you are a worthy judge;
You know the law, your exposition
Hath been most sound: I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proceed to judgment: by my soul I swear,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me: I stay here on my bond.
Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.
Por. Why then, thus it is,
You must prepare your bosom for his knife.
Shy. And I shall exclaim—O young man!
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law
Hath full relation to the penalty,
Which here appear'd due upon the bond.
Sly. 'Tis very true: O wise and upright judge!
How much more elder art thou than thy looks!
Por. Therefore, lay bare your bosom.
Sly. Ay, his breast:
So says the bond:—Doth it not, noble judge?
Nearest his heart, those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here, to weigh
The flesh?
Sly. I have them ready. [charge,
Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your
To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.
Sly. Is it so nominated in the bond?
Por. It is not so express'd; But what of that?
'Twere good you do so much for charity.
Sly. I cannot find it; 'tis not in the bond.
Por. Come, merchant, have you any thing to say?
Ant. But little; I am arm'd, and well prepar'd.
Por. The money, and all thy sins confus'd.
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty; from which lingering penance
Of such a misery doth she cut me off,
Commend me to your honourable wife:
Por. Tell my deeds appeal of Antonio's end.
Say, how I loved you, speak me fair in death;
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a love.
Repent not you that you shall lose your friend,
And he repents not that he pays your debt;
For, if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.
Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life;
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all
Here to this devil, to deliver you.
Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that
If she were by, to hear you make the offer.
Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some power to change this curious Jew.
Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unquiet house.
Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast;
The law allows it, and the court awards it.
Sly. Most learned judge!—A sentence; come, prepare.
Por. Tarry a little;—there is something else.—
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh:
To take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.
Gra. O upright judge!—Mark, Jew;—O learned
Shy. Is that the law?
Por. Thyself shall see the act:
For, as thou urgent justice, be assur'd,
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desir'st.
Gra. O learned judge!—Mark, Jew;—a learned
Shy. I take this offer then,—pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.
Bass. Here is the money.
Por. Soft;
The Jew shall have all justice,—soft;—no haste;—
He shall have nothing but the penalty.
Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!
Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh.
Shed thou no blood; nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it but so much
As makes it light, or heavy, in the substance,
Or the division of the twentieth part
Of one poor scrap;—may, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,—
Though vast, and all things small confus'd
Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew!
Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.
Por. Why doth the Jew pause? take thy forfeiture.
Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Duke. I am merry, that your business serves you well. Antonio, grant this gentleman,
For, in my need, you are much bound to him.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

BELMONT.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lore.  The moon shines bright.—In such a night as this, When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees, And they did make no noise: in such a night, Troilus, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls, And sigh'd his soul toward the Grecian tents, Where Cressida lay that night.

Jes.  In such a night, Did Thidias fearfully o'erstrip the town: And saw the hour's shadow给自己 himself, And ran dismay'd away.

Lore.  In such a night, Stood Dido with a willow in her hand, Upon the wild sea-banks, and wave'd her love To come again to Carthage, Jes.  In such a night, Media gather'd the enchanted herbs, That did renew old Jason.

Lore.  In such a night, Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew: And with an untimely love did run from Vemoci, As far as Belmont.

Jes.  In such a night, Did young Lorenzo swear he lov'd her well; Stealing her soul with many vows of faith, And 'never a true one.

Lore.  And in such a night, Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew, Slander her love, and he forgave it her.

Jes.  I would out-night you, did nobody come: But, hark, I hear the hoofing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lore.  Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

Step.  A friend!  What friend! your name, I pray.

Lore.  A friend! what friend! your name, I pray.

Step.  Stephano is my name; and I bring word, My mistress will before the break of day Be here at Belmont; she doth stay about By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays For happy wedlock hours.

Lore.  What comes with her!

Step.  None, but a holy hermit, and her maid.  I pray you, is my master yet returned?

Lore.  He is not, nor we have not heard from him: But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica, And ceremoniously let us prepare Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

Enter Jawo.

Jawo.  Sola! did you see master Lorenzo, and mistress Lorenzo? sola, sola!

Lore.  Leave hollaing, man; here.

Jawo.  Sola! where I?

Lore.  Hush!

Jawo.  Tell him, there's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news; my master will be here one morning.

Enter.

For.  Sweet-soul, let's in, and there expect their coming.

And yet no matter:—Why should we go in? My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you. Within the house, your mistress is at hand: And bring your music forth into the air.—

Enter.

For.  How sweet the moon-light soaps upon this bank! Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music Creep in our ears, soft silence, and the night.

Become the toucht of sweet harmony.

Jes.  Look how the Moon of heaven Is thick maked with pannes of bright gold. There's not the smallest speck which thou beholdest, But in his motion like an angel sings.

Still quiring to the young-cv'd cherubins:

Such harmony is in immortal souls; But, whilst this earthy vesture of decay Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

Enter Musicians.

Come, he, and wake Diana with a hymn, With sweetest touches pierce your mistress' ear, And draw her home with music.

Jes.  I am never merry, when I hear sweet music.

For.  The reason is your spirits are attentive:

For do but note a wild and wanton head, Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bowing, and neighing loud, Which is the hot condition of their blood, If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound, Or any air of music touch their ears, You shall perceive them make a mutual stand, Their savage eyes turn'd to a mostest gaze, By the sweet power of music. Therefore, the poet Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and foods; Since nought so stanchish, hard, and full of rage, But music for the time doth change its nature: The man that hath no music in himself Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds, Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils, The motions of his spirit are dull as night, And his affections dark as E upus.

Let no such man be trusted. Mark the music.

Enter Portia and Nerissa, at a distance.

For.  That light we see, is burning in my hall. How far that little candle throws his beams! So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

For.  When the moon shine, we did not see the

For.  So doth the greater glory dim the less.

A substance shines brightly as a king, Until a king be by, and then his state Empties itself, as doth an inland vessel Into the main of waters. Music! back!

For.  It is your music, madam, of the house.

For.  Nothing is good, I see, without respect: Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.

For.  Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

Now, doth not she doth sing as sweetly as the lark, When neither is attended, and, I think, The nightingale, if she should sing by day.

For.  When every goose is calling, would be thought

For.  No better a musician than the wren.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection!—
Peace, hoa! the moon sleeps with Egidyon,
And would not awak'd!—[Music ceases.

Lor. That is the voice, Or I am much deceiv'd, of Portia.

[Ecchoo.

Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the
By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.

Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare.

Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.
Are they return'd?

Lor.' Madam, they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa, Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of all our being absent here;
Not you, Lorenzo;—Jessica, not you.

[A tucket sounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet:
We are no tell-tales, madam; fear you not.

Por. This night, methinks, is but the daylight sick.
It looks a little paler; 'tis a day,
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their Followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,
And worse be Bassanio so for me;
But God sort all!—You are welcome home, my lord.

Bass. I thank you, madam: give welcome to my
This is the man, this is Antonio, [friend.—
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.

Ant. No more than I am well acquitt'd of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore, I scant this breathing courtesy.

[Gratiano and Nerissa seem to talk apart.

Gro. By yonder moon, I swear you do me wrong;
In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk:
Would he be gel't that had it, for my part,
Since you do take it, love it, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
Gro. About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give me; whose posy was
For all the world, like cutter's poetry
Upon a knife, Love me, and leave me not.

Ner. What talk you of the posy, or the value?
You swore to me, when I did give it, That you would wear it till your hour of death;
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have been respective, and have kept it.
Gave it a judge's clerk!—but well I know,
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on his face, that had it.

Gro. He will, as if he live to be a man.

Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man,
Gro. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth,—
A kind of boy; a little scroubbed boy,
No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk;
A prating boy, that begg'd it as a fee;
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift;
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And riveted so with faith unto your flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here be stands;—
I gave him bond for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief;
An 'twere to me, I should be mad at it,

Bass. Why, I were best to cut my left hand off,
And swear, I lost the ring defending it. [Aside.

Gro. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it, and, indeed,
Deserv'd it too; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine:
And neither man, nor master, would take aught
But the two rings.

Por. What ring gave you, my lord?—Not that, I hope, which you swear'd of me.
Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,
I would deny it; but you see, my finger
Hath not the ring upon it, it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heaven, I will never come in your bed
Until I see the ring.

Ner. 'Till again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When naught would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Por. No, but the bond that had been in the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honour to contain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleas'd to have defended it
With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty
To wrapp the thing held as a ceremony,
Nerissa teaches me what to believe;
I'll die for't, but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by mine honour, madam, by my soul,
No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring; the which I did deny him,
And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away;
For, for the high that had been in the very ring
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady!
I was enforce'd to send it after him;
I was beset with shame and courtesy:
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmar' it: Pardon me, good lady;
For by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think, you would have begg'd the ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor e'er come near my house:
Since he hath got the jewel that I lov'd,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you;
I'll not deny him any thing I have,
No, not my body, nor my husband's bed;
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me, like Argus:
If you do not, if I be left alone,
Now, by mine honour, which is yet mine own,
I'll have that doctor for my bedfellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore be well advis'd,
How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Gro. Well, do you so: let not me take him then;
Por, if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen.
Ant. I am the unhappy subject of these quarrels.
Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.
Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And, in the hearing of these many friends,
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself,—
Por. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubtless sees himself:
In each eye once—swear by your double self,
And there's an oath of credit.
Bass.
Nay, but hear me:
Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear,
I never more will break an oath with thee.
Ant. I once did lend my body to his wealth;
Which, but for him that had your husband's ring,
To Portia,
Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.
Por. Then you shall be his surety: Give him this;
And bid him keep it better than the other.
Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.
Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!
Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio;
For by this ring the doctor lay with me.
Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano;
For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor's clerk,
In love of this, last night did lie with me.
Gra. Why, this is like the mending of highways
In summer, where the ways are fair enough:
What! are we cuckoldes, ere we have deserved it?
Por. Speak not so grossly.
You are all amaz'd:
Here is a letter, read it at your leisure;
It comes from Padua, from Bellario:
There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor;
Nerissa there, her clerk: Long live her.
Shall witness, I set forth as soon as you,
And but even now return'd; I have not yet

Enter'd my house.—Antonio, you are welcome;
And I have better news in store for you,
Than you expect: unseal this letter soon;
There you shall find, three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly:
You shall not know by what strange accident
I chanced on this letter.
Ant. I am dumb.
Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not?
Gra. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold!
Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it,
Unless he live until he be a man.
Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow;
When I am absent, then lie with my wife.
Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life, and living;
For here I read for certain, that my ships
Are safely come to road.
Por. How now, Lorenzo?
My clerk hath some good comforts too for you.
Ner. Ay, and I'll give them him without a fee.—
There do I give you, and Jessica.
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possess'd of.
Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.
Por.
It is almost morning,
And yet, I am sure, you are not satisfied
Of the events at all: Let us go in;
And charge us there upon interrogatives,
And we will answer all things faithfully.
Gra. Let it be so: The first interrogatory,
That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay;
Or go to bed now, being two hours to-day:
But were the day come, I should wish it dark,
That I were couching with the doctor's clerk.
Well, while I live, I'll fear no other thing
So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa's ring.
[Exit.

* Of THE MERCHANT OF VENICE the style is even and easy, with few peculiarities of diction, or anomalies of construction. The comic part raises laughter, and the serious business entertainment. The probability of either one or the other story cannot be maintained. The union of two actions in one event is in this drama eminently happy. Dryden was much pleased with his own address in connecting the two plots of his Spanish Lover, which yet, I believe, the critic will find excelled by this play—JOHNSON.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

THOUGH this exquisite comedy appears to have been first published in the player's edition of our author's works in 1623, it must have been written before the year 1600; as at the beginning of the second volume of the entries at Stationers' Hall, two leaves of irrefragable prohibitions, notes, &c. are placed, in which As you Like it is mentioned. An entry of the 4th of August, 1600, contains a caveat relative to three of our author's plays, the present comedy, Henry the Fifth, and Much Ado about Nothing.—With respect to the other two plays, the caveat was soon taken off, and they were both published within the month. As you like it may have been printed at the same time, but no copy of such an edition has been discovered.

The plot of the play was taken from Lodge's Rosalind, or Euphues's Golden Legacy, 4to. 1600. And Shakespeare has followed the novel more exactly than is his general custom when he is indebted to such worthless originals. He has sketched some of his principal characters, and borrowed a few expressions from it. His imitations, &c. however, are in general too insignificant to merit transcription. It should be observed, that the characters of Jaques, the Clown and Audrey, are entirely of the poet's own formation.

O
ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Orchard, near Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando, and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me: By will, but a poor thousand crowns: and, as thou say'st, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit; for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept: For call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for which the his animals on his dungsills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude: I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Orl. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Orl. What mean you then, sir?

Orl. marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Orl. marry, sir, be better employ'd, and be naught awhile.

Orl. Shall I keep your hogs, and eat huck's with them? What prodigal portion have I spent, that I should come to such misery?

Orl. Know you where you are, sir?

Orl. 0, sir, very well; here in your orchard.

Orl. Know you before whom, sir?

Orl. Ay, better he I am before knows me. I know, you are my eldest brother; and, in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me: The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us: I have as much of my father in me, as you; albeit, I confess, your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Orl. What, boy!

Orl. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Orl. Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain?

Orl. I am no villain: I am the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois: he was my father; and he is three a villain, that says, such a father begot villains: Wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had pulled out thy tongue for saying so; thou hast railed on thyself.

Adam. Sweet masters, be patient; for your father's remembrance, be at accord.

Orl. Let me go, I say.

Orl. I will not, till I please: you shall hear me. My father charged you in his will to give me good education: you have trained me like a peasant, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities: the spirit of my father grows strong in me; and I will no longer endure it: therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Orl. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you: you shall have some part of your will: I pray you, leave me.

Orl. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Orl. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is old dog my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service.—God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.

[Exeunt Orlando and Adam.

Orl. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Holla, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worship?

Orl. Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me.

Den. So please you he is here at the door, and importunes access to you.

Orl. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.]-'Twill be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Cha. Good morrow to your worship.

Orl. Good Monsieur Charles!—what's the news at the new court?

Cha. No news at the court, sir, but the old news: that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Orl. Can you tell, if Rosalind, the duke's daughter, be banished with her father?

Cha. O, no; for the duke's daughter, her cousin, so loves her,—being ever from their cradles bred together,—that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Orl. Where will the old duke live?

Cha. They say, he is already in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they say many young gentlemen flock to him every day; and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Orl. What, you wrestler to-morrow before the new duke?

Cha. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with this. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguise against me to try a fall: To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit; and he that escapes me without some broken limb, shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be loath to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come is: therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will.

Orl. Charles, I thank thee, for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein, and have by underhand means laboured to dissuade him from it; but, alas! he has been too far. I'll tell thee, Charles;—it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me: his natural brother; therefore use thy discretion; I have as fain to do as thou hast been to break his neck as his finger: And thou wert best look to it; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mildly grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath ta'en thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak but brotherly of him; but should I animadvert to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

Ch. I am heartily glad I came hither to you: If he come to-morrow, I'll give him his payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more: And so, God keep your worship! [Exit.

Oli. Farewell, good Charles.—Now will I stir this gamester: I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he's gentle; never school'd, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved; and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long: this wrestler shall clear all; nothing remains, but that I knadle the boy thither, which now I'll go about. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Lawn before the Duke's Palace.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry. Ros. Dear Celia, I shew more mirth than I am mistress of; and would you yet I were merrier! Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein, I see, thou lov'st me not with the full weight that I love thee: if my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine; so would'st thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered as mine is to thee.

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have: and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perchance, I will render thee again in affection; by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn monster; therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rosaline, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth, I will, coz, and devise sports: let me see: What think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I pr'ythee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.

Ros. What shall be our sport then?

Cel. Let us sit and mock the good housewife. Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced: and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. 'Tis true: for those, that she makes fair, she scarce makes honest; and those, that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favouredly.

Ros. Nay; now thou goest from fortune's office to nature's: fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No: When nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature; when fortune makes nature's natural the cutter off of nature's wit.

Cel. Peradventure, this is not fortune's work neither, but nature's; who, perceiving our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of his wits.—How now, wit! whither wander you?

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Cel. Were you made the messenger?

Touch. No, by mine honour; but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knave, that swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was nghted: now, I'll stand to it, the pancakes were nghted, and the mustard was good: and yet was not the knight foresworn.

Cel. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry, now unuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Cel. By your beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were: but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away, before ever he saw those pancakes or that mustard.

Cel. Pr'ythee, who is 't that mean'st?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Cel. My father's love is enough to honour him. Enough is the speech of more of him: you'll be whipped for taxation, one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely, what wise men do foolishly.

Cel. By my troth, thou say'st true: for since the little wit, that fools have, was silenced, the little foolery, that wise men have, makes a great show. Here comes Monsieur Le Beau.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-cramm'd.

Cel. All the better; we shall be the more marketable. Bon jour, Monsieur Le Beau: What's the news?

Le Beau. Fair prices, you have lost much good sport.

Cel. Sport? of what colour?

Le Beau. What colour, madam? How shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the destinies decree. O
AS YOU LIKE IT.

Cel. Well said; that was laid on with a towel. Touch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,—
Ros. Thou lostest thy old smell. Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.
Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.
Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning, and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end; for the best is yet to do; and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.
Cel. Well,—the beginning, that is dead and buried.
Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons,—
Cel. I could match this beginning, with an old tale.
Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence;
Ros. With bills on their necks,—Be it known unto all men by these presents,—
Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke’s wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, and there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and the third: Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.
Ros. Alas! Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?
Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of. Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day! it is the first time that ever I heard, breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.
Cel. Or I, I promise thee.
Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking!—Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?
Le Beau. You must, if you stay here: here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.
Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming: Let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on; since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his own interest.
Ros. Is yonder the man?
Le Beau. Even he, madam.
Cel. Alas, he is too young: yet he looks successfully.
Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin? are youcreat hither to see the wrestling?
Ros. Ay, my liege: so please you give us leave.
Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such odds in the men: In pity of the challenger’s youth, I would fain dissuade him: but he will not be entreated: Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.
Cel. Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.
Duke F. Do so; I’ll not be by. [Duke F. goes apart.
Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princesses call for you.
Orl. I attend them, with all respect and duty.
Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?
Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger: I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.
Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years: You have seen cruel proof of this man’s strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes, or knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this attempt.
Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprisned: we will make it our suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.
Orl. I beg you, punish me not with your hard thoughts; wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But let your fair eyes, and gentle wishes, go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shame that was never gracious; if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so: I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me: the world no injury, for in it I have nothing: only in the world I fill up a place, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.
Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
Cel. And mine to eke out hers.
Ros. Fare you well. Pray heaven, I be deceived in your letters.
Cel. Your heart’s desires be with you.
Orl. Come, where is this young gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?
Orl. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.
Duke F. Thou shalt try but one fall.
Orl. No, I warrant your grace; you shall not entangle him to one fall, that have so mightily persuaded him from a first.
Orl. You mean to mock me after; you should not have mocked me before: but come your ways.
Ros. Now, Hercules be thy speed, young man!
Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. [Charles and Orlando wrestle.
Duke F. What is thy name, young man?
Orl. Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of sir Rowland de Bois.
Duke F. I would, thou hadst been son to some man. The world esteem’d thy father honourable, else But I did find him still mine enemy: Thou shouldest have better pleas’d me with this deed, Hadst thou descended from another house. But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth; I would, thou hadst told me of another father.
[Exit DukE FRED. Train, and Le Beau.
Cel. Were I my father, coz, would I do this?
Orl. I am more proud to be sir Rowland’s son, His youngest son;—and would not change that To be adopted heir to Frederick.
Ros. My father lov’d sir Rowland as his soul, And all the world was of my father’s mind: Had I before known this young man his son, I should have given him tears unto entreaties, Else he should thus have ventured.
Cel. Gentle cousin, Let me thank him, and encounter him: My father’s rough and envious disposition Sticks me at heart.—Sir, you have well deserv’d If you do keep your promises in love, But justly, as you have exceeded promise, Your mistress shall be happy
Ros. Gentleman, [Giving him a chain from her neck.]

Wear this for me: one out of suits with fortune; that could give more, but that her hand lacks means.—Shall we go, coz?

Cel. Ay: Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Ros. Can I not say, I thank you? My better parts are all thrown down: and that which here stands up, is but a quittance, a mere lifeless block. [tunes:

Ros. He calls us back: My pride fell with my for-

I'll ask him what he would.—Did you call, sir?—

Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown

More than your enemies.

Cel. Will you go, coz?

Ros. Have with you:—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Ort. What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue? I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.

Re-enter Le Beau.

O poor Orlando! thou art overthrown;

Or Charles, or something weaker, wouldst thee. Le Beau: Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you To leave this place: Albeit you have deserv'd

High commendation, true applause, and love; Yet such is now the duke's condition, That he misconstrues all that you have done. The duke is humorous: what is he, indeed, More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of. Ort. I thank you, sir; and, pray you, tell me this: Which of the two was daughter of the duke That here was at the wrestling? [mourners:

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by But yet, indeed, the smaller is his daughter: The other is daughter to the banish'd duke, And here detain'd by her usurping uncle, To keep his daughter company: whose loves Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters, But I can tell you, that of late this duke Hath ta'en displeasure against his gentle niece; Grounded upon no other argument, But that the people praise her for her virtues, And pity her for her good father's sake; And, on my life, his majesty 'gainst the lady Will suddenly break forth.—Sir, fare you well! Hereafter in a better world than this, I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

Ort. I rest much bounden to you: fare you well! [Exit Le Beau.

Thus must I from the smoke into the smother; From tyrant duke, unto a tyrant brother:—But heavenly Rosalind! [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. Why, cousin: why, Rosalind:—Cupid have mercy:—Not a word! Ros. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon curs, throw some of them at me; come, lame me with reasons.

Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up: when the one should be lamed with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your father?

Ros. No, some of it for my child's father: O, how full of prints this working-day world!

Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday folly: if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.

Ros. I could shake them off my coat; these burs are in my heart

Cel. Hem them away.

Ros. I would try: if I could cry hem, and have him Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.

Ros. O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.

Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall.—But turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest: Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old sir Rowland's youngest son?

Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly. Cel. Doth it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chasé, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

Ros. No' faith, hate him not, for my sake. Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well? Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him, because I do: Look, here comes the duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Enter Duke Humphrey, with Lords.

Duke F. Mistress, despatch you with your safest And get you from our court. [baste, Ros.

Cel. Me uncle! You, cousin—Within these ten days if thou be'st found So near our public court as twenty miles, Thou diest for it.

Ros. I do beseech your grace, Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me: If with myself I hold intelligence, Or have acquaintance with mine own desires; If that I do not dream, or be not frantic, (As I do trust I am not,) then, dear uncle, Never so much as in a thought unhurt, Did I offend your highness.

Duke F. Thus do all traitors; If their purgation did consist in words, They are as innocent as grace itself:— Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.

Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor: Tell me, whereon the likelihood depends. [enough.

Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter, there's

Cel. So was I, when your highness took his duke, So was I when your highest hand bade him: [dom; reason is not inherited, my lord;

Duke F. Or, if we did derive it from our friends, What's that to me? my father was no traitor: Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much, To think my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.

Duke F. Ay, Celia: we stay'd her for your sake. Else had she with her father rang'd aloud.

Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay, It was your pleasure, and your own remorse; I was too young that time to value her, But now I know her: if she be a traitor, Why do am I: we still have slept together: Rose at an instant, learnt d, play'd, eat together; And whereas we went, lib at his swans, Still we went coupled, and inseparable.

Duke F. She is too subtle for thee; and hersmooth—Her very silence, and her patience, [ness,

Speak to the people, and they pity her. Then art a fool: she robs thee of thy name; And the world is more wise, and seem more virtu, When she is gone: then only in thy lips: [fous, Firm and irrevocable is my doom

Which I have pass'd upon her: she is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence then on me, my liege; I cannot live out of her company.
Duke. If you are wise,—You, men, prove your men if you outstrip the love of the more honest, (self.)
In the great error of yours, you do. [Long heav. Deans, Priests, and Lords)

Cler. O my poor Rosalind! what wilt thou say? Wilt thou change letters? I will give thee mine, I change thee, be not so more grauid than I am. For, I have many cause.

Cler. Then hast not, cousin, Priytha, been pleased? I know at present, we dare Hath bidden me his design on? Yes. That he hath not.
Cler. Nor I hath not? Rosalind, and then the love Which teacheth that thee and I am one. Shall we be sorre? shall we part, sweet girl? No; yet my father were another here. Therefore devise with me, how we may fly. Whether to go, and when to bear with us. And do not seek to take your charge upon you, To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out. For, by this heere, now at my sorrowes pale, I have no thought, I'll go along with thee. Yes, Why, whither shall we go? Cler. Not to seek my uncle. Ros. Also, what danger will it be to us, Much as we are, to travel forward so? Beauty proveth others sooner than gold. Cler. I'll put myself in such a manner, And with a hand of mine, to go to face, Like thee do, you, so shall we pass along. And never the commit. Ros. What is it, better, That because I am more than common-soul, That I did set at me as great a face? A pleasant errand upon my love. A love-soop in my hand, and (in my heart Like there what they when we are there will,) We'll have a writing and a martial outside, As many other materials enough have, That do outgoth it with their former letters. Cler. What mean? I call thee when thou set a man? Ros. I have no worse occasion not to lose your page. And therefore, love you, name me, Greywode. What will you be call'd? Cler. Something that has a relevance to my state. Not to rost on houts, Ros. But, when we want, we asked't to steal The solemn hold out of your London court? Would he be so comfort to our travel? Cler. He'll go along with the white world with me; Leave me alone to work him. Let's away, And set our jewels: and our way together, Do the beast haste and what way To make it from papam that shall be made. After my right, I know, you content, To liberty, and not to new incumbr. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. — The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke, Senior, Antonio, and other Lords, in the dress of Foresters.

Duke. Now, my coney, and, brothers to a wile, Haue not old custom made the more sweet
This that of painted poy? Are not these woods More free from peril than the slyer covert? Here had we lost the jealousy of Arden, The seasons disorderous, as, the sky hang, And with the shedding of the winter's wood Which when it bates and blows upon my body, Even till I shrowt with cold, I would, and say,—

This is no matter; these are counsellors. That bravely persuade me what I am. Sweet are the uses of adversity; Which like the toad, ugly and venemous, Wears yet a precious jewel in his head; And this our life, exempt from public haunt, Finds tongues in trees, books in running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing: Alas! it were not changed. Happy in your grave. That can translate the sterility of fortune Into so quiet, and so sweet a style. Duke. Come, shall we go and kill us venison? And yet it please me, the poor cappled boar,— Being native breeders of this desert city, Would, in their own confounds, with forked heads Have their round branches got d. 1 Lord. Indeed, my lord, The melancholy Jaques grooves at that; And in that land, where you do more uper Than cause your brother that hath been and you. To-day, my lord of Arden, and myself, Did seal by this, we be, by head, along Under a white cloth, comely roof peaks out Wind in the leaf, and smoothness in the wood To the which place a pour request I stay, That from the hunters' dole they have taken a hurt, Did come to large with, and, indeed, my lord, The witched was not heard for such grounds, That their discharge did stretch in heathen coast Almost to border; and the big round ears Could not one another lose their innocent woe, But by their way, and the heavy food, Much marked of the melancholy Jaques, Scored on the extreme verge of the swift brook, A presenting it with tears.

Duke. But what said Jaques?

Did he not move do the spectable? 1 Lord. O, yes, into a thousand fantasies. First, for his weeping in the noiseful stream, Poor deer, youth be, thus much is a testament As worldlings do, giving the sum more To that which had too much: Then Being alone, Left and abandon'd of his vengeful friends, To right, youth be; thus money doth just The flair of company. Ammon, a careless herd, Full of the porest, jumps along by him, Auching ways to villain, and a youth Jacques, Sweep up, you fast and present present. To just the falcon: Wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there? This most accurately by plantagh through The body of the city, city, court, Yes and of unroofed life, swearing that we Are more enwrapped, tyrant, and what's worse, To fright the summer, and naked them up, In their assuaged and native dwelling place. [Exsurr. 1 Duke. And did you leave him in this consummation? 2 Lord. We did, my lord, weeping, and comming. Upon the sobbing deer. Duke. Show me the place; I love to see him in those unholy, For he hath full of manner. 2 Lord. I'll bring you to him straight. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke, Foresters, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke. Can it be possible, that woman saw them? It was not, by the assurance of any part Are of constant and sufferance in this. 1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her. The lady, her attendants of her chamber,
ACT II.—SCENE IV.

Saw her a-bed; and, in the morning early,
They found the bed nutrusting of her mistress.

'ACT. II.—SCENE IV.

1. He is your master, your tender, your friend.

Your grace was wont to laugh, and was missing.

Hesps, up, the princes' gentlewoman.

Consents, that she seawedly dotes on your master.

Your daughter and her sister much commend

The parts and graces of the wrister,

That did but faintly feel the steeley Charles;

And she behoves, whenever they are gone,

That youth is surely in their company.

Duke F. Send to his brother, let him that goeth

Hence, but return but the nearest brother to me, (behind;)

I'll make him find him: do this sumingly;

And let not search and inspection quit,

To bring again these foolish runaway.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Before Oliver's House.

Entire DELAMO and URSUS, meeting.

Ol. Who's there?

Urs. What! my young master! O, my gentle

Ol. My sweet master, O you memory

Of old sir Rowland! why, what makes you here?

Why are you anxious? Why do people love you?

And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?

Why would you be so kind to everyone?

Your house is a house of the honorable house,

Your peace is come too softly home before you.

Know you not, master, to some kind of men

That grace serves them but as enemies?

No more do yours; your virtues, gentle master,

Are sanctified and holy tranfers to you.

O, what a world this is, when what is incomely

Enamours him that bears it?

Ol. Why, what's the matter?

Urs. O unhung youth,

Come not within these doors, within this fold

The enemy of all your graces lives;

Your brother no, no brother, yet the son—

Yet not the son, I will not call him son;

He will not call his father, to call his father,

Hath heard your praises, and this night, if he means
To burn the lodging where you used to lie,

And you within it 'till the end of that,

He will have other means to cut you off,

I everbless him, and his particular,

This is no place, this house is but a buttery;

Abstain from it, it is not eatable.

Ol. Why, where, where, where, wouldst thou have me go?

Amm. No matter whither, so you come not here.

Ol. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg?

Urs., with a base and basterdous sneer, enter, (toed)

A thievish look, on the common read.

Thick must do, or know not what to do,

Yet thus I will not do, do how I can.

And rather subject me to the abuse

Of a diverted brood, and bloody brother.

Amm. But he not so, I have two hundred crowns,

The thirty he I said under your father,

Which did stare to be my former nurse.

When service should in my old hands be lane,

And unweighted age in corners thrown

Take't and He that dots the ravens feed,

Yea, professedly eates for the sparrow,

Be content to age! Here is the good:

All this I give you. Let me be your servant;

Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty:

For in your youth I never did apply

Hand for selection in my blood;

Not did not with unashamed headway why

The means of weakness and debility.
Come hither, come hither; here shall he see
No enemy,
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more, I pr'ythee, more.

Ami. It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jacques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, I pr'ythee, more. I can suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel sucks eggs: More, I pr'ythee, more.

Ami. My voice is ragged; I know, I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me, I do desire you to sing: Come, more; another stanza; Call you them stanzas?

Ami. What you will, monsieur Jacques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing, come hither.

Ami. More at your request, than to please myself.

Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any maestro, I'll thank you: but that they call compliment, is like the encounter of two dog-apes; and when a man thanks me heartily, mettucks, I have given him a penny, and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.

Ami. Well, I'll end the song.—Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree: he hath been all this day to look you.

Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him. He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he; but I give heaven thanks, and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come.

SONG.

Who doth ambition shew, [All together here.]
And loves to live i' th' sun,
Seeking the food he eats,
And pleas'd with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither; come hither,
Here shall he see
No enemy,
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. I'U give you a verse to this note, that I made yesterday in despite of my invention.

Ami. And I'll sing it.

Jaq. Thus it goes;
If it do come to pass,
That any man turn ass,
Leaving his wealth and ease,
A stubborne will to please,
Ducalome, ducalome, ducalome;
Here shall he see,
Gross foole as he,
An if he will come to me.

Ami. What's that ducalome?

Jaq. 'Tis a Greek invocation, to call fools into a circle. 'I'll go sleep if I can; if I cannot, I'll raiy against all the first-born of Egypt.

Ami. And I'll go seek the duke; his banquet is prepar'd. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adm. Dear master, I can go no further; 0, I die lor food! Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little: if this uncoth forest yield any thing savage, 1 will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee.
Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For thou canst not be comforted while at the arm's end: I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I'll give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Well said! thou look'st cheerily: and I'll be with thee quickly.—Yet thou liest in the bleak air! Come, I will bear thee to some shelter; and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam! [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The same. A Table set out.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Lords, and others.
Duke S. I think he be transform'd into a beast; For I can no where find him like a man.
1 Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence; Here was he merry, hearing of a song.
Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical, We shall have shortly discord in the spheres:— Go, seek him; tell him I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

1 Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.
Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this,
That your poor friends must woo your company? What! you look merrily.
Jaq. A fool! a fool!—I met a fool i' th' forest, A motley fool;—a miserable world!— As I do live by food, I met a fool; Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun, And rai'd on lady Fortune in good terms, In good set terms,—and yet a motley fool. Good-morrow, fool, quoth I: No, sir, quoth he, Call me not fool, till heaven hath sent me fortune: And then he drew a dial from his poke; And looking on it with lack-lustre eye, Says, very wisely, It is ten o' clock: Thus may we see, quoth he, how the world wages: 'Tis but an hour ago, since it was nine; And after an hour more, 'twill be eleven; And in, from hour to hour, we ri pe and ri pe, And then, from hour to hour, lou se and rot and rot, And thereby hangs a tale. Who ever heard The motley fool thus moral on the time, My lungs began to crow like chanterelle, That fools should be so deep contemplative; And I did laugh, sans intermission, An hour by his dial.—O noble fool! A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.
Duke S. What fool is this?
Jaq. O worthy fool!—One that hath been a cour- And say, if ladies be but young, and fair, [tier; They have the gift to know it: and in his brain,— Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit After a voyage,—he hath strange places crammed With observation, the which he vents In mangled forms;—O, that I were a fool! I am ambitious for a motley coat.
Duke S. Thou shalt have one.
Jaq.

It is my only suit; Provided, that you weed your better judgments Of all opinion that grows rank in them, That I am wise. I must have liberty To blow on whom I please: for so fools have: And they that are most galled with my folly, They most must laugh: And why, sir, must they so? The why is plain as way to parish church:
He, that a fool doth very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart, To seem senseless of the bob; If not, The wise man's folly is the fool's best
Even by the squandering glances of the fool.
Invest me in my motley; give me leave
To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of the infected world, If they will patiently receive my medicine. [do.
Duke S. Most mischievous fool, in chiding sin! For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself; And all the embossed sores, and head evils, That thou with licence of free foot hast caught, Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.
Jaq. Why, who, in conscience, to the good,
That can therein tax any private party?
Duke S. Most mischievous fool, in chiding sin! For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea,
Till that the very means do ebb?
Duke S. Most mischievous fool, in chiding sin! For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say, The city-woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders?
Whoever come in, and say that I mean her,
When such a one as she, such is her neighbour? Or what is he of basest function,
That says, his bravery is not on my cost, (Thinking that I mean him,) but therein suits
His folly to the mettle of my speech!
Jaq. What? How, and where? I do not see wherein,
My tongue hath wrong'd thee; and if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free,
Why then, my taxing like a wild goose flies,
Unclaim'd of any man.—But who comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.
Jaq. What? Why, I have eat none yet.
Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be serv'd.
Orl. Of what kirtle should this cock come of?
Duke S. Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy dis- Or else a rude despiser of good manners, [tress; That in civility thou seem'st so empty?
Orl. You touch'd my vein at first; the thorny point Of base distress hath ta'en from me the show Of smooth civility: yet talk as I in land bred,
And know some nurture: But forbear, I say;
He did that touches any of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered.
Jaq. As you will not be answered with reason,
I must die, [shall force
Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness More than your force move us to gentleness.
Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.
Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you
I thought, that all things had been savage here; And therefore put I on the countenance Of stern commandment: But whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs, Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time; If ever you have look'd on better days;
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church; If ever sat at any good man's feast;
If ever from your eye a tear did leak,
And know what 'tis to pity, and be pitied;
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be;
In the which hope, I blush, and hide my sword
Duke S. True ist that we have seen better days;
And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church;
And sat at good men's feasts: and wip'd our eyes
Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd
And therefore sit you down in gentleness,
And take upon command what help we have,
That to your wanting may be ministred.

Orl. Then, but forbear your food a little while,
Whites, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love; till he be first suffoc'd,— Oppress'd with two weak evils, age, and hunger,—
I will not touch a bit.

Duke S. Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.

Orl. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort!

Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy;
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play in.

Jay: All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits, and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first, the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms;
And then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school: And then the lover;
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eye-draw; Then a soldier:
Full of strange mans, and beard'd like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth: And then, the justice;
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part: The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon;
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound: Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome: Set down your venerable bar.
And let him feed. [den]

Orl. I thank you most for him.
Adam. So had you need; I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.
Duke S. Welcome, fall to; I will not trouble you
As yet, to question you about your fortunes: —
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

Aimiens sings.

SONG.
I. Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Though art not so wild
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.
Heigh, he! sing, heigh, he! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Thou, heigh, ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.

II. Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot;
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.
Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good sir Rowland's
As you have whisper'd faithfully, you were; [son,—
And as mine eye doth his elogies witness
Most truly hind'd, and living in your face,—
Be truly welcome hither: I am the duke.
That lov'd your father: The residue of your fortune,
Go to my cave and tell me.—Good old man,
Thou art right welcome as thy master is;
Support him by the arm.—Give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Oliver, Lords,
and Attendants.

Duke F. Not seecing since? Sir, sir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made mercy,
I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present: But look to it;
Find out thy brother, where'so'er he is:
Seek him with candle: bring him dead or living,
Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory,
Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands;
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth,
Of what we think against thee.
Oli. O, that thy highness knew my heart in this!
I never loved my brother in my life.
Duke F. To more villain than.—Well, push him out
And let my officers of such a nature [of doors;
Make an extent upon his house and lands:
Do this expeditiously, and turn him going. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Forest.

Enter Orlando, with a paper.

Oli. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And thou, thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.
Run, run, Orlando; carve, on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well; but as there is no more
AS YOU LIKE IT.

JACQUES And then the lover

Act II, Sc. 1
ACT III. SCENE II.

Her worth, being mounted on the wind,
Through all the world bears Rosalind.

All the picture that thou dost look'd,
Are but black to Rosalind.

Let no face be kept in mind.
But the fairest of Rosalind.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so, eight years together;
Dinners, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted:
it is the right better woman's rank to market.

Ros. Out, fool!

Touch. For a taste:

If a hart do lack a hind,
Let him seek out Rosalind.
If the cat will after kind,
So, be sure, will Rosalind.

Winter garments must he lin'd,
So must slender Rosalind.

They that reap, must sheaf and bind;
Then to cart with Rosalind.

Sweetest nut hath sweetest wind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.
He that sweetest rose will find,
Must find love's prick, and Rosalind.

This is the very false gallop of verses; Why do you infect yourself with them?

Ros. Peace, you dull fool: I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.

Ros. I'll graff it with you, and then I shall graff it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit in the country: for you will be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper.

Ros. Peace!

Here comes my sister, reading; stand aside.

Cel. Why should this desert silent be?
For it is unpeopled? No;
Touches I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings shew:
Some, how brief the life of man,
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span,
Buckles in his sum of age.
Some, of violent rows,
'Tis the souls of friend and friend:
But upon the fairest boughs,
Or at every sentence's end,

Will I Rosalinda write,
Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little shew.

Therefore heaven nature charg'd
That one body should be fill'd
With all graces wide enlarg'd:
Nature presently distil'd
Helen's cheek, but not her heart;
Cleopatra's majesty;
Athena's better part;
And Lucifer's mortality.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By celestial swatious seed's;
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts
It have the touches dearest prize'd.

Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

Ros. O most gentle Jupiter! — what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cry'd, Have patience, good people!
Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?

Cel. It is as easy to count atomies, as to resolve the propositions of a lover:—but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with a good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropp'd acorn.

Ros. It may well be call'd Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.

Cel. Give me audience, good madam.

Rosl. Proceed.

Cel. There lay he, stretch'd along, like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I pray thee: it carvets very unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.

Ros. O ominous! he comes to kill my heart.

Cel. I would sing my song without a burden: thou bring'st me out of tune.

Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Ros. You bring me out:—Soft! comes he not here?

OrL. 'Tis he; sink by, and note him.

Jaq. I thank you for your company; but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.

OrL. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society.

Jaq. Good be with you; let's meet as little as we can.

OrL. I do desire we may be better strangers.

Jaq. I pray you, mar no more trees with writing love-songs in their barks.

OrL. I pray you, mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favourably.

Jaq. Rosalind is your love's name?

OrL. Yes, just.

Jaq. I do not like her name.

OrL. There was no thought of thinking you, when she was christened.

Jaq. What stature is she of?

OrL. Just as high as my heart.

Jaq. You are full of pretty answers: Have you not been acquainted with goldsmith's wives, and con'd them out of rings?

OrL. No so; but I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.

Jaq. You have a nimble wit; I think it is made of Atalanta's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will rail against our mistress the world, and all our misery.

OrL. I will chide no breather in the world, but myself; against whom I know most faults.

Jaq. The worst fault you have, is to be in love.

OrL. 'Tis a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.

Jaq. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool, when I found you.

OrL. He's grown'd in the brook; look but in, and you shall see him.

Jaq. There shall I see mine own figure.

OrL. Which I take to be either a fool, or a cypher.

Jaq. I'll tarry no longer with you; farewell, good signior love.

OrL. I am glad of your departure; adieu, good monsieur melancholy.

Jaq. Exit Jaques.—CelL and Ros. come forward.

Ros. I will speak to him like a saucy laquay, and under that habit play the knife with him.—Do you hear, forester?

Ofr. Very well; what would you?

Ros. I pray you, what is 't a clock?

Ofr. You should ask me, what time o' day; there's no clock in the forest.

Ros. Then there's an true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time, as well as a clock.

Ofr. And why not the swift foot of time? had not that been as proper?

Ros. By no means, sir: Time travels in divers paces with divers persons: I'll tell you who time ambles withal, who time trots withal, who time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.

Ofr. I pr'ythee, who doth he trot withal?

Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemnized; if the interim be but a se'nnight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Ofr. Who ambles withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin, and a rich man that hath not the goat: for the one sleeps easily, because he cannot study; and the other lives merely, because he feels no pain: the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful learning; the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penny: These time and time again.

Ofr. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows: for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.

Ofr. Who stays it still withal?

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation: for they sleep between their term and term, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Ofr. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Ofr. Are you a native of this place?

Ros. As the canoe, that you see dwell where she is kindled.

Ofr. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many; but, indeed, an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an in–land man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many lectures against it; and I thank God, I am not a woman, to be touched with so many giddy offences as he hath generally tax'd their whole sex withal.

Ofr. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal; they were all like one another, as half-pence are: every one fail'd seeming monstrous, till his fellow fail'd came to match it.

Ofr. I pr'ythee, recount some of them.

Ros. No; I will not cast away my physic, but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on Brambles; all, forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind: if I could meet that fancy–monger, I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Ofr. I am he that is so love–shaked; I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon you: he taught you how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure you are not prisoner.

Ofr. What were his marks?

Ros. A lean cheek; which you have not; a blue eye, and snak'en; which you have not; an unquestionable spirit; which you have not; a beard neglected; which you have not; but I pardon you for that; for, simply, your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue: —Then your nose should be un–garter'd, your bonnet unhanded, your sleeve unbuttoned, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. But you are no such man; you are rather point–device in your accoutrements; as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of any other.

Ofr. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it? you may as soon make her that you love believe it; which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than to confess she does; that is one of the points in the which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Ofr. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

Ofr. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much.

Ros. Love is merely a madness; and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip, as madness do: and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too: Yet I profess curing it by counsel.

Ofr. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes; one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me: At which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and boking; proud, fantastical, upish, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly any thing; as boys and women are for the most part cull'd on the colour: would now like him, now hate him; then entertain him, then forswear him; now weep for him, then spit at him; that I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love, to a living humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nuck merely monastic: And thus I cured him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in't.

Ofr. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me Rosalind, and come every day to my eote, and woo me.

Ofr. Now, by the faith of my love, I will; tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll shew it you: and, by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest you live: Will you go?

Ofr. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind.—Come, sister, will you go? [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Enter Touchstone and Audrey:

Jacques at a distance, observing them.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey; I will fetch up your goats, Audrey: And how, Audrey? am I the man yet? Dost my simple feature content you?

And. You your features! Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Greeks.

_As_ laughed and marry, who pigeons will to the

[Aside.]

Touch. When a man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seceded with the forward child, understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room.—_Truly,_ I would the gods had made me poetical.

Ald. I do not know what poetical is: Is it honest in deed, and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry; and what they swear in poetry, may be said, as lovers, they do feign.

And. Do you wish then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly, for then swear'st to me, thou art honest; now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst feign.

Ald. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No, truly, unless thou wert hard-favour'd: for honesty coupled to beauty, is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

_Jag. A material fool!_ [Aside.]

Ald. Well, I am not fair; and therefore I pray the gods make me honest.

Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul slut, were to put good meat into an unequal dish.

Ald. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am not a slut.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness! sluttishness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee, and to that end. I have been with sir Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village; who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us.

_Jag. I would fain see this meeting._ [Aside.]

Ald. Well, the gods give us joy!

Touch. Amen. A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. But what though! Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said,—Many a man knows no end of his goods: right! many a man has good horses and knows of them. Well, that is the dovery of his wife; 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even so:—Poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor: and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Here comes sir Oliver:—Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are well met: Will you despatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Or. Are there none here to give the woman a kiss? Touch. I will not take her on the gift of any man.

Sir Or. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

_Jag. [Discovering himself.]_ Proceed, proceed; I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good master What ye call't: How do you, sir? You are very well met: God'd you for your last company? I am very glad to see you:—Even a toy in hand here, sir.—Nay, pray, be cover'd.

_Jag. Will you be married, motley?_ Touch. As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons hill, so wellloyd would be nilling.

_Jag. And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join waxcots: then one of you will prove a shrunk pannel, and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not like to marry me well: and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

[Aside.]

_Jag. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee._

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey; We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good master Oliver!

---O sweet Oliver, O brave Oliver,

Leave me not be'lih' thee;

But—Wind away,

Begone I say,

I will not to wedding wi' thee.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Before a Cottage.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. Never talk to me, I will weep.

Cel. Do, I pry'thee; but yet have the grace to consider, that tears do not become a man.

Ros. But have I not cause to weep?

Cel. As good cause as one would desire; therefore weep.

Ros. His very hair is of the disseambled colour.

Cel. Something browner than Judas's: marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

Ros. I'faith, his hair is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour: your chesnut was ever the only colour.

Ros. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy hands: he can no more kiss than the common touch of false reckonings: He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

Ros. I met the duke yesterday, and had much question with him: He asked me, of what parentage I was; I told him, of as good as he; so he laug'd and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Cel. O, that's a brave man: he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover: as a puny tilter, that spurs his horse but on Enter Corin.

Cor. Mistress, and master, you have oft enquired
After the shepherd that complain'd of love;
Who you saw sitting by me on the turf,
Praising the proud disdainful shepherdesse
That was his mistress.

Cor. Well, and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd,
Between the palecomplexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,
Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you,
If you will mark it.

Ros. O, come let us remove:
The sight of lovers feedeth those in love—
Bring us unto this sight, and you shall say
I'll prove a busy actor in their play.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Sil. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe:
Say, that you love me not; but say not so
In bitterness: The common executioner,
Whose heart the accentual'sight of death makes
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck, [hard.
But first begs pardon; Will you stern be
Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin, at a distance.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner;
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:
'Tis not for thee. Rivalry, and envy,
That eyes,—that are the frailst and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atoms,—
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now I do frown on thee with all my heart;
And, if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee.
Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down;
Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,
Lie not, to save, and very much to die.
Now shew the wound mine eye hath made in thee:
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The caitiff and capable impressure
Thy palm some moment keeps: but now mine eyes,
When I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Sil. O dear Phebe,
If ever, (as that ever may be near,) You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows make.

Phe. But, till that time
Come not thou near me: and, when that time comes,
Afflict me with thy mock's, pity me not;
As, till that time, I shall not pity thee.

Ros. And why, I pray you? [Advancing] Who might be your mother,
That ye mould, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched? What though you have more
(As, by my faith, I see no more in you [beauty, Than without candle may go dark to bed,)
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?
I see no more in you, than in the ordinary
Of nature's sale-work:—O'd my little life! I think, she means to tangle my eyes too:

No, 'faith, proud mistress, hope not after it:
'Tis not your inked brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream.
That can entame my spirits to your worship,—
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy south, puffing with wind and rain?
You are a thousand times a properer man,
Then she a woman: 'Tis such fools as you,
That make the world full, of ill-favour'd children:
'Tis not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper,
Than any of her lineaments can shew her;—
But, mistress, know yourself, down on your knees,
And thank heaven, fasting, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell what you can; you are not for all markets:
Cry the man mercy; love him; take his offer;
Foul is most soul, being foul to be a scoffer.
So, take her to thee, shepherd:—fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a year together;
I had rather you chide, than this man woo.

Ros. And write in love with fresh and fervid fouls,
And she'll fall in love with my anger: If it be true so, as fast
As she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll sance her with bitter words.—Why look you so upon me?

Phe. For no ill will I bear you.

Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me.
For I am fatter than vows made in wine:
Besteas if you not. I'll shew you my house,
'Tis at the tuft of olives, over hard by:
Will you go, sister?—Shepherd, ply her hard:—

Come, sister:—Shepherdess, look on him better,
And he not proud; though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as he.

Come to our flock.

Thy very grave! O, Corin! Rosalind, Celia, and Corin, at a distance.

Phe. Dead shepherd! now I find thy saw of might;
Who ever bord'd, that bord'd not at first sight?

Sil. Sweet Phebe,

Phe. Ha! what say'st thou, Silvius?

Sil. Sweet Phebe, pity me.

Phe. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.

Sil. Whatsoe'er sorrow is, relief would be;
If you do stare at mine eye, and at my corners.
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd.

Phe. Thou hast my love; is not that neighbourly?

Sil. I would have you.

Phe. Why, that were covetousness.

Silvius, the time was, I did hate thee;
And yet it is not, that I bear thee love;
But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure; and I'll employ thee too:
But do not look for further recompense,
Than thine own gladness that thou art employ'd.

Sil. So holy and so perfect is my love,
And I will such a poverty of grace,
That I shall think it a most plentiful crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reapeth: loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon. [while

Phe. Knowst thou the youth that spoke to me ere
Sil. Not very well, but I have met him o'ert
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old carlot once was master of.

Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him:
'Tis but a peevish boy:—yet he talks well:—
But what care I for words? yet words do well,
When he that speaks them pleasest those that hear;
It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty.
But sure he's proud; and yet his pride becomes him
He'll make a proper man: The best thing in him
Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.
He is not tall; yet for his years he's tall:
His leg is but so sort; and yet 'tis well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip,
A little riper and more lusty red;
That mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the difference
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled dampness.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him: but, for my part,
I love him not, nor hate him not; and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him:
For what had he to do to chide at me?
He said, mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me;
I marvel, why I answer'd not again:
But that's all one; omission is no quittance.
I'll write to him a very taunting letter,
And thou shalt bear it: Wilt thou, Silvius?
Sil. Phæbe, with all my heart.
Phæ. I'll write it straight;
The matter's in my head, and in my heart:
I will be bitter with him, and passing short:
Go with me, Silvius. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I pr'ythee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.

Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than laughing.

Ros. Those, that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows; and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a post.

Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects: and, indeed, the sordid contemplation of my travels, in which my oftentimes rumination wraps me, is a most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear you have sold your own lands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad: I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad; and to travel for it too.

Orl. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind!

Jaq. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: Look, you lips, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country: be out of love with your nativity, and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola. [Exit Jaques.]

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love? He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but one-thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapp'd him o' the shoulder, but I warrant him heart-while.

Orl. Pardon, me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight; I bad as lie bef'ood o' a snail.

Orl. Of a snail?

Ros. Ay, of a snail: for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head; a better joiturer, I think, than you can make a woman: Besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for: but he comes armed in his forehead, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Cel. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me; for now I am in a holier humour, and like enough to consent:—What would you say to me now, an I were your very Rosalind?

Orl. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Orl. How if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then she puts you to intreaty, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress; or I should think my honesty rather than my wit.

Orl. What of my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your snit. Anm not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person, I say—I will not have you.

Orl. Then, in mine own person, I die.

Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old; and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, nudefleat, in a love-case. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Greek club; yet he did what he could to die before; and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned; and the foolish chroniclers of that age found it was—Hero of Sestus. But these are all lies; men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind; for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly: But ACT IV.—SCENE III.

come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-disposition; and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me, Rosalind.
Ros. Yes, faith will I, Fridays, and Saturdays, and all.

Orl. And wilt thou have me?
Ros. Ay, and twenty such.

Orl. What say'st thou?
Ros. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so.

Ros. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us.—Give me your hand, Orlando:—What do you say, sister?

Orl. Pray thee, marry us.
Cel. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin.—Will you, Orlando,—
Cel. Go to:—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Orl. I will.

Ros. Ay, but when?

Cel. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say,—I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Orl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but,
—do take thee, Orlando, for my husband: There a girl goes before the priest: and, certainly, a woman's thought runs on her actions.

Cel. So do all thoughts: they are winged.

Ros. Now tell me, how long you would have her, after you have possessed her.

Orl. For ever, and a day.

Ros. Say a day, without the ever: No, no, Orlando; men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maid, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen; more clamorous than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a man, and that when they are inclined to sleep.

Orl. But will my Rosalind do so?

Cel. By my life, she will do as I do.

Orl. O, but she is wise.

Ros. Or else she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder: Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say,—Wit, whither wilt?

Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed.

Orl. And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

Ros. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

Ros. Alas, dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours.

Orl. I must attend the duke at dinner; by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways:—I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less:—that flattering tongue of yours won me: 'tis but one cast away, and so,— —come, death. Two o'clock is your hour?

Orl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.
Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most partial in break-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful: therefore beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Orl. With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: So, adieu.

Ros. Well, time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try:—Adieu!

Cel. You have simply misus'd our sex in your love-prate: we must have your doubtlet and hose plucked over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Ros. O, coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how my foolish deep I am in love! But it cannot be sound'd: such affection hath an unknown bottom like the bay of Portugal.

Cel. Or, rather, bottomless; that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

Ros. No, that same wicked bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, conceived of spleen, and horn of madness: that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes, because his own are out, let him be judge, how deep I am in love!—I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando: I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come.

Cel. And I'll sleep.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter Jacques and Lords, in the habit of Foresters.

Jacq. Which is he that killed the deer?

1 Lord. Sir, it was I.

Jacq. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horn upon his head, for a branch of victory:—

—Have you no song, forester, for this purpose?

2 Lord. Yes, sir.

Jacq. Sing it; 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

SONG.

1. What shall be have, that kill'd the deer?

2. His leather skin, and horns to wear.

1. Then sing him home:

Make thy song:

Take thou no scorn, to wear the horn;

'Twas a good guy thou must wear.

1. Thy father's father wore it;

2. And thy father bore it:

All. The horn, the horn, the lusty horn,

Is not a thing to laugh to scorn.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Jacq. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? And here much Orlando!

Cel. I warrant you, with pure love, and troubled brain, he hath 'em in his bow and arrows, and is gone forth—to sleep. —Look, who comes here.

Enter Silvius.

Sil. My errand is to you, fair youth; My gentle Phoebe bid me give you this:

[Giving a letter.
Enter Oliver.

Oli. Good-morrow, fair ones: Pray you, if you Where, in the purliche of this forest, stands [know A sheeph-cote, fenc'd about with olive-trees?]

Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbour-hi The rank of sisters, by the murmuring stream; [tom, Left on your right hand, brings you to the place: But at this hour the house doth keep itself, There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue, Then I should know you by description; Such garments, and such years: The boy is fair, Of female favour, and himself a

Like a ripe sister: but the woman low, And browner than her brother. Are not you

The owner of the house I did inquire for?

Cel. His no boast, being ask'd, to say, we ace. Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both: And to that youth he calls his Rosalind, He sends this bloody napkin; Are you he? Oli. I am: what must we understand by this? Oli. Some of my shame; if you will know of me What man I am, and how, and why, and where, This handkerchief was stain'd.

Cel. I pray you, tell it. Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from you, He left a promise to return again Softly, and pacing through the forest, Chevying the food of sweet and bitter fancy, Lo, what belf! he threw his eye aside, And, mark, what object did present itself! Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age, And high top braid with dry antiquity, A wretched ragged man, d'gerown with hair, Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck A green and glided snake had wreath'd itself, Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd The opening of his mouth; but suddenly Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd itself, And with indented glides did slip away Into a bush: under which bush's shade A likeness, with adders all drawn dry, Lay crouching on the ground, most like-like watch, When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis The royal disposition of that beast, To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead: This seen, Orlando did approach the man, And found it was his brother, his elder brother. Cel. O, I have heard him speak of that same brother; And he did render him the most unnatural That liv'd 'mongst men.

Oli. And well he might so do, For well I know he was unnatural.

Cel. But, to Orlando:—Did he leave him there, Food to the suck'd and hungry liones? Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purposé so; But kindness, nobler ever than revenge, And nature, stronger than his just occasion, Made him give battle to the liones, Who quickly fell before him; in which hurtling From miserable slumber I awak'd.

Cel. Are you his brother?

Ros. Was it you he rescued? Cel. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him? Oli. Twas I; but 'tis not I: I do not shame To tell you what I was, since my conversion So sweety tastes, being the thing I am.

Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?—

Oli. By, and by. When from the first to last, betwixt us two, Tears our recompenses had most kindly bathe'd,
ACT V.—SCENE II.

As, how I came into that desert place:—
In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,
Who gave me fresh array, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brother's love;
Who led me instantly unto his cave,
There stripp'd himself, and here upon his arm
The lioness had torn some flesh away,
Which all this while had bleed; and now he fainted,
And cry'd, in fainting, upon Rosalind.
Brief, I recover'd him; bound up his wound;
And, after some small space, being strong at heart,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am.
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise, and to give this napkin,
Dy'd in his blood, unto the shepherd youth
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.
Cel. Why, how now, Ganymede? sweet Ganymede?
[ROSALIND新たにします。]
Oh! Many will swoon when they do look on blood.
Cel. There is more in it:— Cousin—Ganymede!
Oh! Look, he recovers.
I would, I were at home.
Cel. We'll lead you thither:—
I pray you, will you take him by the arm?
Oh! Be of good cheer, youth:— You a man?—
You lack a man's heart.
Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sir, a body would think the countenance counterfeited: I pray you, tell your brother bow well I counterfeited. —Heigh ho!—
Oh! This was not counterfeit; there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was a passion of earnest.
Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.
Oh! Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.
Ros. So I do: but I faith I should have been a woman by right.
Cel. Come, you look paler and paler: pray you, draw homewards:— Good sir, go with us.
Oh! That will I, for I must bear answer back
How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.
Ros. I shall devise something: But, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him.— Will you go? [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey; patience, gentle Audrey.
Aud. Touch. the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.
Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey, a most vile Mar-text: But, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.
Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis: he hath no interest in me in the world: here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown: By my troth, we that have good wits, have much to answer for: we shall be flouting; we cannot hold.
Will. Good even, Audrey.
Aud. God ye good even, William.
Will. And good even to you, sir.
Touch. Good even, gentle friend: Cover thy head, cover thy head; may, pr'ythee, be covered. How old are you, friend?
Will. Five and twenty, sir.
Touch. A ripe age: is thy name William?

If'ill. William, sir.
Touch. A fair name: Wast born i' the forest here?
Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.
Touch. Thank God!—a good answer: Art rich?
Will. 'faith, sir, so, so.
Touch. So, so, it is good, very good, very excellent good:— and yet it is not; it is but so so. Art thou wise?
Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.
Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remem-ber a saying: The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool. The beauteous philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?
Will. I do, sir.
Touch. Give me your hand: Art thou learned?
Will. No, sir.
Touch. Thee learn this of me: To have, is to have: For it is a figure in rhetoric, that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other: For all your writers do consent, that ipse is he; now you are not ipse, for I am he.
Will. Which he, sir.
Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman:
Therefore, you clown, abandon,— which is in the vulgar, leave,—the society, —which in the boorish company is company,— of this female,—which in the common is,— woman, which together is, abandon the society of this female; or clown, thou penshurst; or, to thy better understanding, diet; to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado thee, in steel; I will Randy with thee in fac-tion: I will o'er-run thee with policy; I will thee a hundred and fifty ways; therefore tremble, and depart.
Aud. Do, good William.
Will. God rest you merry, sir. [Exit.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Our master and mistress seek you: come, away, away.
Touch. Trip, Audrey, trip, Audrey:— I attend, I attend.
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Orlando and Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible, that on so little acquaintance you should like her! that, but seeing, you should love her? and, loving, woo? and, wooing, she should grant? and will you persever to enjoy her?
Orl. Neither call the godliness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her sudden consenting: but say with me, I love Aliena; say, with her, that she loves me; consent with both, that we may enjoy each other; it shall be to your good; for my father's house, and all the revenue that was old sir Rowland's, will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Enter Rosalind.

Orl. You have my consent. Let your wedding be to-morrow: thither will I invite the duke, and all his contented followers: Go you, and prepare Aliena for, look you, here comes my Rosalind.
Roz. God save you, brother.
Orl. And you, fair sister.
Roz. O, my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf.
Orl. It is my arm.
Ros. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Ros. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeit-ed to swoon, when he shew'd me your handkerchief?

Orl. Ay, and greater wonders than that.

Ros. O, I know all you are:—Nay, 'tis true; there was never any thing so sudden, but the fight of two rams, and Caesar's tirasional bag of—

I came, saw, and overcome. For your brother and my sister no sooner met, but they looked; no sooner looked, but they loved; no sooner loved, but they sighed; no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason; no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedy: and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage: they are in the very wrath of love, and they will together; clubs cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow; and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy, in having what he wishes for.

Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind!

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I will weary you no longer then with idle talking. I know of me then (for now I speak to some purpose,) that I know you are a gentleman of good conceit: I speak not this, that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch, I say, I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most proficient in this art, and not yet damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her:—

I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Orl. Speakest thou in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician: Therefore, put you in your best array, bid your friends: for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Look, here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phoe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, To shew the letter that I writ to you.

Ros. I care not, if I have: it is my study, To seem despitful and ungentle to you; You art not more follow'd by a faithful shepherd; Look up hem, love him: he worships you.

Phoe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears:—

And so am I for Phebe.

Phoe. And I for Ganymede.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ros. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to he all made of fantasy, All made of passion, and all made of wishes; All adoration, duty, and observance, All humbleness, all patience, and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance; And so am I for Phebe.

Phoe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Phoe. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

[To Rosalind.]

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you!

[To Phoebe.]

Ros. Who do you speak to, why blame you me to love you?

Orl. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear.

Ros. Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon.—I will help you, [to Silvius] if I can:—I would love you, [to Phoebe] if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together.—I will marry you, [to Phoebe] if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow:—I will satisfy you, [to Orlando] if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow:—I will content you, [to Silvius] if what you please content you, and you shall be married to-morrow.—As you [to Orlando] love Rosalind, meet;—as you [to Silvius] love Phebe, meet. And as I love no woman, I'll meet.—So, fare you well; I have left you commands.

Sil. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phoe. Nor 1.

Orl. Nor 1. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audrey; to-morrow will we be married.

And. I do desire it with all my heart: and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. Here comes two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

2 Page. We are for you: sit i'th' middle.

1 Page. Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hue's; which are the only prologues to a bad voice? 2 Page. I'faith, i'faith; and both in a tune, like two gypsies on a horse.

SONG.

1. It was a lover and his lass,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,

That o'er the green corn field did pass

In the spring time, the only pretty rank time,

When birds do sing, hey ding a ding ding:

Sweet lovers love the spring.

2. Between the acres of the rue,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,

These pretty country folks would lie

In spring time, &c.

3. This carol they began that hour,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,

How that a life was but a flower

In spring time, &c.
IV. And therefore take the present time.
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nono;
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, so.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no greater matter in the duty, yet the note was very untimely.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I connit but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be with you; and God med your voices! Come, Audrey. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not; as those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phebe.

Rosal. Patience once more, whiles our compact is urg'd:—

You say, if I bring in your Rosalind. [To the Duke.
You will bestow her on Orlando here? [with her.
Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give Ros.
And you say you will have her, when I bring her? [To Orlando.
Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.
Rosal. You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing! [To Phebe.
Phe. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Rosal. But, if you do refuse to marry me,

You'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd!
Phe. So is the bargain.

Rosal. You say, you'll have Phebe, if she will? [To Silvius.

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Rosal. I have promised to make all this matter even.

Keep you your word, O duke, to give your daughter; —

You join'st, Orlando, to receive his daughter. —

Keep your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me; Or else, coming to meet the shepherd, you shall.

Keep your word, Silvius, that you'll marry her, If she refuse me:— and from hence I go,

To make these doubts all even. [Exeunt Ros. & Celi.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him, Methought he was a brother to your daughter; But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born; And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he reports to be a great magician, Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jag. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark! Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all!
Jag. Good my lord, bid him welcome; This is the metely-minded gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier he swears.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taitors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jag. And how was that ta'en up?

Touch. Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jag. How seventh cause! Good my lord, like this Duke S. I like him very well. [fallow.
Touch. God'd you, sir; I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country courators, to swear, and to forewear:— according as marriage binds, and blood breaks:— A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own; a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will: Rich honesty doth walls like a mirie, sir, in a poor-house:— as your pearl, in your fowl oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and entertaining.
Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Jag. But for the seventh cause, how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed:—Bear your body more seeming, Audrey:—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard; he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: This is called the Retort courteous. If I sent him word again, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: This is called the Quip modest. If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: This is called the Reply churlish. If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spoke not true: This is called the Reproof valiant. If again, it was not well cut, he would say I lie: This is called the Countercheck quarrelsome: and so to the Lie circumstantial, and the Lie direct.

Jag. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no further than the Lie circumstantial, nor he durst not give me the Lie direct; and so we measured swords, and parted.

Jag. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O, sir, we quarrel in print, by the book: as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees:—the Lie Retort courteous, the second, the Quip modest, the third, the Reply churlish, the fourth, the Reproof valiant, the fifth, the Countercheck quarrelsome, the sixth, the Lie with circumstance, the seventh, the Lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct; and you may avoid that too, with an If. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If; as, If you said so, then I said so: And they shook hands, and swore brothers. Your If is the only peace-maker, much virtue in If.

Jag. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

Duke S. He uses his folly like a talking-horse, and under the presentation of that, he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman's clothes; and Celia.

Still Music.

Hymn. Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things make even:
Some, and some, are better.

Good duke, receive thy daughter,
Hymen from heaven brought her,
You, brought her hither,
That thou might'st join her hand with his,
Whose heart within her bosom be.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

Ros. To you I give myself, for I am yours.

To Duke S. [To Duke S.]

You I give myself, for I am yours.

[To Ors.]

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

[To Ors.]

Ors. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosaline.

[To Duke S.]

Phe. If sight and shape be true, [End.]

Why then,—my love adieu!

Ros. I'll have no father, if you be not he:—

[To Duke S.]

I'll have no husband, if you be not he:—

[To Ors.]

Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she. [To Phe.]

Hymn. Peace, but I cannot say confusion;—

'Tis I must make conclusion.

Of these most strange events:

Here's eight that must take hands,

To join in Hymen's bands,

If truth holds true contents.

You and you no cross shall part:

[To Orlando and Rosalind.]

You and you are heart in heart:

[To Oliver and Celia.

You [to Phebe] to his love must accord,

Or have a woman to your lord:—

You and you are sure together,

[To Touchstone and Audrey.]

As the winter to the warmer weather,

Whiles a wellockd hymn we sing,

Feed yourselves with questioning;

That reason wonder may diminish,

How thus we met, and these things finish.

SONG.

Wedding is great June's crown;

O blessed bond of board and bed!

Tis Hymen peoples every town;

High wedlock then be honoured:

Honour, high honour and renown,

To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome art thou to me;

Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;

Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine. [To Stay.]

Enter Jaques de Boys.

Jacques de Boys. Let me have audience for a word or two; I am the second son of old sir Rowland, That bring these tidings to this fair assembly:—

Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day Men of great worth resorted to this forest, Address'd a mighty power; which were on foot, In his own conduct, purposely to take His brother here, and put him to the sword: And to the skirts of this wild wood he came; Where, meeting with an old religious man, After some question with him, was converted Both from his enterprise, and from the world: His crown bequeathing to his banish'd brother, And all their hands restor'd to them again. That were with him exil'd: This to be true, I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man, Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding: To one, his hands with-held: and to the other, A land itself at large, a potent dukedom. First, in this forest, let us do those ends That here were well begun, and well begot: And after, every of this happy number, That have endur'd shrewd days and nights with us, Shall share the good of our returned fortune, According to the measure of their states.

Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity, And the true enjoyments:—[Exit.]

Play, music—and you bride and bridgeworks all, With measure hap'ly in joy, to the measures fall.

Jacq. Sir, by your patience; if I heard you rightly, The duke hath put on a religious life, And thrown into neglect the pompous court?

Jacques de Boys. To him will I: out of these conveniences There is much matter to be heard and learnt—

You to your former honour I bequeath; [To Duke S.]

You your patience, and your virtue, well deserves it:—

You [to Orlando] to a love, that your true faith doth merit:—

You [to Oliver] to your land, and love, and great allies:—

You [to Silvius] to a long and well deserved bed:—

And you [to Touchstone] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage Is but for two months victim:—So to your pleasure I am for other than for dancing measures. [Sirs;]

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jacq. To see no pastime, I: what you would have I'll stand by you at your abandon'd case. [Exit. Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites, And do we trust they'll end, in true delight. I: I dance.

EPilogue.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue: but it is not more unhandsome, than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true, that a good play needs no epilogue: Yet to good wine they do use good bushes; and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to confute you; and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please them: and so I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, (as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hate them,) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had heard that pleased me, compliances that liked me, and breaths that I defied not; and, I am sure, as much as I have good hearts, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I make curt'sy, bid me fare-well.

[Exit.]

Or this play the fable is wild and pleasing, I know not how the ladies will approve the fable, with which both Rosalind and Celia gave away their hearts: To Celia much may be forgiv'n for the heutenant of her friendship; the character of Jaques is natural and well preserved. The comic dialogue is very sprightly, with less manner of low buffoonery than in some other places: and the cravat part is elegant and harmonious. By hastening to the end of this work, Shakespeare sup pressed the dialogue between the washer and the hermit, and lost an opportunity of exhibiting a moral lesson in which he might have found matter worthy of his highest powers. —Johnston. The taste of the poet is here, as in many other instances, to be preferred to that of the critics. —Though Shakespeare has shown great judgment in substituting the conversion of Frederick in the prologue, which is a deal worse than the death allowed him in Lodge's novel, nothing could have been more out of keeping with the true and colour of the play, than the representation of such an event. It was a circumstance to be related and not performed. A sense so grave a character, as that between the rude duke and the aged hermit must necessarily have been, could have too appropriate place in this tale of love and mirth, and wit. In a work, like the present, calculated to unfatigue the mind and delight the imagination by a succession of pleasing incidents, every thing of a sad or solemn nature is with admirable propriety omitted, or only cursorily glanced at.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Of this play there is no edition earlier than the first folio, 1623, although it seems to have been written, in the year 1600; but the many passages of rhyme scattered through the play seem to speak it an earlier production. Meres, in 1598, mentioned a play of our author's called, Love's Labour Lost, an application which very accurately applies to this, but to no other of his plays; and its date may be perhaps assigned a year or two earlier.

The title All's Well that ends Well, is one of Camden's proverbial sentences.

The story was originally taken from Boccacio, but came immediately before Shakespeare from Painter's Gesta Nutricum, in the first vol. of the Palace of Pleasure, 40. 1566, p. 95. In the novel, however, Shakespeare is only indebted for a few leading circumstances in the craver parts of the piece. The comic business appears to be entirely of his own formation.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Count of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafeu, in mourning.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find the king a husband, madam: you, sir, a father: it is that so generally is at all times good, most of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope; and finds no other advantage in the process out only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father, (O, that had! how sad a passage 'tis!) whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have played for lack of work. 'Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession; and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam; the king very laudably, and courageously: he was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. It would it were not notorius. —Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my looking. I have those hopes of her good, that her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which make fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations are made partly, all virtuous and traitors too; in her they are the better for their simplesness; she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart, but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this, Helena, go to, no more: lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow, indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess is enemy to it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that? [f [Exit Countess.]

Ber. De thou blest, Bertram! and succeed thy manners, as in shape! thy blood, and virtue, Contend for empire in thee; and thy goodness Share with thy birth-right! Love all, trust a few, Do wrong to none; be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use; and keep thy friend Under thy own life's key: he check'd for silence, But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will, That thee may furnish, and my players push down, Fall on thy head! Farewell. — My lord.

Laf. Tis an unseason'd courier; good my lord, Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him! — Farewell, Bertram.

— [Exit Countess.]

Ber. The best wishes, that can be forged in your thoughts, [to Helena.] be servants to you! Be contented to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell, pretty lady: You must hold the credit of your father. — [Exit Bertram and Lafeu.]

Hel. O, were that all! — I think not on my father; And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like?
I have forgot him: my imagination
Carries no favour in it, but Bertram’s.
I am undone; there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away. It were all one,
That I should love a bright particular star,
And think to wed it, he is so above me:
In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.
The ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hand that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. 'Twas pity, though a plague,
To die so well; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawk-wing eye, his curls,
In our heart’s table; heart, too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he’s gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter PAROLLES.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake;
And yet I know him a notorious liar.
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix’d evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue’s steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind’s withal, full oft we see Corruption waiting on superfluous folly.
Par. Save you, fair queen.
Hel. And you, monarch.
Par. No.
Hel. And no.
Par. Are you meditating on virginity?
Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you;
Let me ask you a question: Man is enemy to virginity,
How can we be hazard’d against him?
Par. Keep him out.
Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though
Valiant in the defence, yet is weak: unfold to us some warlike resistance.
Par. There is none; man, sitting down before you,
Will undermine you, will blow you up.
Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers,
And blowers up!—is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?
Par. Virginity, being blown down, man will quicker be blown up; marry, in blowing him down again, with the breach yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature, to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational: when you give it away, you have never virgin got; till virginity was first lost. That, you were made of; it metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found; by being ever kept, it is ever lost: 'tis too cold a companion; away with it.
Hel. I will stand for’t a little, though therefore I die a virgin.
Par. There’s little can be said in’t; 'tis against the role of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers; which is most inoffiable disobedience. He, that hangs himself, is a virgin: virginity murdered itself; and should be burned in highways, out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offensiveness against nature. Virginity breeds miles, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very paring, increases; and there was never virgin got, till virginity was first lost. That, you were made of; it metal to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found; by being ever kept, it is ever lost: 'tis too cold a companion; away with it.
Hel. I will stand for’t a little, though therefore I die a virgin.
Par. Let me see: Marry, ill, to like him that order it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with't, while 'tis vendible: answer the time of request. Virginity, like an oldcourser, wears her cap out of fashion; richly suited, but unsuitable: just like the brooch and toothpick, which wear not now: Your date is better in your pie and your porridge, than in your cheek: And your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French wither’d pears; it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 'tis a wither’d pear; it was formerly; and now to cut off 'tis a wither’d pear: Will you any thing with it?
Hel. Not my virginity yet.
There shall your master have a thousand loves,
A mother, and a mistress, and a friend,
A phoenix, captain, and an enemy,
A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,
A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear;
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord duteous,
That blinking Cupid’s gossips. Now shall he——
I know not what he shall——God send him well!—
The court’s a learning place—and he is one——
Par. He’s not a young man.
Hel. That I wish well.—'Tis pity——
Par. What’s pity?
Hel. That wishing well had not a body in’t,
Which might be felt: that we, the poorer born,
Whose base stars do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And shew what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

[Exit Page.

Par. Little Helen, farewell: if I can remember the thing, I will think of you at court.
Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a charitable star.

Par. Under Mars, I.
Hel. I especially think, under Mars.
Par. Why under Mars?
Hel. The wars have so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars.
Par. For that one was good in my household.
Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.
Par. Why think you so?
Hel. You go so much backward, when you fight.
Par. That’s for advantage.
Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety: But the composition, that your valour and fear makes in you, is a virtue of a good wing, and I like the war well.
Par. I am so full of businesses, I cannot answer thee acutely; I will return perfect courtier; in the which, my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier’s counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee weak. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends: get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee: so farewell.

[Exit.
Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope; only, doth backward pull
Our slow design, when we ourselves are dull.
What power is it, which mounts my love so high?
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
The nightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes, and kiss like native things.
Impossible be strange attempts, to those
That weigh their pains in sense; and do suppose,
What hath been cannot be: Who ever strove
To shew her merit, that did miss her love?
The king's disease—my project may deceive me.
But my intents are fix'd, and will not leave me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters; Lords and others attending.

King. The Florentines and Senoys are by the ears;
Have fought with equal fortune, and continuo
A brav'ning war.

1 Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it
A certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria,
With caution, that the Florentine will move us
Hath well employ'd thee: wherein our dearest friend Prejudices the business; and would seem
To have us make denials.

2 Lord. His love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ampest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes:
Yet, for our gentlemen, that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.

2 Lord. It may well serve
A nursery to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here by?

Enter BERTRAM, LAFAY, and PAROLLES.

1 Lord. It is the count Rousillon, my good lord,
Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face;
Frank nature, rather curious than in hate,
 Hath well comp'rest thee. Thy father's moral parts
May'st thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father, and myself, in friendship
First try'd our soldiership! He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipl'd of the bravest: he lasted long;
But on us both did haggis age steal on,
And wore us out of act. It much repairs me
To talk of your good father: In his youth
He had the wit, which I can well observe
To-day in our young lords; but they may jest,
Till their own scorn return to them unsnood,
Ere they can hide their levity in honour.
So like a courteous, contempt nor bitterness
Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awk'd them; and his honour,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and, at this time,
His tongue obey'd his hand; who were below him
He us'd as creatures of another place;
And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled: Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them now,
But ours backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir,
Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb:
So in approb' in lives not his epitaph,
As in your royal speech. [ways say.

King. 'Wou'd, I were with him? He would al-
(Methinks, I hear him now: his plausive words
He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,
To grow there, and to hear,)—Let me not lye,—
Thus his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,
When it was out,—let me not lye, quoth he,
After my flame locks oil, to be the stuff
Of younger spirits, whose apprehsiive senses
All but new things disdain; whose judgments are
More fathers of their garments; whose constancies
Expire before their fashions:—This he wish'd:
I, after him, do after him wish too.
Since I nor wax, nor honey, can bring home,
I quickly were dissolved from my hive,
To give some labourers room.

2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir;

They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know't.—How long is't, count,
Since the physician at your father's death?
He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet;
Lend me an arm:—the rest have worn me out
With several applications;—nature and sickness
Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count;
My son's no dearer.

Ber. Thank your majesty. [Exit. Flourish.

SCENE III.

Rousillon.—A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS, Steward, and Clowns.

Coun. I will now hear: what say you of this gentlewoman?

Stew. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours: for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our devisings, whew of ourselves we publish them.

Coun. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: The complaints, I have heard of you, I do not all believe; 'tis my slowness, that I do not: for, I know, you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaverys yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Coun. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam, 'tis not so well, that I am poor; though many of the rich are damned: But, if I may have your ladyshin's good will to go to the world, Isbel the woman and I will do as we may.

Coun. Will thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.

Coun. In what case?

Clo. In Isbel's case, and mine own. Service is no heritage: and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body; for, they say, learn's are blessings.

Coun. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Clo. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and he must needs go, that the devil drives.

Coun. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Coun. Play the world know them?

Clo. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry, that I may repeat.
Enter Helena.

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young:
If we are nature's, these are ours; this thorn
Dooth not the rose of youth rightly blest.

Our blood to us, this to our blood is born;
It is the show and seal of nature's truth.

Where love's strong passion is impress'd in youth:
By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults;—or then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on't; I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. I know, Helen.

Hel. I am a mother to you.

Count. Mine honourable mistress.

Hel. Nay, a mother;
Why not a mother? When I said, a mother,
Methought you saw a serpent: What's in mother?
That you start at! I say, I am your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enombed mine: 'Tis often seen,
Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds:
You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan,
Yet I express to you a mother's care:—
God's mercy, maiden! does it end thy blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What's the matter,
That so distemper'd my younger cousin
The many-col'd Iris, round thine eye?
What?—that you are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam;
The count Rousillon cannot be my brother:
I am from humble, he from honon'r'd name;
No note upon my parents, his all noble;
My master, my dear lord he is; and
His servant live, and will his vassal die:
He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam; Would you were (So that my lord, your son, were not my brother,)
Indeed, my mother!—or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for, than I do for heaven,
So I were not his sister: Can't no other,
But, I your daughter, he must be my brother? [Law;
Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-
God shield, you mean it not! daughter, and mother,
So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again?
My heart bleeds, my blood will torment me.
Now I see
The mystery of your loneliness, and find
Your salt tears' head. Now to all sense 'tis gross.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

You love my son; invention is shamed,
Against the proclamation of thy passion.
Tell me, then, do not: therefore tell me true;
Tell me then, 'tis so:—for, look, thy checks
Confess it, one to the other; and thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviours,
That in their kind they speak it: only say
And he'll obstinacy in thy tongue.
That truth should be suspected: speak, 'tis so! If
It be so, you have wound a goodly eel;
If it be not, forswear't: love, or I charge thee,
As heaven shall work in me for thine avail.
To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress!

Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about; my love hath in't a bond,
Whereof the world takes note: come, come, disclose
The state of your affection; for your passion
Have to the full appeared.

Hel. Then, I confess
Here on my knee, before high heaven and you,
That before you, and next unto high heaven,
I love your son:

My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love:
Be not offended: for it hurts not him,
That he is lord of me: I follow him not
By any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him;
Yet never know how that desert should be.
I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet, in this captious and intemate sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And lack not to lose still: thus, Indian-like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But know of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love,
For loving where you do: but, if yourself,
Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever, in so true a flame of love,
Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian
Was both herself and love? O, then, give pity
To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and give, where she is sure to lose;
That seeks not to find that her search implies,
But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had not you lately an intent, speak truly,
To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

Hel. I will tell truth; by grace itself, I swear.

You know, my father left me some prescriptive
Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading,
And manifest experience, had collected
For general sovereignty: and that he would me
In bestfullest reservation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were.
More than they were in note: amongst the rest,
There is a remedly, approv'd, set down,
To care the desperate languishes, whereof
The king is render'd last.

Count. This was your motive
For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord your son made me to think of this;
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king,
Had, from the conversation of my thoughts,
Happily, been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen,
If you should tender your supposed aid,
He would receive it? He and his physicians
Are of a mind: he, that they cannot help him,
They, that they cannot help: how shall they credit
A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools,
Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself?

Hel. There's something hints,
More than my father's skill, which was the greatest
Of his profession, that his good receipt
Shall for my legacy be sanctioned
By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your ho-.
Bit give me leave to try success, I'd venture
The well-lost life of mine on his grace's cure,
By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe it?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and,
Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings
To those of mine in court; I'll stay at home,
And pray God's blessing into thy attempt:
Be gone to-morrow: and be sure of this,
What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter King, with young Lords, taking leave for the Florentine war; Bertram, Paroles, and Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lords, these warlike principles
[well:—
Do not throw from you:—and you, my lord, fare-
Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received,
And is enough for both.

1 Lord. It is our hope, sir,
After well enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords;
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen; let higher Italy
(Those bated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy,) see, that you come
Not to wo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud; I say, farewell, [jesty!]
2 Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your ma-King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them:
They say, our French lack language to dey,
If they demand; beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell.—Come hither to me.

[The King returns to a couch.

1 Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind
Par. 'Tis not his fault; the spark — [hus!]

2 Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!

Par. Most admirable; I have seen those wars.

Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with,

Too young, and the next year, and 'tis too early.

Par. An thy mind stand to it, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the foreshore to a smock,

Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,

Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn,

But one to dance with! By heaven, I'll steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Par. Commit it, count.
2 Lord. I am your accessory; and so farewell.
Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.
1 Lord. Farewell, captain.
2 Lord. Sweet monsieur Parolles!
Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.
Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals:—
You shall find in the regiment of the Spini, one captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek; it was this very sword intrenched it: say to him, I live; and observe his reports for me.
2 Lord. We shall, noble captain.
Par. Mars dote on you for his novices! [Exit Lords.]
What will you do?
Ber. Stay; the king——
Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords:
you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu; be more expressive to them: for though they stand now in the cap of the time, there, do no more true gait, eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil lead the measure, such are to be followed:
after them, and take a more dilated farewell.
Ber. And I will do so.
Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men. [Exit Bertram and Parolles.

Enter LA斐F.

Laf. Pardon, my lord, [kneeling] for me and for King. I'll see thee stand up, [my tidings.
Laf. Then here's a man
Stands, that has brought his pardon. I would, you
Had knelt'd, my lord, to ask me mercy; and
That, at my bidding, you could so stand up.
King I would I had: so I had broke thy pate,
And ask'd thee mercy for't.
Laf. Good faith, across;
But, my good lord, 'tis thus: Will you be cured
Of your incurability?

King. No.

Laf. O, will you eat
No grapes, my royal fox? yes, but you will,
My noble grapes, an if my royal fox
Could reach them: I have seen a medicine,
That's able to breathe life into a stone;
Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary,
With sprightly fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to raise king Pupin, nay,
To give Great Charlemain a pen in his hand
And write to her a love-line.

King. What her is this?

Laf. Why, doctor she; My lord, there's one arriv'd,
If you will see her,—now, by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that, in her sex, her years, profession,
Wisdom, and constancy, hath amaz'd me more
Than I dare blame my weakness: Will you see her
(For that is her demand) and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now, good Lafen,
Firing in the admiration; that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine,
By wondering how thou tookst it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you,
And not be all day neither. [Exit Lafen.

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter LA斐F, with ILEANA.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways; This is his majesty, say your mind to him:
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
His majesty seldom fears: I am Cressid's uncle,
That dare leave two together: fare you well. [Exit. King.
Now, fair one, does your business follow us?

Hel. Ay, my good lord: Gerard de Naarbon was My father: in what he did profess, well found.
King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards Knowing him, is enough. On his bed of death
Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one,
Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,
And of his old experience, the only curing,
He bade me store up, as a triple eye,
Safer than mine own two, more dear; I have so
And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd
With that malignant cause wherein the honour
Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,
I come to tender it, and my appliance,
With all boundless humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden;
But may not be so credulous of cure.—
When our most learned doctors leave us; and
The congregated college have concluded
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her inadulter estate,—I say we must not
So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malady
To empires; or to dissever so
Our great self and our credit, to esteem
A senseless help, when help past sense we deem.

Hel. My duty then shall pay me for my pains:
I will no more enforce mine office on you;
Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to hear me back again.
King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful:
Thou thought'st to help me; and such thanks I give.
As near death to those that wish him live:
But, what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do, can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy;
He that of greatest works is finisher.
Oft doth them by the weakest minister:
So holy writ in babes hath judgment shewn,
When judges have been babes. Great floods have flown
From simple sources; and great seas have dried,
When miracles have by the greatest been denied.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits,
Where hope is coldest, and despair most sits.

King. I must not hear thee; fare thee well, kind
Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid: [maid
Profers, not took, reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is barr'd:
It is not so with him that all things knows,
As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows:
But most it is presumption in us, when
The help of heaven we count the act of man.
Dearer, to my endeavours give consent:
Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.
I am not an impostor, that proclaim
Myself against the level of mine aim;
But know I think, and think I know most sure,
My art is not past power, nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? Within what space
Hope thou mine cure!

Hel. The greatest grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring;
Ere twice in muck and occidental damp
ACT II.—SCENE III.

Most Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp; Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass; What is infirm from your sound parts shall fly, Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence, What dar'st thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,—A stranglet's boldness, a divulged shame, Tragedy! by odious ballads; my maiden's name Sear'd otherwise; nay, worst of worst extended, With viest tortore let my life be ended.

King. Metlinks, in thee some blessed spirit doth His powerful sound, within an organ weak: [Speak; And what impossibility would say In common sense, sense save another way. Thy life is dear; for all, that life can rate Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate; Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, virtue, all That happiness and prime can happy call! Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate. Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try;

Hel. If I break time, or flinch in property Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die; And well deserv'd: Not helping, death's my fee;

But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my scene, and the vaults of heaven. Hel. Then shalt thou give me, with thy kindly hand, What husband in thy power I will command:

Exempted be from me the arrogance To choose from forth the royal blood of France; My low and humble name to propagate With any branch or image of thy state: But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know Is free for me to ask, then to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observ'd, Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd; So make the choice of thy own time, for I, Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely.

More should I question thee, and more I must; Though, more to know, could set more to trust; From whence thou canst not, here tended on,—But rest Unquestion'd welcome, and undoubted bliss,—Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

[FLOURISH. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Rousillon.—A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught: I know my business is but to the court. Count. To the court! what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court! Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court: he that cannot make a leg, put off's cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing; has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and tended, such a fellow, by words, were not for the court; but, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair; that fits all but-
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Laf. Not to be helped,—
Par. Right: as 'twere a man assured of an—
Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.
Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.
Laf. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.
Par. Indeed: if you will have it in sheewing, you shall read it in,—"What do you call there?—
Laf. A sheewing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.
Par. That's it I would have said, the very same.
Laf. Why, your dolphin is not luster: fore me speak in respect—
Par. Nay, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of a most faci-norous spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the—
Laf. Very hand of heaven.
Par. Ay, so I say.
Laf. In a most weak—
Par. And debile minister, great power, great transcendence: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king, as to be—
Laf. Generally thankful.

Enter King, Helen, and Attendants.
Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.
Laf. Lustièk, as the Dutchman says: 'I like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head: Why, he's able to lend her a coranto.
Par. Mort du Vinagre! Is not this Helen?
Laf. 'Tis God, I think so.
King. Go, call before me all the lords in court—
[Exit a attendent.
Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side:
And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense
Thou hast restored, a second time receive
The confirmation of my promis'd gift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.
Fair maid, send forth thine eye:—this youthful parcel
Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing,
Of every sort: sovereign power, and father's voice
I have to use: thy first election make;
Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.
Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress
Fall, when love please!—marry, to each, but one!
Laf. 'Tis a dey Curat, and his furniture,
My mouth no more were broken than these boys,
And writ as little beard.
King. Perseem them well:
Not one of those, but had a noble father.
Hel. Gentlemen,
Heaven bath, through me, restor'd the king to health.
All. We understand it, and thank heaven for—
Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest,
That, I protest, I simply am a maid:—
Pleased it your majesty, I have done already:
The blushes in my cheeks, thus whisper me,
We blush, that thou shouldst choose; but, be refus'd,
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever;
We'll never come there again.

King. Make choice; and, see,
Whosha thy love, shuns all his love in me.
Hel. Now Dian, from thy altar do I fly;
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream.—Sir, will you hear my suit?
1 Lord. Aod grant it.
Hel. Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute.
Laf. I had rather be in this choice, than throw
Amen-ace for my life.
Hel. The honour, sir, that frames in your fair eyes,
ACT II.—SCENE III.

Let the rest go.

King. My honour 's at the stake ; which to defeat,
I must produce my power: Here, take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift,
That dost in vile misprision shake up
My love, and her desert ; that canst not dream,
We, pointing us in her defective scale,
Shall weigh thee to the beam; that will not know,
It is in us to plant thine honour, where
We please to have it grow: Check thy contempt:
Obey our will, which travels in thy good:
Believe not thy disdain, but presently
Do those own fortunes that obedient right,
Which both thy dutey owes, and our power claims;
Or willer style, as thou faires from my care for ever,
Into the staggers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate,
Loosing upon thee in the name of justice,
Without all terms of pity: Speak! think answer!
Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord; for I submit
My fancy to your eyes: When I consider,
What great events from that which makes of honour,
This, which you bid it, I find, that she, which late
Was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now
The praise of the king; who so, ennobled, is,
As 'twere, born so.

King. Take her by the hand,
And tell her, she is thine: to whom I promise
A counterpose; if not to thy estate,
A balance more replete.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favour of the king,
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient on the new-born brief,
And be perform'd to-night: the solemn feast
Shall more attend upon the coming space
Expiring about friends. As thou lov'st her,
Thy love's to me religious; else, does err.

[Exeunt King, Ber. Her. Lords, & Attendants.

Laf. Do you hear, monseigneur? a word with you.
Par. Your pleasure, sir!

Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation?—My lord? my master?
Laf. Ay; Is it not a language, I speak?
Par. A most harsh one; and not to be understood
Without bloody succeeding. My master?
Laf. Are you companion to the count Ronsillon?
Par. To any count; at all counts; to what is man.
Laf. To what is count's man; count's master is
Of another style.
Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.
Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to Which title age cannot bring thee.
Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be
A pretty wise fellow; thou that makes of honour,
Or as thy able vent of thy travel; it might pass:
Yet the scarts, and the bananaets, about thee, did manifoldly disuade me
From believing thee a vessel of too great a burden.
I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I
Care not; yet art thou good for nothing but taking up;
And that thou art scarce worth.
Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,—
Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest
Thou hasten thy trial;—which if—Lord have mercy
On thee for a fen! So, my good window of lattice, face thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I Look through thee. Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity,

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy
Of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.
Laf. Yes, good faith, every dram of it: and I will Not bate thee a scruple.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to Pull at a snare o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st Bound in thy scarf, and beaten, thou shalt find what It is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge; that I may say in the default, he is a man I know.
Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.
Laf. I would it were hall-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past: as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave.
Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord!—Well, I must be patient; there is no lettering of authority.
I'll hear him in my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, or he be double and double a lord.
I'll have no more pity of his age, than I would have of— I'll beat him, as if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter Laf.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master 's married, there's news for you; you have a new mistress, Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: He is my good lord: whom I serve above, is my master.
Laf. Who? God?
Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost thou gather up all arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wast best set thy lower part where thy nose stands.
By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger,
I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to throttle themselves upon thee.
Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.
Laf. If you were better left in thy folly for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond, and no true traveller: you are more saucy with lords, and honourable personages, than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you commission.
You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you.

[Exit.

Enter Bertram.

Par. Good, very gold; it is so then.—Good, very good; let it be concealed a while.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares far ever!
Par. What is the matter, sweet heart?

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn,
I will not bed her.

Par. What? what, sweet heart?

Ber. O my Paroles, they have married me:—
I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. Prance is a dog-hole, and it no more merits
The tread of a man's foot: to the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother; what the
I know not yet. Timporn is,
Par. Ay, that would be known: To the wars, my boy, to the wars!
He wears his honour in a box unseen,
That huggs his kicky-wicky here at home;
Spending his manly marrow in her arms,
Which should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed: To other regions!
France is a stable; we, that dwell in't, jades; Therefore to the war!

But it shall be so; I'll send her to my house, Acquaint my mother with my hate to her, And wherefore I am fled; write to the king That which I durst not speak: His present gift Shall furnish me with those Italian fields, Where noble fellows strike: War is no strife To the dark house, and the detested wife:

Par. Why, this canvas hold in these, art sure?

Par. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me. I'll send her straight away: To-morrow I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.

Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it. Tis hard; A young man, married, is a man that's mar'd: Therefore away, and leave her bravely; go: The king has done you wrong: but, bash! tis so.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady! I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on: and to keep them so, have them still.—O, my knave! How does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and I ber money, I would she did as you say.

Clo. Truly, my lord.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing: To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title; which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away, thou art a knave.

Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou art a knave; that is, before me thou art a knave: this had been truth, sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool, I have found thee.

Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir? or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knife, sir, is, and well fed.—Madam, my lord will go away to-night:

A very serious business calls on him. The great prerogative and rite of love, [lodge; Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknow-

But puts it off by a compell'd restraint; Whose want, and whose delay, is stew'd with sweets, Which they distill now in the curbed time, To make the coming hear 'er favours with joy, And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. What's his will else?

Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king.

And make this haste as your own good proceeding, Strengthen'd with what apology you think

May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands ha?

Par. That, having this obtain'd, you presently

Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.

Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you.—Come, sirrah. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Room in the same.

Enter Lafeu and Bertram.

Laf. But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approach.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent: Here he comes; I pray you, make us friends, I will pursue the amity.

Enter Parolles.

Par. These things shall be done, sir. [To Ber.

Laf. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O, I know him well: Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.

Ber. Is she gone to the king? [Aside to Parolles.

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?

Par. As you'll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure, Given order for our horses; and to-night, When I should take possession of the bride,— And, ere I do begin,—

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that lies three-thirds, and yet, Why, I say nothing but to pass a thousand nothings with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into 't, boots and spurs all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him to his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes: trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their nature.—Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil. [Exit.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

Ber. I think not.

Par. Why, do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog—
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

BERTRAM: This to my mother.

Act II. Sc. 5.
ACT III.—SCENE II.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you, Spoke with the king, and have procured his leave For present parting; only, if he desires Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will. You must not marvel, Helen, at my course, Which holds not colour with the time, nor does The ministration and required office

On my particular: prepar'd I was not For such a business; therefore am I found So much unsettled: This drives me to entreat you, That presently you take your way for home; And rather must, than ask, why I entreat you: For my respects are better than they seem; And my appointments have in them a need, Greater than shews itself, at the first view, To you that know them not. This to my mother:

Twil be two days ere I shall see you; so I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant. Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall With true observance seek to eke out that, Wherein toward me my lonely stars have fail'd To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:
My haste is very great: Farewell; the home. Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon. Ber. Well, what would you say?
Hel. 1 am not worthy of the wealth I owe; Nor dare I say, 'tis mine; and yet it is; But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something; and scarce so much:—nothing, indeed.— I would not tell you what I would: my lord—faith, Strangers, and foes, do sunder, and not kiss. Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse. Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord. Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur?—Farewell.

Go thou toward home; where I will never come, Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum:— Away, and for our flight. Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exit.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended; Two French Lords, and others.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you The fundamental reasons of this war; [heard Whose great decision hath much blood let forth, And more thrusts after. Lord. Holy seems the quarrel Upon your grace's part; black and fearful On the opposer. [France

Duke. Therefore we marvel much, our cousin Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom Against our borrowing prayers.

Lord. Good my lord, The reasons of our state I cannot yield, But like a common and an outward man, That the great figure of an council frames

By self-unable motion: therefore dare not Say what I think of it; since I have found Myself in my uncertain grounds to fall As often as I guess'd.

Duke. Be it his pleasure, Lord. But I am sure, the younger of our nature That surfeit on their case, will, day by day, Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be; And all the honours that can fly from us, Shall on them settle. You know your places well; When better fall, for your avail's they fell: To-morrow to the field. [Flourish. Exit

SCENE II.

Rousillon.—A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save, that he comes not along with her. Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you? Clo. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; mend the ruff, and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his nose, and sing;—I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly morrow for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come. [Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel, since I was at court; our old king and our Isbels o'the country are nothing like your old ling and your Isbels o'the court: the brains of my Cupid's knocked out; and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here? Clo. E'en that you have there. [Exit.

Count. [Reads.] I have sent you a daughter-in-law: she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not held her; and sworn to make the court eternal. You shall hear, I am run away; know it, before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you, Your unfortunate son, Bertram.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy, To fly the favours of so good a king; To pluck his indignation on thy head, by the misprizing of a maid too virtuous For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady. Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be kill'd?

Clo. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing to; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come, will tell you more: for my part, I only hear, your son was run away. [Exit Clown.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

1 Gen. Save you, good madam. Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

2 Gen. Do not say so. [men.

Count. Think upon patience.—Pray you, gentle I have felt so many quarks of joy, and grief, That the first face of neither, on the start, Can woman write to?—Where is my son? I pray you? 2 Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence.
We met him thitherward; from thence we came, and, after some despatch in hand at court, Thither we bend again. [port.]

Hel. Look on his letter, madam; here's my pass. [Reads.] When thou dost get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband; but in such a then I write a never.

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

1 Gen. Ay, madam; and, for the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains. Count. I pr'ythee, lady, have a better cheer; if thou engrossest all the grieves are thine, Thou robb'st me of a moity: He was my son; but I do wash his name out of my blood, and thou art all my child. —Towards Florence is he?

2 Gen. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

2 Gen. Such is his noble purpose: and, believ't, the duke will lay upon him all the honour that good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

1 Gen. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Hel. [Reeds.] Till I have no wife, I have nothing in his bitter. [France.]

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

1 Gen. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand; happily, his heart was not consenting to. [which Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!

There's nothing here, that is too good for him, but only she; and she deserves a lord. That twenty such rude boys might tend upon, and call her hourly, mistress. Who was with him?

2 Gen. A servant only, and a gentleman. Which I have some time known.

Count. Paroles, was't not?

1 Gen. Ay, my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature. [cess. With his inducement.]

Hel. Indeed, good lady, the fellow has a deal of that, too much, which holds him much to have. Count. You are welcome, gentlemen, I will entreat you, when you see my son; to tell him that his sword can never win the honour that he loses: more I'll entreat you Written to bear along. [and]

2 Gen. We serve you, madam, in that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies. Will you draw near? [Ex. Countess & Gentlemen.]

Hel. Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France. Nothing in France, until he has no wife! Thou shalt have none, Roussillon, none in France, then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is't! That chase thee from thy country, and expose Those tender limbs of thine to the event Of the same sparing war? and is it Then that drive thee from theスポーツ court, where thou Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark Of some muskets? O you leaden messengers, That ride upon the violent speed of fire, Fly with false aim; move the still-piercing air, That slings with piercing, do not touch my lord! Whoever shoots at him, I set him there; Whoever charges on his forward breast, I am the caufi, that do hold him to; And, though I kill him not, I am the cause His death was so effected: better 'twere

I met the ravin lion when he roard With sharp constraint of hunger; better 'twere That all the miseries, which nature owes,

Wore mine at once: No, come thou home, Roussillon, Whence honour but of danger wins a scar, And all becomes; I will be gone; My being here it is, that holds thee hence: Shall I stay here to do't? no, no, although The air of paradise did fan the house, And angels offic'd all: I will be gone;

That pitiful rumour may report my flight, To consolite thine ear. Come, night; end, day! For, with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.]

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we, Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence, Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is A charge too heavy for my strength: but yet We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake, To the extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth: And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm, As thy suspicious mistress!

Ber. This very day, Great Mars, I put myself into thy file: Make me but like my thoughts; and I shall prove A lover of thy drum, hater of war. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Roussillon.—A Room in the Countess's Palace. Enter Countess and Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her? Might you not know, she would do as she has done, By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. I am St. Jacques' pilgrim, thither gone: Ambitious love hath so in me offended, That bare-foot pod I the cold ground upon, With with saw my faults to have amended.

If erte, write, that, from the bloody course of war My dearest master, your dear son may be; Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far, His name with zealous fervor sanctify: His taken honors bid him me forgive; His despicable Juno, sent him forth From courtly friends, with camping feast to live, Where death and danger do the hearts of worth: He is too good and fair for death and me; Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.

Count. Ah, what sharp stations are in her mildest words? Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much, As letting her pass so; had I spoke with her, I could have well diverted her intents, Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam: If I had given you this at over-night, She might have been o'ert'a'en; and yet she writes, Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive, Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear, And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo, To this unworthy husband of his wife: Let every word weigh heavy of her worth, That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief, Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.
Despatch the most convenient messenger:—
When, haply, he shall hear that she is gone,
He will return; and hope I may, that she,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again.
Led hither by pure love: which of them both
Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sense
To make distinction.—Provide this messenger:—
My heart is heavy, and mine age is weak;
Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A bucket after off. Enter an old Widow of Florence,
Diana, Violanta, Mariana, and other Citizens.

DIA. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

DIA. They say, the French count has done most honourable service.

DIA. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. We have lost our labour: they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

MAR. Come, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French Earl: the honour of a maid is her name;
and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

DIA. I have told my neighbour, how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

MAR. I know that knife; hang him! one Parolles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young Earl.—Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these gains of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shews in the wreck of maidens, cannot for all that dissipate succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope I need not advise you further: but,
I hope, your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

DIA. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter Helena, in the dress of a pilgrim.

DIA. I hope so. — Look, here comes a pilgrim:—
I know she will lie at my house: thither she send one another; I'll question her.

Goe, strike, pilgrim! Whither are you bound?

HEL. To Saint Jaques le grand.

DIA. Where do the palmer's lodge, I do beseech you?

HEL. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

DIA. Is this the way?

HEL. Ay, marry, is it. —Hark you!

[A march after of.

DIA. They come this way:—if you will tarry, holy pilgrim,
But till the troops come by,
I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd;
The rather, for, I think, I know your hostess
As ample as myself.

HEL. Is it yourself?

DIA. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

HEL. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

DIA. You came, I think, from France?

HEL. I did so.

DIA. Here you shall see a countryman of yours,
That has done worthy service.

HEL. His name, I pray you.

DIA. The Count Rousillon; know you such a one?

HEL. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him:
His face I know not.

DIA. Whatso'er he is,
He's bravely taken here. He stole from France,
As 'tis reported, for the king had married him
Against his liking: Think you it is so?

HEL. Ay, surely, mere the truth; I know his lady.

DIA. There is a gentleman, that serves the count,
Reports but coarsely of her.

HEL. What's his name?

DIA. Monsieur Parolles.

HEL. O, I believe with him,
In argument of praise, or to the worth
Of the great count himself, she is too mean
To have her name repeated; all her deserving
Is a reserved honesty, and that
I have not heard examined.

DIA. Alas, poor lady!

HEL. Tis a hard bondage, to become the wife
Of a desisting lord.

DIA. A right good creature: wheresoe'er she is,
Her heart weighs sadly: this young maid might do her
A shrewd turn, if she pleas'd.

HEL. How do you mean?

DIA. May be, the amorous solicitis her
In the unlawful purpose.

HEL. He does, indeed;
And brakes with all that can in such a suit
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid:
But she is am'ld for him, and keeps her guard
In honestest defence.

Enter, with drum and colours, a party of the Florentine army, Bertram, and Parolles.

MAR. The gods forbid else!

HEL. So, now they come:

That is Antonio, the duke's eldest son;
That, Escalus.

HEL. Which is the Frenchman?

DIA. He;

That with the plume: 'tis a most gallant fellow;
I would, he lov'd his wife: if he were honest,
He were much goodlier.—Is't not a handsome gentleman? I like him well.

DIA. His pity he is not honest: Yond's that same knight,
That leads him to these places: were I his lady,
I'd poison that vile rascal.

HEL. Which is he?

DIA. That jack-an-apes with scars: Why is he melancholy?

HEL. Verchance he's hurt i' the battle.

PAR. Lose our drum! well.

MAR. He's shrewdly vexed at something: Look,
he has spied us.

DIA. Marry, hang you!

MAR. And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier!

[Exit Ber., Par., Officers, and Soldiers.

HEL. The troop is past: Come, pilgrim, I will bring
Where you shall be host: of envin'd penitents [pos]
There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound,
Already at my house.

HEL. I humbly thank you:
Please it this matron, and this gentle maid,
To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking,
Shall be for me; and, to require you further,
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note.

Both. We'll take your offer kindly. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram, and the two French Lords.

1 Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to 't; let him have his way.

Q?
2 Lord. If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

1 Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think, I am so far deceived in him?

1 Lord. Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no good quality worthy your lordship's entertainment.

2 Lord. It were fit you knew him; lest, reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might, at some great and trusty business, in a main danger, fail you.

Ber. I would, I knew in what particular action to try him.

2 Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

1 Lord. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom I am sure, he knows not from the enemy: we will bind and lead him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the league of the adversaries, when we bring him to our tents: Be but your lordship present at his examination: if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine furiet of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

Ber. Well, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says, he has a stratagem for 't: when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

1 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, hinder not the humour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

2 Lord. A box on't, let it go; 'tis but a drum.

Par. But a drum! Is 't but a drum? A drum so lost! There was an excellent command! to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers.

2 Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service; it was a disaster of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our successes: some discomour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered: but that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or he lack.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to 't, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on: I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit: if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and, by midnight, look to hear further from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace, you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord; but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know thou art valiant; and to the possibility of the undertaking, will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I love not many words.

[Exit.

1 Lord. No more than a fish loves water.—Is not this a strange fellow, my lord? that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; dares himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do.

2 Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do; certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favour, and, for a week, escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think, he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?

1 Lord. None in the world; but return with an in- ward clap upon you two or three probable lies: but we have almost embossed him, you shall see his fall to-night: for, indeed, he is not for your lordship's respect.

2 Lord. We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case him. He was first smacked by the old lord Lafeu: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sport you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

1 Lord. I must go look my twigs; he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

2 Lord. As 't please your lordship: I'll leave you.

[Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and shew you The lass I spoke of.

2 Lord. But, you say, she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, By this same coxcomb that we have 't the wind, Tokens and letters which she did re-send; And this is all I have done: She's a fair creature; Will you go see her?

2 Lord. With all my heart, my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.

Florenc.—A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Hellen and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you further, But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well born, Nothing acquainted with these businesses; And would not put my reputation now In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you.

First, give me trust, the count he is my husband; And, what to your sworn counsel I have spoken, Is so, from word to word; and then you cannot, By the good aid that I of you shall borrow, Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; For you have shew'd me that, which well approves You are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold, And I'll buy your friendly help thus far.

Wid. Which I will over-pay, and pay again. [Laughter, When I have found it. The count he woos your Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty, Resolves to carry her; let her, in fine, consent.
As we 'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it,
Now his important blood will nought deny
That she 'll demand: A ring the county wears,
That downward hath succeeded in his house,
From son to son, some four or five descents
Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet, in his life fierce,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
How'er repeated after.

Wid. Now I see

The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawfully then: It is no more,
But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chastely absent; after this,
To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns
To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded:

Instruct my daughter how she shall persévère.
That time and place, with this decision so lawful,
May prove some thing to every night he come;
With musics of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: It nothing steads us,
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't.

Hel. Why then, to-night
Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed,
May wicked meaning in a lawful deed
And lawful meaning in a lawful act;
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact:
But let's about it.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter First Lord, with five or six Soldiers in ambush.

1 Lord. He can come no other way but by this hedge' corner: When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will; though you understand it not, you must not seem to understand him; unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

1 Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

1 Lord. But what linsy-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?

1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me.

1 Lord. He must think us some band of strangers: 'tis the adversary's entertainment. Now he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak to one another; so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But couch, ho! here he comes; to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it: They begin to smoke me; and disgrace have of late knocked too often at my door. I find, my tongue is too fool-hardy; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

1 Lord. This is the first truth that e'er thine own tongue was guilty of.

[Aside.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum; being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say, I got them in exploit: Yet slight ones will not carry it: They will say, Came you off with so little? and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore? what's the instance! Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy another of Bajazet's nule, if you prattle me into these perils.

1 Lord. Is it possible, he should know what he is, and be that he is?

[Aside.

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

1 Lord. We cannot afford you so.

[Aside.

Par. Or the barring of my beard; and to say, it was in stratagem.

1 Lord. I would not do.

[Aside.

Par. Or to drowd my clothes, and say, I was stripped.

1 Lord. Hardly serve.

[Aside.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

1 Lord. How deep?

[Aside.

Par. Thirty fathom.

1 Lord. Three great oaths would scarce serve make that be believed.

[Aside.

Par. I would, I had any drum of the enemy's; I would swear, I recovered it.

1 Lord. You shall bear one anon.

[Aside.

Par. A drum now of the enemy's! [Alarum within.

1 Lord. Thrice fomous us, cargo, cargo, cargo. All, cargo, cargo, utiliada par corvo, cargo.

Par. O! reason, reason:—Do not hide mine eyes.

[They seize him and blindfold him.

1 Sold. Baskos tromuldo baskos.

Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment.

And I shall lose my life for want of language:
If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me, I will discover that which shall undeceive The Florentine.

1 Sold. Baskos caurudo—

I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue:—

Keretlyimoto:—Sir, Betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poniards Are at thy bosom.

Par. Oh! O, pray, pray, pray.—

Manka reavius duide.

1 Lord. Oscurbi dulceis volvcrea.

1 Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet; And, hood-wink'd as thou art, will lead thee on.

To gather from thee: haply, thou may'st inform Something to save thy life.

Par. O, let me live, And all the secrets of our camp I'll shew, Their force, their purposes: nay, I'll speak that Which you will wonder at.

1 Sold. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damn me.

1 Sold. Acero launa. —

Come on, thou art granted space.

[Exit, with PAROLLES guarded.

1 Lord. Go, tell the count Roussillon, and my brother,

We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him Till we do hear from them.

[Stuffed,
SCENE II. Florence.—A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter BERTHAN and DIANA.

BER. They told me that your name was Fontibell.

DIA. No, my good lord, Diana.

BER. Titled goddess; And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, Is your fine fume hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, You are no maiden, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stern; And now you should be as your mother was, Who, when her sweet self was got, Did she then was honest.

DIA. So should you be.

BER. My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

BER. No more of that! I pr'ythee, do not strive against my vows: I was compell'd to her; but I love thee By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever Do thee all rights of service.

DIA. Ay, so you serve us, Till we serve you: but when you have our roses, You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves, And mock us with our barrenness.

BER. How have I sworn? DIA. 'Tis not the many oaths, that make the truth; But the plain single vow, that is vow'd true. What is not holy, that we swear not by, But take the Highest to witness: Then pray you, tell If I should swear by Jove's great attributes, I, love you dearly, would you believe my oaths, When I did love you ill? this has so holding, To swear by him whom I pretend to love, That I will work against him: Therefore, your oaths Are words, and poor conditions; but unseal'd; At least, in my opinion.

BER. Change it, change it; Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy; And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts, That you do charge men with: Stand no more off, But give thyself unto my sick desires, Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever My love, as it begins, shall so persever. DIA. I see, that men make hopes, in such affairs, That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring. BER. I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power To give it from me.

DIA. Will you not, my lord? BER. It is an honour lusing to our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors; Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world In me to lose.

DIA. Mine honour's such a ring: My chastity's the jewel of our house, Bequeathed down from many ancestors; Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world In me to lose: Thus you own proper wisdom Brings in the champion honour on my part, Against your vain assault.

BER. Here, take my ring:

My house, nine honour, yea, my life be thine, And I'll be bid by thee. [Exit.

DIA. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber: I'll order take, my mother shall not hear. Now will I charge you in the band of truth, When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed, Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me: My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them; When back again this ring shall he deliver'd: And on your finger, in the night, I'll put Another ring; that, what in time proceeds, May taken to the future our past deeds, Aye, till then; then, fall not: You have won A wife of me, though there my hope be done.

BER. A heaven on earth I have won, by wooing thee. [Exit.

DIA. For which live long to thank both heaven and You may so in the end.— My mother told me just how he would woo, As if she sat in his heart; she says, all men Have the like oaths: he had sworn to marry me. When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him, When I am abjured. Since Frenchmen are so braid, Marry that will, I'll live and die a maid: Only, in this disguise, I think no sin To cozen him, that would unjustly win. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp.

Enter the two French Lords, and two or three Soldiers.

1 LORD. You have not given him his mother's letter? 2 LORD. I have deliver'd it an hour since; there is something in 't that stings his nature: for, on the reading it, he changed almost into another man.

1 LORD. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a lady. 2 LORD. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even turned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

1 LORD. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it. 2 LORD. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown; and this night he fleshes his will in the spoil of her honour; he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

1 LORD. Now, God delay our rebellion; as we are ourselves, what things are we!

2 LORD. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their aborted ends; so he, that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream overflows himself.

1 LORD. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night?

2 LORD. Not till after midnight; for he is dieted to his hour.

1 LORD. That approaches apace: I would gladly have him see his company anatomized; that he might take a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

2 LORD. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.

1 LORD. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?

2 LORD. I hear there is an ouverture of peace.

1 LORD. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

2 LORD. What will count Rousillon do then? will he travel higher, or return again into France?
ACT IV.—SCENE III.

1 Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

2 Lord. Let it be forbid, sir! so should I be a great deal of his act.

3 Sir. In his life, some two months since, fled from his house his present is a pilgrimage to Saint Jacques le Grand: which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, she accomplished: and, there residing, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath, and now she sings in heaven.

1 Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters; which makes her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say, is come, was faithfully confirmed by the rector of the place.

2 Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

1 Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the worthy.

2 Lord. I am heartily sorry, that he'll be glad of this.

1 Lord. How mightily, sometimes, we make us comforts of our losses!

2 Lord. And how mightily, some other times, we drown our gain in tears! The great dignity, that his valour hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

1 Lord. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherish'd by our virtues.—

Enter a Servant.

How now? where's your master?

Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

2 Lord. They shall be no more than needful there; if they were more than they can command.

Enter Bertram.

1 Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tattiness. Here's his lordship now. How now, my lord, isn't after midnight?

Ber. I have to-night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have confeder'd with the duke, done my adieu with him; sent a thousand pieces of news to my lady mother, I am returning; enterained my convoy; and, between these main parcels of despatch, effectually many nicer deeds; the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

2 Lord. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean, the business is notd, as fear ing to hear of it hereafter: But shall we have this dialogue between the tool and the soldier?—Come, bring forth this counterfeit me; he has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophet.

2 Lord. Bring him forth. [Except Soldiers.] He has sat in the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?

1 Lord. I have told your lordship already: the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood: he weeps like a wench that had shod her milk; he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposed a wife, mourned for her; wept, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his setting in the stocks: And what think you he hath confess'd?

Ber. Nothing of me, has he?

2 Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Recitar Soldiers, with Paroles.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled! he can say nothing of me; hush! hush!

1 Lord. Boodle comes! Posta tartara.

2 Lord. He calls for the torments: What will you say without 'em?

Par. I know not what I know without constraint; if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.

1 Sold. Morte ammehu.

2 Lord. Balladando eichmururo.

1 Sold. You are a merciful general!—Our general bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

1 Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. Five or six thousand, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down.—for I'll speak truth.

1 Lord. He's very near the truth in this.

Par. But I vom him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.

Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.

1 Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. I humbly thank you, sir: a truth's a truth, the rogues are marvellous poor.

1 Sold. Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot.

Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio a hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Corinthians so many, Gaunts so many; Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratia, two hundred fifty each: mine own company, Chitopfer, Vannond, Bentii, two hundred and fifty each: so that the muster-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of which dare not shake the snow off from their casacks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?

1 Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks. Demand of him my conditions, and what credit I have with the duke.

1 Sold. Well, that's set down. You shall demand of him, whether one Captain Damain he the camp, a Frenchman; what his reputation is with the duke, what his valour, honesty, and expertise in wars; or whether he thinks, it were not possible, with well-weighting sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt. What say you to this? I bid you know of it?

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: Demand them singly.

1 Sold. Do you know this captain Damain?
Par. I know him; he was a butcher's 'prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's fool with child; a dull innocent, that could not say him, nay. [DUMAIN lifts up his hand in anger.]
Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.
1 Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's army?
Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and louzy.
1 Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.
1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine; and writ to me this other day, to turn him out o' the band: I think, I have his letter in my pocket.
1 Sold. Marry, we'll search.
Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent.
1 Sold. Here 'tis; here's a paper. Shall I read it to you?
Par. I do not know, if it be it, or no.
Ber. Our interpreter does it well.
1 Lord. Excellently.
1 Sold. Dian. The count's a fool, and full of gold.—
Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Di-ana, to take heed of the allurement of one count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very ruttish: I pray you, sir, put it up again.
1 Lord. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.
Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid: for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy; who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds.
Ber. Damnable, both sides rogue!
1 Sold. When he sweats oaths, bid him drop gold, and After he scores, he never pays the score: [take it:
Haff won, is match well made; match, and well make it;
He ne'er pays after debts, take it before; And say, a soldier, Dian, told thee this,
Men are to melt with, boys are not to kiss:
For count of this, the count's a fool, I know it,
Who pays before, but not when he does owe it.
Thine, as he would't to thine in thine ear, PAROLLES.
Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in his forehead.
2 Lord. This is your devour'd friend, sir, the man-ifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.
Ber. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.
1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.
Par. My life, sir, in any case: not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature: let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 'tis the stocks, or any where, so I may live.
1 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely: therefore, once more to this captain Dumain: You have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: What is his honesty?
Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister; for rapes and ravishments he parleyeth Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them, he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool: drunkenss makes him bright for he will be swine-drunck; and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.
1 Lord. I begin to love him for this.
Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pos- upon him for me, he is more and more a cat.
1 Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?
Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English, Nay, and to believe him, I will not,—and more of his soldiership I know not; except in that country, he had the honour to be the officer at a place there call'd Milie-end, to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certain.
1 Lord. He hath out-villained villany so far, that the rarity redeems him.
Ber. A pos on him! he's a cat still.
1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revolt.
Par. Sir, for a guart d' eau he will sell the fee sim- ple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entuil from all remainders, and a perpetual success- suing for it perpetually.
1 Lord. What's his brother, the other captain Dumas?
1 Lord. Why does he ask of me?
1 Sold. What's he?
Par. Even a crow of the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is: in a retreat he out-runs any lackey; weary, in coming on he has the cramp.
1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?
Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count Rou- silhon.
1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Par. I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger: Yet, who would have sus- pected an ambush where I was taken? [Aside.
1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you, that have so traitorously dis- covered the secrets of your army, and made such pus- tiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, headman, off with his head.
Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death!
1 Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends.
[Unmanning him.
So, look about you; Know you any here?
Ber. Good morrow, noble captain.
2 Lord. God bless you, captain Parolles.
1 Lord. God save you, noble captain.
2 Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Lalie? I am for France.
1 Lord. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you writ to Dana in behalf of the count Rousillon? if I were not a very coward, I'd compass it of you; but fare you well. [Readeth the first two lines.
1 Sold. You are undone, captain: all but your searc, that has a knot on't yet.
Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?
1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare you well, sir; I am for France too; we shall speak of you there. [Exit.
Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great, 'Twould burst at this: Captain, I'll be no more;
ACT IV.—SCENE V.

But I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall, simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggar
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggar shall be found an ass.
Rest, sword! cool, blushes! and, Paroles, live
Safest in shame! being fool’d by foolery thrive!
There’s place, and means, for every man alive.
I’ll after them. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

Florence.—A room in the Widow’s House.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong’d
One of the greatest in the Christian world [you,
Shall be my surety; ’fore whose throne, ‘tis needful,
Ere I can perfect my intents, to know:
Time was, I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude
Through flinty Tartar’s bosom would peep forth,
And answer, thanks: I duly am informed
His residence is at Marseilles, to which place
We have convenient convey. You must know,
I am supposed dead: the army breaking,
My husband hies him home; where, heaven aiding,
And by the leave of my good lord the king,
We’ll be, before our welcome.
Hil. Gentle madam, you never had a servant, to whose trust
Your business was more welcome.

Hel. Nor your mistress, ever a friend, whose thoughts more truly labour
To recompense your love; doubt not but heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter’s dover,
As it hath fated her to be my mother.
And helper to a husband. But, O strange men!
That can such sweet use make of what they hate,
When saucy trusting of the cozen’d thoughts
Defiles the pitchy night? so lust doth play
With what it loths, for that which is away;
But more of this hereafter;—You, Diana,
Under my poor instructions yet must suffer
Something in my behalf.

Dian. Let death and honesty
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet, I pray you,—
But with the word, the time will bring on summer,
When briars shall have leaves as well as thorns,
And be as sweet as sharp. We must away;
Our waggon is prepar’d, and time revives us:—
All’s well that ends well; still the fine’s the crown;
What’er the course, the end is the renown. [Exit.

SCENE V.

Rousillon.—A room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Countess, Lafeu, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no, your son was mislaid with a sniptaffata fellow there; whose villainous saffron
Have made all the unbaked and doughty youth of A nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour; and your son here at home more advanced by the king, than by that red-tailed humble-beetle I speak of.

Count. I would, I had not known him! it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever nature had praise for creating; if she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother,
I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. ’Twas a good lady, ’twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand salads, o’er we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salad, or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not salad-herbs, you know, they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am no great Nébuchadnezzar, sir, I have not much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself; or a knave or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman’s service, and a knave at a man’s.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would czoven the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee; thou art both knave and fool.

Clo. At your service.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Who is that? a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith, sir, he has an English name; but his phisonomy is more batter in France, than there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The black prince, sir, Elles, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there’s my purse: I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of;
serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a good fire; and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world, let his nobility remain in his court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter; some, that humble themselves, may: but the many will be too civil and tender; and they’ll be for the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a wary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fail out with thee. Go thy ways; let my horse be well looked after, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon ’em, sir, they shall be jades’ tricks; which are their own right by the law of nature. [Exit.

Laf. A shrewd knave, and an unhappy.

Count. So he is. My lord, that’s gone, made himself much sport out of him: by his authority he re-maines here, which he thinks is a patent for his sacrience; and, indeed, he has no pace, but runs where he will.

Laf. I like him well; ’tis not amiss: and I was about to tell you. Since I heard of the good lady’s death, and that my lord your son was upon his return home, I met the king’ my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter; which in the minority of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose: his highness hath promised me to do it: and, to stop up the displeasure he hath conceived against your son, there is no fitter matter.
How does your ladyship like it?

Count. With very much content, my lord, and I wish it happily effect.

Laf. His highness comes post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he numbered thirty; he will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.

Count. It rejoices me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters, that my son will be here to-night: I shall beseech your lordship, to remain with me till they meet together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking, with what manner I might safely be admitted.

Count. You need but plead your honourable privileges.

Laf. Lady, of that I have made a bold charter; but, I thank you God, it holds yet.

Re-Enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder's my lord your son with a patch of velvet on his face; whether there be a scar under it, or no, the velvet knows; but 'tis a goodly patch of velvet: his left cheek is a patch of two pile and a half, and his right cheek is worn bare.

Laf. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honour; so, belike, is that.

Clo. But it is your carbamboed face.

Laf. Let us go see your son, I pray you; I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Clo. 'Tis true, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strong as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering. Prythee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not stop your nose, sir; I spake but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor. Prythee, get thee further.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh, pr'ythee, stand away; A paper from fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman! Look, here he comes himself.

Enter Laf.
ACT V.—SCENE III.

As mad in folly, lack’d the sense to know
Her estimation home.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege:
And I beseech your majesty to make it
Natural rebellion, done 't the blaze of youth;
When oil and fire, too strong for reason’s force,
'O'er bears it, and burns up.

King. My honour’d lady,
I have forgiven and forgotten all;
Though my revenges were high bent upon him,
And watch’d the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say,—
But first I beg my pardon.—The young lord
Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady,
Offence of mighty note; but to himself
The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife,
Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of richest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;
Whose dear perfection, hearts scorn’d to serve,
Humbly call’d mistress.

King. Praising what’s lost, [hither:—
Makes the remembrance dear. — Well, call him
We are reconcil’d, and the first view shall kill
All repetition:—Let him not ask our pardon;
The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper than oblivion do we bury
The incensing relics of it: let him approach
A stranger, no offender; and inform him,
So this our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege.

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoken?

Laf. All that he hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters
That set him high in fame. [sent me,
Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on’t.

King. I am not a day of season,
For thou may’st see a sun-shine and a hail
In me at once: But to the brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth,
The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repepted blam’d,
Dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. Not one word more of the consumed time.
Let’s take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick’t decrees
The inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals ere we can effect them: You remember
The daughter of this lord!

Ber. Admiringly, my liege: at first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the impression of mine eye infixed,
Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
Which warp’d the line of every other favour;
Scarcely a fair colour or expres’d it stoln’;
Extended or contracted all proportions,
To a most hideous object: Thence it came,
That she, whom all men prais’d, and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have lov’d, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

King. Well exec’d:
That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away
From the great comet: But love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence.
Crying, That’s good that’s gone: our rash faults
Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave:
Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust:
Our own love waking cries to see what’s done,
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen’s knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Madalin:
The main consents are had; and here we’ll stay,
To see our widow’s second marriage day.

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven
Or, ere they meet in me. O nature, cease! [bless!
Laf. Come on, my son, in whom my house’s name
Must be digested, give a favour from you,
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter.
That she may quickly come.—I have old ear,
And every hair that’s on’t, Helen, that’s dead,
Was a sweet creature; such a ring as this,
The last that e’er I took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fastened to it—
This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessitated to help, that by this token
I would relieve her: Had you that craft, to reave
Of what should stead her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign
Howe’er it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,
I have seen her wear it; and she reckon’d it
At her life’s rate.

Laf. I am sure, I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceit’d, my lord, she never saw it:
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me,
Wrapp’d in a paper, which contain’d the name
Of her that knew it; noble she was, and thought
I stood ingag’d: but when I had subscrib’d
To mine own fortune, and inform’d her fully,
I could not answer in that course of honour
As she had made the overture, she ceas’d
In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.

King. Plutus himself,
That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature’s mystery more science,
Than I have in this ring: ’twas mine, ’twas Helen’s,
Whoever gave it you: Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with yourself,
Confess ’t was hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her: she call’d the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
(Where you have never come,) or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak’st it falsely, as I love mine heart;
And mark’st conjectural fears to come into me,
Which I will not suffer out. I would prove
That thou art so inhuman—’twill not prove so:
And yet I know not:—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead; which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.

[Guards seize Bertram.

My fore-past proofs, however the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity.
Having vainly fear’d too little.—Away with him;—
We’ll sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit Bertram, guarded.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Enter a Gentleman.

King. I am wrapp'd in dismal thinnings.

Gent. [Rends.] Upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Rosalind a widow; his vows are forfeited to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice: Grant it me, O king; in you it best lies; otherwise a seeder flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

Diana Capulet.

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll him: for this, I'll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafen, To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors:—

Go, speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exit Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afraid, the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doors!

Enter Bertram, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, since wives are monsters to you, And that you fly them as you swear them lordship, Yet desire to marry.—What woman's that?

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow, and Diana.

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine, Derived from the ancient Capulet; My suit, as I do understand, you know, And therefore know how far I may be pitied. Wid. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honour Both suffer under this complaint we bring, And both shall cease, without your remedy. [women?

King. Come hither, count; Do you know these Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny But that I know them: Do they charge me further? Dia. Why do you look so strange upon your wife? Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.

Dia. If you shall marry,

You give away this hand, and that is mine; You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine; You give away myself, which is known mine; For I by vow am so embobbed yours, That she, which marries you, must marry me, Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation [to Bertram.] comes too short for my daughter, you are no husband for her. Ber. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature, Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: let your high-Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour, [less Than for to think that I would sink it here. King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend, Till your deeds gain them: Fairer prove your honour, Than in my thought it lies!

Dia. Good my lord, Ask him upon his oath, if he does think He had not my virginity.

King. What say'st thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent, my lord;

And was a common gamester to the camp.

Dia. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so, He might have bought me at a common price: Do not believe him: O, behold this ring, Whose high respect, and rich validity, Did lack a parallel: yet, for all that, He gave it to a commoner of the camp, If I be one. Count. He blushes, and 'tis it: Of six preceding ancestors, that gem Confer'd by testament to the sequent issue, Hath it been ow'd and worn. This is his wife; That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. Methought, you said,

You saw one here in court could witness it.

Dia. I did, my lord, but hath am to produce So had an instrument; his name's Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be. King. Find him, and bring him hither.

Ber. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave, With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debos'd; Whose nature sickens, but to speak a truth: Am I for that, or this, for what he'll utter, That will speak any thing?

King. She hath that ring of yours,

Ber. I think, she has: certain it is, I lik'd her, And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth: She knew her distance, and did angle for me, Madding my eagerness with her restraint, As all impediments in fancy's course Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine, Her intent coming with her modern grace, Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring; And I had that which any inferior might At market-price have bought.

Dia. I must be patient; You, that turn'd off a first sa nobile wife, May justly diet me. I pray you yet, (Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband,) Send for your ring, I will return it home, And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.

King. What ring was yours, I pray you?

Dia. Sir, much like

The same upon your finger.

King. Know you this ring! this ring was his of late.

Dia. And this was it I gave him, being a-bed. King. The story then goes false, you threw it him Out of a casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth.

Enter Parolles.

Ber. My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers.

King. You boggle shrivelly, every feather starts

Is this the man you speak of? [you.

Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but, tell me true, I charge Not fearing the displeasure of your master, (you, (Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off,) By him, and by this woman here, what know you? Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honourable gentleman; tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have. King. Come, come, to the purpose: Did he love this woman?

Par. 'Faith, sir, he did love her; But how?

King. How, I pray you?

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.

King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.
ACT V.—SCENE III.

King. As thou art a knave, and no knave.
What an equivocal companion is this?
Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.
Laf. He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty orator.
Dia. Do you know, he promised me marriage?
Par. Faith, I know more than I speak.
King. But wilt thou not speak all thou know'st?
Par. Yes, so please your majesty; I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her,—for, indeed, he was mad for her, and talked of Satan, and of limbo, and of furies, and I know not what; yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed; and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would derive me ill-will to speak of, therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married: But thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.—

This ring, you say, was yours?
Dia. Ay, my good lord.
King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?
Dia. It was not given me, nor did I not buy it.
King. Who lent it you?
Dia. It was not lent me neither.
King. Where did you find it then?
Dia. I found it not.
King. If it were yours by none of all these ways.
How could you give it him?
Dia. I never gave it him.
Laf. This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine, I gave it his first wife.
Dia. It might be yours, or hers, for aught I know.
King. Take her away, I do not like her now;
To prison with her: and away with him—
Unless thou tell'st me where thou hadst this ring, Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you.
King. Take her away.
Dia. I'll put in bail, my liege.
King. I think thee now some common customer.
Dia. By love, if ever I knew man, twas you.
King. Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?
Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty:
He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to't:
I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.
Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life;
I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

(Pointing to Laf.)

King. She does abuse our ears; to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail.—Stay, roval sir; [Exit Widow.

The jeweller, that owes the ring, is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this lord,
Who hath abus'd me, as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quitt him:
He knows himself my bed he hath defil'd;
And at therefore he got his wife with child.
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick;
So there's my riddle, One, that's dead, is quick;
And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with Helena.

King. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
To make that I see?
Het. No, my good lord;
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name, and not the thing.
Het. Both, both; O, pardon!
Het. O, my good lord, when I was like this maid, I found you would'son kind.
There is your ring, and,
Beguile my sight, as this it says,
When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child, &c.—This is done:
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?
Het. If she, my liege, can make me know this
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.
[clearly.
Het. If it appear not plain, and prove untrue,
With strife to please you, day exceeding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;
Your gentle hands lead us, and take our hearts. [Exeunt.
MR. MALONE SUPPOSES THIS COMEDY TO HAVE BEEN WRITTEN IN 1596. IT IS FOUND ON AN ANONYMOUS PLAY OF NEARLY THE SAME TITLE, "THE TAME OF A SHEEP," WHICH WAS PROBABLY WRITTEN ABOUT THE YEAR 1591, BY GEORGE PEILE, OR ROBERT GREEN. THE OUTLINE OF THE INDUCTION MAY BE TRACED, AS MR. Douce OBSERVES, THROUGH MANY INTERMEDIATE COPIES, TO THE SLEEPER AWAKED OF THE ARABIAN NIGHTS. IT HAS BEEN Doubted BY DR. WACHURTON AND DR. FARMER WHETHER THIS COMEDY IS REALLY THE PRODUCTION OF SHAKESPEARE. THEY HAVE NO OTHER GROUNDS FOR THEIR OPINION, BUT THE INFERIORITY OF ITS PLOT. THE PLAY, AS A WHOLE, IS CERTAINLY NOT IN OUR AUTHOR'S BEST MANNER, BUT IN THE INDUCTION AND IN THE SCENES BETWEEN KATHARINA AND PETRUCHIO THE TALE OF HIS HAND ARE STRONGLY MARKEt. IF IT BE NOT SHAKESPEARE'S, TO WHOM CAN IT BE ATTRIBUTED?

BENVOLIO AND FLETCHER HAVE WRITTEN A SEQUEL TO THIS COMEDY, CALLED "THE WOMAN'S PRIZE" OR THE "TAMER MADE," IN WHICH A CHARACTER BEARING THE NAME OF PETRUCHIO (FOR NOTHING BUT THE NAME REMAINS TO HIM) IS SUBJUGATED BY A SECOND WIFE.

SCENE I.—BEFORE AN ALCOHOLE ON A HEATH.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Sly. I'll plea thee on, in faith.

Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue! I

Sly. Ye're a bagage; the sites are no rogues: Look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore, rausa pallialis; let the world slide: Scusa!

Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burnt!

Sly. No, not a denier: Go by, says Jeronimy:—

Go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Host. I know my remedy, I must go fetch the third-brother. [Exit.

Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law: I'll not budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly.

[LIe down on the ground, and falls asleep.

WIND BLOWS. Enter a LORD FROM HUNTING, WITH HUHTSMEN AND SERVANTS.

LORD. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:

Brach Merriman,—the poor ear is embossed,

And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach.

Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good

At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault?

I would not lose the dog for twenty pound.

1 Hun. Why, Delman is as good as he, my lord;

He cried upon it at the greatest loss,

And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent:

Trust me, I take him for the better dog.

LORD. Thou art a fool; if Echo were as fleet,

I would esteem him worth a dozen such.

But sup them well, and look unto them all;

To-morrow I intend to hunt again.

1 HUN. I will, my lord.

LORD. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe? [with ale, 2 HUN. He breathes, my lord: Were he not warm'd This were a bed but cold to sleep in soundly.

LORD. O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies! Grim death doth mock how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man—

What think you, if he were conveyed to bed,

Wrapp'd in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers,

A most delicious banquet by his bed,

And brave attendants near him when he wakes,

Would not the beggar then forget himself?

1 HUN. Believe me, lord, I think he cannot choose.

2 HUN. It would seem strange unto him when he wake'd.

LORD. Even as a flattering dream, or worthless fancy.

Then take him up, and manage well the jest:—

Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,

And hang it round with all my wanton pictures:

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,

And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet:

Procure me music ready when he wakes.

To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound;

And if he chance to speak, be ready straight,

And, with a low submissive reverence,

Say,—What is it your honour will command?

Let one attend him with a silver basin,

Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the towel, the third a diaper,

And say—Will't please your lordship cool your some one; be ready with a costly suit, [hands?

And ask him what apparel he will wear;

Another tell him of his hounds and horse,

And that his lady mourns at his disease:

Persuade him, that he hath been luminous;

And, when he says he is—say, that he dreams,

For he is nothing but a mighty lord.

This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs; It will be pastime passing excellent, If it be husbanded with modesty.

1 Hun. My lord, I warrant you, we'll play our part, As he shall think, by our true diligence, He is as good as what we say he is.

LORD. Take him up gently, and bed with him; And each one to his office, when he wakes.— [Some hear out Sly. A trumpet sounds

SIRRAH, go see what trumpet 'tis that sounds:—

[Exit Servant.

Belike, some noble gentleman: that means,

Travelling some journey, to repose him here.—
HORSESS  You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
INDUCTION.-SCENE II.  255

Re-enter a Servant.

How now! who is it?

Serv. It is the rich, meinem lord.

Players that offer service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near:

Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome.

1 Play. We thank your honour.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

2 Play. So please your lordship to accept our duty.

Lord. With all my heart.—This fellow I remember, since once he played to a farmer's eldest son:

I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part was aptly fitted, and naturally performed.

1 Play. I think, 'twas Soto that your honour means.

Lord. The very true;—thou didst it excellent.

Well, you are come to me in happy time:

The rather for I have some sport in hand.

Wherein your cunning can assist me much.

There is a lord will bear you play to-night:

But I am doubtful of your modesties.

Lest, ever-varying of his odd behaviour,

(For yet his honour never heard a play,)

You break into some merry passion,

And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs,

If you should smile, he grows impatient.

1 Play. Fear not, my lord; we can contain our

Were he the veriest antic in the world. [selves

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery.

And give them friendly welcome every one:

Let them want nothing that my house affords.

Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew my page, [Toa Serv.

And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady:

That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber,

And call him—madam, do him obeisance.

Tell him from me, (as he will win my love,)

He bear himself with honourable action,

Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies

Unto their lords, by them accomplish'd;

Such duty to the drunkard let him do,

With soft low tongue, and lowly courtesy;

And say, 'What is't your honour will command,

Wherein your lady, and your humble wife,

May shew her duty, and make known her love?

And then—with kind embracements, tempting kisses,

And with delightful words in his bosom—

Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd;

To see her noble lord restored to health,

Who, for twice seven years, hath esteem'd him

No better than a poor and loathsome beggar:

And if the boy hath not a woman's gift,

To raise a shower of command'd tears,

An onion will do well for such a shift:

Which in a napkin being close conveyed,

Shall in despite enforce a watery eye.

See this despatch'd with all the haste thou canst;

Anon I'll give thee more instructions. [Exeunt Serv.

I know, the boy will use surcease the grace,

Voice, gait, and action of a gentlewoman:

I long to hear him call the drunkard, husband;

And how my men will stay themselves from laughter,

When they do homage to this simple peasant.

I'll in to counsel them: haply, my presence

May well abate their over-merry spleen,

Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber in the Lord's House.

Sirv. For God's sake, a pot of small sike.

1 Serv. Will't please your lordship drink a cup of conserve?

2 Serv. Will it please your honour taste of these

3 Serv. What repute will your honour wear to-day?

Sirv. I am Christopher Sly; call not me honour, nor lordship: I never drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserve, give me conserves of beef: Ne'er ask me what repute I'll wear: for I have no more doubles than backs, no more stockings than legs, nor no more shoes than feet; nay, sometimes, more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather.

Lord. Heaven cease this idle humour in your

O, that a mighty man of such descent, [honour!

Of such possessions, and so high esteem.

Should be infused with so foul a spirit!

Sly. Why, what should make my mad? Am not I

Christopher Sly, old Sly's son of Burton-heath; by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by trans-mutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat ale-wife of Wincot, if she know me not; if she say I am not foureene pence on the score for sheere ale, score me up for the King's playing in Christendom. What, I am not bestraught: Here's

1 Serv. O, this it is that makes your lady mourn

2 Serv. O, this it is that makes your servants droop

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. [House

O, noble lord, bethank thee of thy birth;

Call him hence. Now to his dust and trans-stitute.

Banish hence these abject lowly dreams.

Look how thy servants do attend on thee,

Each in his office ready at thy beck.

Wilt thou have music? stark! Apollo plays, [Music.

And twenty caged nightingales do sing:

Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch,

Softer and sweeter than the lastful bed

On parings trium'd up for Sereniss.

Say, thou wilt walk: we will bestrew the ground

Or wilt thou ride? thy horses shall be trappid,

Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.

Dost thou love hawking? thou hast hawks will soar

Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,

And fight as they shall please:

1 Serv. Say, thou wilt course; thy greyhounderes

As breathed stages, ay, fleeter than the roc. [as swift

2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee

Adonis, painted by a running brook: [straight

And Cythera all in sedges hid;

Which seem to move and wanent with her breath,

Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We'll shew thee lo, as she was a maid;

And how she was beguiled and surpriz'd,

As lively painted as the deed was done.

3 Serv. Or Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood;

Scratching her legs that one shall swear she bleeds:

And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,

So workmanly the bloody and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:

Thou hast a lady far more beautiful

Than any woman in this waging age.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee,

Like envious clouds o'er-rain her lovely face,

She was the fairest creature in the world;

And yet she is the inferior earth.

Sly. Am I a lord! and have I such a lady!

Or do I dream, or have I dream'd till now!
I do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak; I smell sweet savours, and I feel soft things:—
Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed;
And not a tinker, nor Christophero Sly.—
Well, bring our lady hither to our sight;
And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale. [Hands.]
Serv. Will you please your mightiness to wash your hands?
Servants present an ever, bason, and napkin.
O, how we joy to see your wit restor'd! O, that once more you knew but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream;
Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.
Sly. These fifteen years by my life, a goody nap.
But I doubt I never speak all that time.
Serv. O, ye, my lord; but very idle words:—
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say, ye were beaten out of door;
And raiu upon the hostess of the house;
And say, you would present her at the feet,
Because she brought stone jugs and no seal'd quart's;
Sometimes you would call out for John Hacket.
Sly. Ay, the woman's maid of the house; [maid
3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor no such Nor no such men, as you have reckond' up,—
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turf, and Henry Pimpernell;
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.
Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends!
All. Amen.
Sly. I thanke thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a lady, with Attendants.
Page. How fares my noble lord?
Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheer enough.
What is my wife?
Page. Here, noble lord; What is thy will with her?
Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me—husband?
My mea should call me—lord; I am your goodman.
Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband.
I am your wife in all obedience. [band
Serv. I know it well:—What must I call her?
Lord. Madam.
Serv. Al'lad madam, or Joan madam?
Lord. Madam, and nothing else; so lords call ladies.
Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd and Above some fifteen year and more. [slept
Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me;
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.
Sly. Tis much;—Servants, leave me and her alone—
Madam, undress you, and come now to bed.
Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you,
To pardon me yet for a night or two;
Or, if not so, until the sun be set:
For your physicians have expressly charg'd,
In peril to incur your former malady.
That I should yet abstain me from your bed:
I have this reason, that I am for excuse.
Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long.
But I would be loath to fall into my dreams again;
I will therefore tarry, in despite of the fleth and the blood.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. Your honour's players, hearing your amend,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy,
[meet
For so your doctors hold it very meet;
Seeing too much sadness hath congeald'your blood,
And melancholy is the curse of frawzy,
Therefore, they thought it good you hear a play,
And frame your mind to mirth and meritment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it: Is not a common a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?
Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.
Sly. What, household stuff?
Page. It is a kind of history.
Sly. Well, we'll see't: Come, madam wife, sit by my side, and let the world slip; we shall o'er be younger. [They sit down.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A public Place.

Enter LUCENTIO and TRanio.

Luc. Tranio, since—for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,—
I am arriv'd for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And, by my father's love and leave, am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company.
Most trusty servant, well approv'd in all:
Here let us breathe, and happily institute
A course of learning, and ingenious studies.
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens,
Gave me my being, and my father first,
A merchant of great traffic through the world,
Vincinio, come of the Berbatoll's.
Vincenio his son, brought up in Florence,
It shall become, to serve all hopes conceiv'd,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study,
Virtue, and that part of philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happiness
By virtue 'specially to be achieve'd.
Tell me thy mind: for I have Pisa, left,
And am to Padua come; as he that leaves
A shallow plash, to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.
Tra. Mi perdono, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself;
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy.
On my good master, while we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoics, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks,
As Ovid he an outcast quite abjur'd:
Talk logic with acquaintance that you have,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk:
Music and poesy use to quicken you;
The mathematics, and the metaphysics,
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you
No profit grows, where is no pleasure ta'en;—
In brief, sir, study what you most affect.
Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well dost thou advise.
If, Blondello, thou wert come ashore,
We could at once put us in readiness;
And take a lodging, fit to entertain
Such friends, as time in Padua shall beget.
But stay awhile: What company is this?
Tra. Master, some show, to welcome us to town.

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio. Lucentio and Tranio stand aside.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no further,
For I know I firmly am resolv'd you know;
That is,—not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder:
If either of you both love Katharina,
Because I know you well, and love you well,
Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.
ACT I.—SCENE I.

To can her rather: She's too tough for me.— There, there Hortensio, will you any wife? Kath. I pray you, sir, [to Bap.] is it your will To make a state of me amongst these mates? Hor. Mates, maid! how mean you that! no mates Unless you were another, milder month. [For you, Kath, faith, sir, you shall never need to fear; I was, it is not half way to her heart: But, if it were, doubt not her care should be To comb your noodle with a three-leg'd stool, And paint your face, and use you like a fool. Hor. From all such devils, good Lord, deliver us! Gre. And me too, good Lord! [Aside: Tra. Hush, master! here is some good pastime That wench is stark mad, or wonderful froward. Luc. But in the other's silence I do see Maid's mild behaviour and sobriety. Peace, Tranio. Tra. Well said, master; mum! and gare your fill. Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good What I have said.— Bianca, get you in: And let it not displease thee, good Bianca; For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Kath. A pretty peat! 'tis best Put finger in the eye—an she knew why. * Bian. Sister, content you in my discontent. Sir, in our pleasure hides the sport. My books, and instruments, shall be my company; On them to look, and practise by myself. Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou may'st hear Minerva speak. [Aside. Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange? Sorry am I, that our good will effects Least grief. Gre. Why, will you mew her up, Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell, And make her bear the penance of her tongue? Bap. Gentlemen, content ye; I am resolv'd:— Go in, Bianca. [Exit Bianca. And for I know, she taketh most delight In music, instruments, and poetry. Schooling may I will keep within my house, Fit to instruct her youth.—If you, Hortensio, Or signior Gremio, you,—know any such, Prefer them hither; for, to cunning men I will be very kind, and liberal To mine own children in good bringing up; And so, farewell. Katharina, you may stay; For I have more to communickate to Bianca. [Exit Kath. Why, and I trust, I may go too; May I not? What, shall I be appointed hours; as though, belike, I knew not what to take, and what to leave! Ha! [Exit Gre. You may go to the devil's dam; your gifts are so great, here is none will hold you. Their love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out; our cake's dough on both sides. Farewell.—Yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man, to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father! Hor. So will I, signior Gremio: But a word, I pray. Though the nature of our quarrel yet never break'd parle, know now, upon advice, it toucheth us both,—that we may yet again have access to our fair mistresses, and be happy rivals in Bianca's love,—to labour and effect one thing 'specialy. Gre. What's that, I pray? Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister. Gre. A husband! a devil. Hor. I say, a husband. Gre. I say, a devil: Think'st thou, Hortensio,
TAMING OF THE S HREW.

Luc. It is: May it be done?

Tra. Not possible; For who shall bear your part, And be in Padua here, Vincentio; Keep how and my book; welcome his friends; Visit his countrymen, and banquet them?

Luc. haste; content thee; for I have it full.

We have not yet been seen in any house;

Nor can we be distinguished by our faces,

For man, or master: then it follows thus;—

Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead.

Keep house, and ply your book; as I should:

I will some other be; some Florizent,

Some Neapolitan, or mean man of Pisa.

'Tis batch'd, and shall be so;—Tranio, at once

Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak:

When Biennello comes, he waits on thee;

But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.

Tra. So had you need. They exchange habits.

In brief then, sir, sith it your pleasure is,

And I am tied to be obedient;

(For so your father charg'd me at our parting;

Be serviceable to my son, quoth he,

Although, I think, 'twas in another sense.)

I content am to be Lucentio.

Because so well I love Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves;

And let me be a slave, to achieve that maid

Whose sudden sight hath thrill'd my wounded eye.

Enter Biennello.

Here comes the rogue.—Sirrah, where have you been?

Bion. Where have I been? Nay, now how, where are you?

Master, has my fellow Tranio stol'n your clothes?

Or you stol'n his? or both? or pray, what's the news?

Luc. Sirrah, come hither; 'tis no time to jest,

And therefore frame your manners to the time.

Your fellow Tranio here, to save my life, Puts my apparel and my countenance on,

And I for my escape have put on his;

For in a quarrel, since I came ashore,

I kill'd a man, and fear I was descried.

Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,

While I make way from hence to save my life; You understand me?

Bion. I do, sir; ne'er a whit.

Luc. Only, and not a jot of Tranio in your mouth; Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him; 'Would I were so too.

Tra. So would I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,—

That Lucentio indeed had Baptista's youngest daught,

But, sirrah, not for my sake, but your master's;—

I advise you use your wits diversely in all kind of com;

When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;

But in all places else, your master Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio, let's go—

One thing more rests, that thyself execute; [Exeunt

To make one among these woosers: if thou ask me Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

1 Serv. My lord you nod; you do not mind the play.

Sly. Yes, by saint Anne, do I. A good matter surely; Comes there any more of it?

Page. My lord, 'tis but begun.

Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady; [Would 'twere done!

SCENE II.—The same. Before Hortensio's House.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
As Socrates' Xantippe, or a worse,
She moves me not, or not removes, at least,
Affection's edge in me; were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatic seas:
I come to wipe it wealthily in Padua;
If I am truly, then happily in Padua.

Grn. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his mind is: Why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet-baby; or an old trot with no teeth in her head, though she has as many diseases as two and fifty horses: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.

Hor. Petrucho, since we have stepped thus far in,
I will continue that I broach'd in jest,
I can, Petrucho, help thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous;
Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman:
Her only fault (and that is faults enough),
Is,—that she is intolerably curst,
And shrewd, and froward: so beyond all measure,
That were my state far worse than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Pet. Hortensio, peace; thou know'st not gold's effect.
Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough; [feet—
For I will hold her, though she chide as loud.
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is a gentleman,
An affable and courteous gentleman:
Her name is Katharina Minola,
Renowned in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her;
And he knew my deceased father well:—
I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her;
And then I promise, I'll make terms with you,
To give you over at this first encounter,
Unless you will accompany me thither.

Grn. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. O my word, an she knew him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon him: She may, perhaps, call him half a score knaves, or so, why, that's nothing: an he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see within a cut: You know him not, sir.

Hor. Tarry, Petrucho, I must go with thee; For in Baptista's house I keep a tryst—
He hath the jewel of my life in hold,
His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca;
And her withholdeth from me, and other more
Suitors to her, and rivals in my love,
Supposing it a thing impossible,
[For those defects I have before rehearsed,]
That ever Katharina will be won.

Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en;
That none shall have access unto Bianca,
Till Katharine the curst have got a husband.

Grn. Katharine the curst!
A title for a maid; of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now shall my friend Petrucho do me grace;
And offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster
Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca;
That so I may by this device, at least,
Have leave and leisure to make love to her,
And, unsuspected, court her by herself.

Enter Gremio; with him Luciento disguis'd, with books under his arm.

Grn. Here's no knavery! See; to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together!

Master, master, look about you; Who goes there? ha!

Hor. Peace, Grumio; 'tis the rival of my love—
Petrucho, stand by a while.

Grn. A proper stripling, and an amorous! [They retire.

Grn. O, very well: I have perus'd the note.
Hark you, sir; I 'll have them very fairly bound:
All books of love, see that at any hand; And see you read no other lectures to her:
You understand me:—Over and beside Signior Baptista's liberality,
I 'll mend it with a largess:—Take your papers too, And let me have them very well perform'd;
For she is sweeter than perfume itself,
To whom they go. What will you read to her?
Luc. Whate'er I read to her, I 'll plead for you,
As for my patron, (stand you so assur'd,) As firmly as yourself were still in place:
Ten, and (perhaps) with more successful words
Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir.

Grn. O this learning! what a thing it is!

Grn. O this woodcock! what an ass it is!

Hor. Grumio, mum!—God save you, signior Gremio.

Grn. And you 're well met, signior Hortensio, Trow Whither I am going!—To Baptista Minola. [you, I promised to inquire about a schoolmaster for fair Bianca,
And, by good fortune, I have lighted well
On this young man; for learning, and behaviour, Fit for her turn; well read in poetry
And other books,—good ones, I warrant you.

Hor. 'Tis well: and I have met a gentleman, Hath promised me to help him another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress;
So shall I no whate behind in duty To fair Bianca, so befo'ed of me.

Grn. Beloved of me,—and that my deeds shall prove.

Grn. And that his bags shall prove. [Aside.

Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love; Listen to me, and if you speak me fair, I 'll tell you news indifferent good for either. Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his liking, Will undertake to wo curst Katharine;
Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please.

Grn. So said, so done, is well:
Hortensio, have you told her faults?

Pet. I know she is an icksome brawling scold;
If that be all, masters, I hear no harm.

Grn. Na, say'st me so, friend? What countryman?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son:
My father dead, my fortune lives for me;
And I do hope good days, and long, to see.

Grn. O, sir, such a life, with such a wife, were strange:
But if you have a stomach, to 'ot O' God's name;
You shall have me assisting you in all.
But, will you woo this wild cat?
As will a chesnut in a farmer's fire?
Tush! tush! fear boys with bags.

Bap. For he fears none.

Gre. Hortensio, hark!

This gentleman is happily arriv'd,
My mind presumes, for his own good, and yours.

Hor. I promis'd we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooling, whatsoe'er.

Gre. And so we will; provided, that he win her.

Bap. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio, bravely appareled; and Biondello.

Bap. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold,
Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way
To the house of Signior Baptista Minola?

Gre. He that has the two fair daughters:—is't aside to Tranio.] he you mean?

Tra. Even he.

Biondello!

Gre. Hark you, sir; You mean not her to——

Tra. Perhaps, him and her, sir; What have you to do?

Gre. Not her that chides, sir, or any hand, I pray.

Tra. I love no chiders, sir;—Biondello, let's away.

Luc. Well begun, Tranio.

Biondello!

Hor. Sir, a word ere you go:

Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea, or no?

Tra. An if I be, sir, is it any offence?

Gre. No; if, without more words, you will get you

Tra. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free

For me, as for you?

Gre. But so is not she.

Tra For what reason. I beseech you?

Gre. For this reason, if you 'll know,—

That she's the choice love of signior Gremio.

Hor. That she's the chosen of signior Hortensio.

Tra. Solly, my masters! if you be gentleman,

Do me this right,—bear me with patience.

Baptista is a noble gentleman.

To whom my father is not all unknown;
And, were his daughter fairer than she is.
She may more suitors have, and me for one.

Fair Leda's daughter had a thousand wooers;
Then well one more may fair Bianca have;
And so she shall: Lucentio shall make one.

Then, Paris came, he was the man to be shamed:

Gre. What! this gentleman will out-talk us all.

Luc. Sir, give him head; I know he'll prove a jade.

Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?

Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as to ask you,

Did you yet ever see Baptista's daughter?

Tra. No, sir; but hear I do, that he hath two;

The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
As is the other for beauteous modesty.

Pet. Sir, sir, the first 's for me; let her go by.

Gre. Yea, leave that labour to great Hercules;

And let it be more than Alcides' twelve.

Pet. Sir, understand you this of me, insooth;—

The youngest daughter, whom you heardken for,

Her father keeps from all access of suitors;

And will not promise her to any man,

Until the elder sister first be wed:

The younger then is free, and not before.

Tra. If it be so, sir, that you are the man

Must stand us all, and me among the rest;

An if you break the ice, and do this feat,—

Achieve the elder, set the younger free.

For as a could with the ricoch shal be to have her,

Will not so graceless be, to be ingrate.

Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do conceive;

And since you do profess to be a suitor,

You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman,

To whom we all rest generally beholden.

Tov. Sir, I shall not be slack: in sign whereof,

Please ye we may contrive this afternoon,

And quaff carouses to our mistress' health;

And do as adversaries do in law,—

Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.

Gre. Bap. O excellent motion! Fellows, let's be—

Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it so——

Petruchio, I shall be your ben venuto.

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Katharine and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong your-

To make a bondmaid and a slave of me:—

Thyself, that I disdain; but for these other gawds,

Unbend my hands. I'll pull them off myself,

Yea, all my raiment, to my petticoat;

Or, what you will command me, will I do,

So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell

Whom thou lov'st best: see thou dissemble not.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive

I never yet beheld that special face,

Which I could fancy more than any other.

Kath. Minyon, thou liest; 'Is't not Hortensio?

Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,

I'll plead for you myself, but you shall have him.

Kath. O then, belike, you fancy riches more;

You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?

Nay, then you jest; and now I well perceive,

You have but jested with me all this while:

I prythee, sister Kate, untie my hands.

Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so.

[Strikes her.

Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this

Insolence?—

Bianca, stand aside; poor girl! she weeps:—

Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her.

For shame, thou hilding of a devilish spirit;

Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee?

When did she cross thee with a bitter word?

Kath. Her silence slouts me, and I'll be reveng'd.

[Exit Katharine.

Bian. What, in my sight?—Bianca, get thee in.

[Exit Bianca.

Kath. Will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see,

She is your treasure, she must have a husband;

I must dance bare-foot on her wedding-day,

And, for your love to her, lead apes in hell.

Talk not to me; I will go sit and weep,

Till I can find occasion of revenge.

[Exit Katharine.

Enter Gremio, with Lucentio in the habit of a mean man; Petruchio, with Hortensio as a musician;

and Tranio, with Biondello bearing a lute and books.

Gre. Good-morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good-morrow, neighbour Gremio: God save you, gentleman.

Pet. And you, good sister! Pray, have you not a daugh-

Call'd Katharina, fair, and virtuous?

[ter

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call'd Katharina.

Gre. You are too blunt, go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, signior Gremio; give me leave.—

I am a gentleman of Verona, sir,
ACT II.—SCENE I.

261

That,—hearing of her beauty, and her wit, Her affability, and bashful modesty, Her wondrous qualities, and mild behaviour,— Am bold to show myself a forward guest Within your house, to make mine eyes the witness Of that report which I so oft have heard. And, for an entrance to my entertainment, I do present you with a man of mine— [Presenting Hortensio.]

Cunning in music, and the mathematics, To instruct her fully in those sciences, Whereof, I know, she is not ignorant: Accept of him, or else you do me wrong; His name is Licio, born in Mantua.

Bap. You're welcome, sir; and be for your good But for my daughter Katharine,—this I know, [sake: And, toward your turn, the more my grief. Pet. I see you do not mean to part with her; Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not, I speak but as I find. Whence are you, sir? what may I call your name? Pet. Petruchio is my name; Antonio's son, A man well known throughout all Italy. Bap. You seem not for the hire of your barge. Gre. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray, Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too: Baccare! you are marvellous forward. [doing. Pet. O, pardon me, signior Gremio; I would fain be Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your wooing——Neighbours, this gift very grateful, I am sure of it. To express the like kindliness myself, that have been more kindly beheld to you than any, I freely give unto you this young scholar, [presenting Lucentio.] that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics: his name is Cambio; pray, accept his service.

Bap. Much thanks, signior, Gremio; welcome, good Cambio.—But gentle sir, [to Tranio.] methinks you walk like a stranger; May I be so bold to know the cause of your coming? Tran. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own; That being a stranger in this city here, Do make myself a suitor to your daughter, Bianca, fair, and virtuous. Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me, In the preference of the eldest sister: This liberty is all that I request.— That upon knowledge of my parentage, I may have welcome amongst the rest that woo, And free access and favour as the rest, And, toward the education of your daughters, I here bestow a simple instrument. And this small packet of Greek and Latin books: If you accept them, then their worth is great. Bap. Lucentio is your name? of whence, I pray? Tran. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio. Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report I know him well: you are very welcome, sir:— Take you [to Hor.] the lute, and you [to Luc.] the set You shall go see your pupils presently. [of books, Holia, within!]

Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead These gentlemen to my daughters; and tell them both, These are their tutors; bid them use them well. [Exit Servant, with Hor. Luc. and Bion. We will go walk a little in the orchard, And then to dinner: You are passing welcome, And so I pray you all to think yourselves. Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste, And every day I cannot come to woo. You knew my father well; and in him, me, Left solely heir to all his lands and goods. Which if I have better'd rather than decreas'd; Then tell me,—If I get your daughter's love, What dowry shall I have with her to wife? Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands: And, in possession, twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure her Of her widowhood,—be it that she survive me,— In all my lands and houses whatsoever. Let specialties be therefore drawn between us, That covenants may be kept on either hand. Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd, This is,—her love; for that is all in all. Pet. Why, that is nothing: for I tell you, father, I am as peremptory as she proud-minded; And where two raging fires meet together, They do consume the thing that feeds their fury: Though little fire grows great with little wind, Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all: So I to her, and so she yields to me: For I am rough, and wot not like a babe. Bap. Well, may'st thou woe, and happy be thy speed! But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words. Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for winds, That shackle not, though they blow perpetually. Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.

Bap. How now, my friend! why dost thou look so Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale. [pale? Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good nurse? Hor. I think, she'll sooner prove a soldier; [sician? Iron may hold with her, but never lutes. Bap. Why, then, let us speak her to the lute? Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me. I did but tell her, she mistook her frets, And how her hand to teach her fingering; When, with a most impatient devilish spirit, Frets, call you these? quoth she: 'I'll fiue them with These, and with that word she struck me on the head, And through the instrument my pale made way; And there I stood amazed for a while, As on a pillory, looking through the lute; While she did call me,—rascal fiddler, And—twangling Jack; with twenty such vile tunes, As she had studied to misuse me so. Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench; I love her ten times more than e'er I did: O, how I long to have some clout with her! Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discontented: Proceed in practice with my younger daughter; She's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns,— Signior Petruchio, will you go with us? Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you? Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here.— [Exit. Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, & Hor. And woo her with some spirit when she comes. Say, that she rail; Why, then I'll tell her plain, She sings as sweetly as a nightingale: Say, that she frown; 'I'll say, she looks as clear As morning roses newly wash'd with dew: Say, she be mute, and will not speak a word; Then I'll commend her volubility, And say,—she uttereth piercing eloquence: If she do bid me pack, I'll give her thanks, As though she bid me stay by her a week; If she deny to wed, I'll 'crave the day When I shall ask the banns, and when be married.— But here she comes; and now, Petruchio, speak. Enter Katharina.

Good morrow, Kate; for that's your name, I hear.
TAMING OF THE SHEREW.

Kath. Well have you heard, but something-hard of hearing;
They call me—katharine, that do talk of me.
Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call’d plain Kate,
And benry Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst,
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,
Kate of Kate-Hall, my super-dainty Kate,
For dainties are all cates; and therefore, Kate.
Take this of me, Kate of my consolation:

Hearing thy mildness praised in every town,
Thy virtues spoke of, and thy beauty sounded,

Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs,

Myself, now will to walk thee for my life. [hitherto
Kate. Mow’d in good time; let him that mov’d you Remove you hence: I knew you at the first,
You were a moveable.
Pet. Why, what’s a moveable?
Kate. A joint-stool.

Pet. Thou hast hit it; come, sit on me.
Kate. Asses are made to bear, and so are you.
Kate. No such jade, sir, as you, if you me mean.
Pet. Alas, good Kate! I will not burden thee:
For, knowing thee to be but young and light,—
Kate. Too light for such a swain as you to catch;
And yet as heavy as my weight should be.
Pet. Should be! should little.
Kate. Well tac’d, and like a buzzard. [thee?
Pet. O, slow-wing’d turtle! shall a buzzard take Kate. Ay, for a turtle; as he takes a buzzard.
Pet. Come, come, you wapsh; I faith, you are too an-Kate. If I be waspish, best beware my sting. [gry
Pet. My remedy is then to pluck it out.
Kate. Ay, if the fool could find it where it lies.
Pet. Who knows not where a wasp doth bear his
In his tail. [ Sting it

Kate. In his tongue.

Pet. Whose tongue?
Kate. Yours, if you talk of tails; and so farewell.
Pet. What, with my tongue in your tail? nay, come
Good Kate; I am a gentleman. [again
Kate. That I’ll try. [Striking him
Pet. I swear I’ll cuff you, if you strike again.
Kate. You lose your arms:
If you strike me, you are no gentleman;
And if no gentleman, why, then no arms.
Pet. A herald, Kate? O put me in thy books.
Kate. What is your crest? a coxcomb?
Pet. A coombless cock, so Kate will be my hen.
Kate. No cock of mine, you crow too like a craven.
Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so Kate. It is my fashion, when I see a crab. [sour
Pet. Why, here’s no crab; and therefore look not Kate. There is, there is. [sour
Pet. Then shew it me.

Kate. Had I a glass, I would.

Pet. What, you mean my face?
Kate. Well aim’d of such a young one.
Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you.
Kate. Yet you are withered.

Pet. ’Tis with cares.
Kate. I care not.
Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth, you scape not Kate. I chafe you, if I tarry; let me go. [so
Pet. No, not a whit; I find you passing gentle.
’Twas told me you were rough, and coy, and sullen,
And now I find report a very liar:
For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous;
But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers:
Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will;
Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk;

But thou with mildness entertain’s thy wooers,
With gentle conference, soft and affable.

Why does the world report, that Kate doth limp?
O slenderous world! Kate, like the hazel-twig,
Is straight, and slender; and as brown in hue,
As hazel-nuts, and sweeter than the kernels.
O, let me see thee walk: thou dost not halt.
Kate. Go, fool, and whom thou keep’st command.
Pet. Did ever Diian so become a grove,
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O, be thou Diian, and let her be Kate;
And then let Kate be chaste, and Diian sportful!

Pet. Where did you study all this goodly speech?
Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Kate. A witty mother! witless else her son.
Pet. Am I not wise?
Kate.

Yes; keep you warm.
Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed:
And therefore, setting all this chat aside,
Thus in plain terms:—Your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife; your dowry ’prented;
And, will you, will you; I will marry you.
Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;
For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
(Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well.)
Thou must be married to no man but me;
For I am he, am born to tame you Kate;
And bring you from a wild eat to a Kate
Conformable, as other household Kates.
Here comes your father: never make denial,
I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Orsino, and Tranio.

Bap. Now,
Signior Petruchio: How speed you with
My daughter?

Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?
It were impossible, I should speed amiss.
Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine in your dumps?
Kate. Call you me, daughter? now I promise you,
You have shew’d a tender fatherly regard,
’twas wish me wed to one half lunatic;
A woman’s husband, and a man’s wife.
So swearing back,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.
Pet. Father, ’tis thus,—yourself and all the world,
That talk’d of her, hath talk’d amiss of her;
If she be curst, it is for policy:
For she’s not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn;
For patience she will prove a second Grissel;
And Roman Lucrece for her chastity:
And to conclude,—we have ’greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding-day.
Kate. I’ll see thee hang’d on Sunday first.
Gre. Hart, Petruchio! she says, she’ll see thee hang’d first. [four part

Ten. Is this your speeding? nay, then, good night
Pet. Be patient, gentlemen; I choose her for my
If she and I be pleased, what’s that to you? [self;
’Tis bargain’d ’twixt us twain, being alone,
That she shall still be curst in company.
I tell you, ’tis incredible to believe
How much she loves me:—O, the kindest Kate!—
She hung about my neck; and kiss on kiss
She vowed so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love.
O, you are novices! ’tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacoek wratch can make the curstest shrew.
Give me thy hand, Kate; I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel against the wedding-day:—
ACT III.—SCENE I.

Provide the feast, father, and bid the guests;
I will be sure, my Katharine shall be fine; [hands;]
I'll know not what to say: but give me your God send you joy, Petrucchio! 'tis a match.

Gre. Tra. Amen, say we: we will be witnesses.
Pet. Father, and wife, and gentlemen, alack! I will to Venice, Sunday comes apart:
We will have rings, and things, and fine array;
And kiss me Kate, we will be married o' Sunday.

[Exeunt Petruccio and Katharina, severally.

Gre. Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly?

Bap. Faith, gentlemen, now I play a merchant's
And venture madly on a desperate need. [part;

Tra. 'Twas a commodity betray'd so suddenly!

Twill bring you gain, or perish on the seas.
Bap. The gain I seek is—quiet in the match.

Gre. No doubt, but he hath got a quiet catch.

But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter;—
Now is the day we long have looked for;
I am your neighbour, and was suitor for.

Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more
Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.

Gre. YouAngel! thou canst not love so dear an I.

Tra. Grey-beard! thy love doth freeze.

Gre. But thine doth fryst.

Skipper, stand back; 'tis age, that nourisith.

Tra. But youth, in ladies' eyes, that nouriseth.

Bap. Content you, gentlemen; I'll compound this ' Twis deeds must win the prize; and he, of both,

That can assure my daughter greatest dover,
Shall have Bianca's love—

Say, signior Gremio, what can you assure her?

Gre. First, as you know, my house within the city
Is richly furnish'd with plate and gold.

Basons, and ewers, to have her dainty hands;
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry;

In every cofet I have stuff'd my crowns;
La cressy chests my arres, counterparts,
Costly apparel, tents and canopies,
Fine linen, Turkey cushions boss'd with pearl,
Valence of Venice gold be networking.

Pewter, and brass, and all things that belong
To house or house-keeping; then, at my farm,
I have a hundred milch-kine to the pail,
Sixscore fat oxen standing in my stails,
And all things answerable to this portion.

Myself am struck in years, I must confess;
And, if I die to-morrow, this is here.
If, whilst I live, she will be only mine.

Tra. That, only, came well in—Sir, list to me,
I am your father's heir, and only son:
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
I'll leave her houses three or four as good,
Within rich Pha's walls, as any one.

Old signior Gremio has in Padua
Besides two thousand ducats by the year,
Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.

What, have I pinch'd you, signior Gremio?

Gre. Two thousand ducats by the year, of land!
My land amounts not to so much in all;
That she shall have; besides an argosy?

That cow is lying in Marseilles' road;

What, have I pinch'd you with an argosy?

Tra. Gremio, 'tis known, my father hath no less Than three great argosies; besides two galliasses,
And twelve tight galleys: these will assure her,
And twice as much, whate'er thou offer'st next.

Gre. Nay, I have offer'd all, I have no more;
And she can have no more than all I have;—

If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why, then the maid is mine from all the world,
TAMING OF THE SHREW

Bion. Let's hear:—

[Hortensio plays.

Luc. Sat in the hole, man, and tune again.

Bion. Now let me see if I can construe it:—Hor that Sinors, I know you not: hic est Sigfell tells, I trust you not.—His serenat Priami, take heed he us not:
regina, presume not:—celta seans, despair not.
Hor. Madam, 'tis now in tune.

[All but the base.

Hor. The base is right; 'tis the base knife that jars.

How fierly and forward our pedant is!

Now, for my life, the knave doth court my love:
Petrucho, I'll watch you better yet.

Bion. In time, Luc. I mistrust it not; for, sure, Xacides
Was Ajax,—call'd so from his grandfather.

Bion. I must believe my master; else, I promise you,
I should be arguing still upon that doubt:
But let it rest.—Now, Licio, to you:—

Good masters, take it not unkindly, pray,
That I have been thus pleasant with you both.

Hor. You may go walk, [to Lucintio] and give me leave awhile;
My lessons make no music in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formal, sir? well, I must wait,
And watch vital; for, but I be deceiv'd,
Our fine musician groweth amorous.

[Aside.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the ordering of any fingering,

I must begin with rudiments of art;

To teach you gamet in a briefer sort,

More pleasant, pitiful, and effectual,

Than hath been taught by any of my trade:

And there it is in writing, fairly drawn.

Bion. Why, I am past my gamet long ago.

Hor. Yet read the gamet of Hortensio.

Bion. I read it not. Gamut I saw the ground of all accord,
A re, to plead Hortensio's passion:
B mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord,

C fault, that loves with all affection:
D sol re, one cliff, two notes have I;

E la mi, shem pry, or I die:

Call you this—gamut! tut! I like it not:

Old fashions please me best; I am not so nice,

To change true rules for old inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books,
And help to dress your sister's chamber up;

You know, to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bion. Farewell, sweet masters, both; I must be gone.

[Execut Bianca and Servant.

Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

[Exit.

Hor. But I have cause to pray into this pedant;

Methinks, he looks as though he were in love:—
Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble,
To cast thy wandering eyes on every stake,
Seize thee, that list: If once I find thee ranging,
Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Before Baptista's House.

Enter Baptista, Griseld, Tranio, Katharina,
Bianca, Lucentio, and Attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, [to Tranio] this is the pointed day.

That Katharine and Petrucho should be married,
And yet we hear not of our son-in-law:
What will be said? what mockery will it be,
To want the bridegroom, when the priest attends
To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage!

Bion. What says Lucentio to this shame of ours? [for'd Kath. 'No shame but mine: I must, forsooth, be
To give my hand, oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a mad-brain rudesby, full of spleen;
Who would in haste, and means to wed at leisure.
I told you, I, he was a frantic fool.

Hiding his bitter jests in blunt behaviour,
And, to be noted for a merry man,
He'll woo a thousand, 'point the day of marriage,
Make friends, invite them, and proclaim the banns;
Yet never means to wed where he hath word.
Now must the world point at poor Katharine,
And say,—Lo, there is mad Petruchio's wife,
If I in time will my name in course of time,
And marry her.

[Exit. Petrucho, good Katharine, and Baptista too;
Upon my life, Petruchio means but well,
Whatever fortune stays him from his word:

Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise;
Though he be merry, yet vital he's honest.

Kath. 'Would Katharine had never seen him though!
[Exit, weeping, followed by Bianca, and others.

Bion. What girl can I blame this?
For such an injury would vex a very saint,
Much more a shrew of thy impudent humour.

[Enter Bionello.

Bion. Master, master! news, old news, and such new news as I never heard of!

Bap. Is it news both old and too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news, to hear of Petruchio's coming?

Bap. Is he come?

Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. What will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am, and sees you there.

[Exit. But, say, what:—To thine old news.

Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming, in a new hat,
And an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches, thrice turned;
A pair of boots that have been candle-cases,
One buckled, another faced; an old rusty sword taken out
To thread a hilt with a broken hilt, with a broken hilt
And chapeless; with two broken points: His horse hipped
With an old motley saddle, the stirrups of no kindred:
Besides, possessed with the glanders, and like to nose
In the chine; troubled with the lampass, infected
With the fashions, full of windgalls, sped with spavins,
Raised with the yellows, past care of the fives, stark
Spoiled with the stagers, begnawn with the bitts;
Swayed in the back, and shoulder-shotten; ne'er legged
Before and with a half-checked bit, and a head-stall
Of sheep's leather; which, being restrained to Keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and
Now repaired with knots; one girt six times piece,
And a woman's crupper of velure, which hath two Letters for her name, falsely set down in studs, and Here and there pieced with packthread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir, his lackey, for all the world caparisoned like the horse;
With a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other,
Gartered with red and blue list; an old hat, and The humour of forty fancies pricked in't for a feather: a monster,
A very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian footboy, or a gentleman's lackey.

[Exit. Tis some old humour pricks him to this
A fashion;—

Yet oftentimes he goes but mean apparel'd.

Bap. I am glad he is come, howsoever he comes.

Bion. Why, sir, he comes not.
ACT III.—SCENE II.

Bep. Why, that’s all one. Bion. No, by saint Jamy, I hold you a penny, A horse and a man is more than one, and yet not many.

Pet. Not so well apparel’d as I wish you were.

Pet. Were it better I should rush in thus. But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride? How does my father?—Gentles, methinks you frown; And therefore shew this gayly company; As if they saw some wondrous monument, Some comet, or unusual prodigy?

Bep. Why, sir, you know, this is your wedding day: First we were sad, fearing you would not come; Now sadder, that you come so neglig’d. Fye! doff this habit, shame to your estate, An exact sore to our solemn festival.

Tra. And tell us, what occasion of import Hath all so long detain’d you from your wife, And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

Pet. Tidings it was to tell, and harsh to hear: Sufficeth, I am come to keep my word, Though in some part enforced to digress; Which, sir, if I survive, I will so excuse As you shall well be satisfied withal.

But, where is Kate? I stay too long from her; The morning wares, ’tis time we were at church. Tra. See not your bride in these unseemly robes; Go to my chamber, put on clothes of mine.

Pet. Not I, believe me, thus I’ll visit her. Bap. But thus, I trust, you will not marry her. Bep. Good sooth, even thus; therefore have done with me to see she’s married, not unto my clothes: words; Could I repair what she will wear in me, As I can change these poor accontriments, Twere well for Kate, and better for myself. But what a fool am I, to chuse with you, When I should bid good-morrow to my brine, And seal the title with a lovely kiss!

[Enter PETRUCHIO, GREMIO, and BIONDELLO.

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attire: We will persuade him, be it possible, To put on better ere he go to church.

Bep. I'll after him, and see the event of this. [Exit. Tra. But, sir, to her love concerneth us to add She doth her manners: Which to bring to pass As I before imparted to your worship, I am to get a man,—what’er he be, It skills not much; we’ll fit him to our turn,— And he shall be Vincentio of Pisa, And make assurance, here in Padua, Of greater sums than I have promised. Sick’st thou quietly enjoy your hope, And marry sweet Bianca with your consent. Luc. Were it not that my fellow schoolmaster Doth watch Bianca’s steps so narrowly, Twere good, methinks, to steal our marriage; Which once performed, let all the world say—no, I’ll keep it mine own, despite of all the world. Tra. That by degrees we mean to look into, And watch our vantage in this business: We’ll over-reach the greybeard, Gremio,

The narrow-pining father, Miaola: The quaint musician, anxious Licio: All for my master’s sake, Lucentio.—

Resenter GREMIO. Signor GREMIO! came you from the church? Grem. As willingly as ever I came from school! Tra. And is the bride and bridegroom coming home? Grem. A bridegroom, say you? ’tis a groom, indeed, A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find. Tra. Corster than she? why, ’tis impossible. Grem. Why, he’s a devil, a devil, a very fiend. Tra. Why, she’s a devil, a devil, the devil’s dam. Grem. Tut! she’s a lamb, a dove, a fool to him. I’ll tell you, sir Lucentio; When the priest Should ask—if Katharine should be his wife, Ay, by gods and women, quoth he; and swore so loud, That, all amaz’d, the priest let fall the book: And, as he stoop’d again to take it up, The mad-brain’d bridegroom took him such a cuff, That down fell priest and book, and book and priest; Now take them up, quoth he, if any list.

Tra. What said the wench, when he arose again? Grem. Trembled and shook; for, why, he stamp’d, As if the vicar meant to eazon him. [And swore, But after many ceremonies done, He calls for wine.—A health, quoth he; as if he Had been ashamed, carousing to his mates.

After a storm—Quaff’d off the muscadel, And threw the sops all in the sexton’s face; Having no other reason,— But that his beard grew thin and hangery, And seem’d to ask him sops as he was drinking. This done, he took the bride about the neck; And kiss’d her lips with such a clamorous smack, That, at the parting, all the church did echo. I, seeing this, came thence for very shame; And after me, I know, the rout is coming: Such a mad marriage never was before; Hark, hark! I hear the minstrels play. [Music.

Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, BLANCA, BAPTISTA, HONESTIO, GREMIO, and Train. Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your know, you think to dine with me to-day, [pains; And have prepar’d great store of wedding cheer; But so it is, my haste doth call me hence, And therefore how I mean to take my leave.

Bap. Is’t possible you will away to-night? Pet. Pet. I must away to-day, before night come:— Make it no wonder; if you knew my business, You would entreat me rather go than stay. And, honest company, I thank you all, That have beheld me give away myself To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife: Dine with my father, drink a health to me; For I must hence, and farewell to you all. Tra. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner. Pet. It may not be.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Grumio.

Gru. I'elp me, I'm no scholar; but I know a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis. Curt. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio? Gru. O, ay, Curtis, ay: and therefore fire, fire; cast on no water. Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported? Gru. She was, good Curtis, before this frost: but, thou know'st, winter takes man, woman, and beast; for it hath tamed my old master, and my new mistress, and she is not so tamed as thou, fellow Curtis. Curt. Away, thou three inch fool! I am no beast. Gru. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I, at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose head (she being now at hand,) thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office? Curt. I pr'ythee, good Grumio, tell me, How goes the world? Gru. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine; and, therefore, fire: Do thy duty, and have thy duty; for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Curt. There's fire ready; And, therefore, good Grumio, the housewife tells me? Gru. Why, Jack boy! oh boy! and as much news as thou wilt. Curt. Come, you are so full of coneycatching:—

Gru. Why, therefore, fire; for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewn, cobwebs swept; the serving men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order? Curt. All ready; And, therefore, I pray thee, news? Gru. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curt. How? Gru. Out of their saddles into the dirt; And thereby hangs a tale. Curt. Let's ha't, good Grumio. Gru. Lend thine ear. Curt. Here. Gru. There. Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale. Grumio, what is the tale? or is this a tale? and this cutt was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin; Imperius, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress:—

Curt. Both on one horse! Gru. What's that to thee? Curt. Why, a horse. Gru. Tell thou the tale:—But hadst thou not crossed me, thou'st not have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou'st not have heard, in how miry a place: how she was bemolested; how he left her with the horse upon her; how he beat me because her horse stumbled; how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me; how he swore; how she prayed—that never pray'd before; how I cried how the horses ran away; how her bridle was burst; how I lost my crop; with many things of worthy memory; which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Curt. By this reckoning, he is more shrew than she, Gru. Ay; and that, thou and the proudest of you all shall find, when he comes home. But what talk I of this? call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sycarsop, and the rest; let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an indifferent kind: let them curtsey with their left legs; and not presume to touch a hair of my master’s horse-tail, till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?
Curt. They are.
Gru. Call them forth.
Curt. Do you hear, ho? you must meet my master, to countenance my mistress.
Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.
Curt. Who knows not that?
Gru. Thou, it seems; that calleth for company to countenance her.
Curt. I call them forth to credit her.
Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter several Servants.
Nich. Fellow Grumio! Nath. How now, old lad?
Gru. Welcome, you, — how now, you; — what,
you; — fellow, you; — and thus much for greeting.
Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things meet! Nath. All things is ready: How near is our master?
Gru. Even at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not,—Cock’s passion, silence! — I hear my master.

Enter Petruchio and Katharina.
Pet. Where be these knives? What, no man at door,
To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse!
Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip? —
All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.
Pet. Here, sir! here, sir! here, sir! here, sir!
You logger-headed, and unpolish’d grooms! —
What, no attendance? no regard? no duty?
Where is the foolish knife I sent before?
Gru. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.
Pet. You peasan’t swain! you whoreson malt-horse!
Did I not bid thee meet me in the park, drudge!
And bring along these rascal knives with thee?
Gru. Nathaniel’s coat, sir, was not fully made,
And Gabriel’s pumps were all unpink’d? the heel;
There was no link to colour Peter’s hat,
And Walter’s dagger was not come from sheathing:
There were none fine, but Adam, Ralph, and Gre-
The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly; —
Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.
Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in. —

Enter some of the Servants.
Where is the life that late I tem’d—
Sings. Where are those — Sit down, Kate, and welcome.
Soud, soud, soud, soud!

Re-enter Servants, with supper.
Why, when, I say?—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry, Off with my boots, you rogues, you villains! When?
It was the feast of orders grey,
As he goth walked on his way: —
Out, out, you rogue! you pluck my foot awry:
Take that, and meed the plucking off the other. —

[Strikes him.]
Be merry, Kate — Some water, here; what, ho! Who Where’s my spaniel Troilus? — SIRRAH, get you hence,
And bid my cousin Ferdinando come hither: [Exit Serv.
One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with,—

Where are my slippers? — Shall I have some water?

[Enter a boy presented to him, Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily: —
Servant lets the ever fall. You whoreson villains! will you let it fall? [Strikes him.

Kath. Patience, I pray you; ’twas a fault unwilling.
Pet. A whoreson, beelzebudded, flap-eared knave!
Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach
Will you give thanks, sweet Kate; or else shall I —
What is this? mutton?
1 Serv. Ay. Pet. Who brought it?
1 Serv. I. Pet. This burnt; and so is all the meat;
What dogs are these? — Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all:
[Throws the meat, &c. about the stage.
Heedless jolthead, and unmanner’d slaves?
What, do you grumble? I’ll be with you straight.
Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so indisposed;
The meat was well, if you were so contented.
Pet. I tell thee, Kate, ’twas burnt and dried away,
And I expressly am forbid to touch it,
For it engenders choler, phlegmatic anger;
And hence ’twere that both of us did fast,—
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roast’d flesh.
Be patient; to-morrow it shall be mended,
And, for this night, we’ll fast for company:—
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Curtis.
Nath. [Advancing.] Peter, didst ever see the like?
Peter. He kills her in her own humour.

Re-enter Curtis.
Gru. Where is he?
Curt. In her chamber. Making a sermon of continency to her:
And rails, and swears, and rates; that she, poor soul,
Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak;
And sits as one new-risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither. —

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Petruchio.
Pet. Thus have I politly begun my reign,
And ’tis my hope to end successfully:—
My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty
And, till she stoop, she must not be full gorg’d.
For then she never looks upon her hare.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper’s call,
That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites,
That bate, and beat, and will not be obedient.
She eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
Last night she slept not, nor to-night shall she not:
As with the meat, some undeserved fault
I’ll find about the making of the bed:
And here I’ll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:—
Ay, and amid this hurly, I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her:
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night:
And, if she chance to nod, I’ll rail and bawl,
And with the clamour keep her still awake.
This is a way to kill a wile with kindness;
And thus I’ll curb her mad and headstrong humour:
He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak; 'tis charity to shew. —

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.
Tran. Is’t possible, friend Licio, that Bianca
Doth fancy any other but Lucentio?
I tell you, sir, she bears me fair in hand.
Tamming of the Shrew

Hor. Sir, to satisfy you in what I have said,
Stand by, and mark the manner of his teaching.
[They stand aside.

Enter Bianca and Lucentio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profess you in what you read?
Bian. What, master, read you? first resolve me that.
Luc. I read that I profess, the art to love.
Bian. And may you prove, sir, master of your art?
Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart.
[They retire.

Hor. Quick proceed, marry. Now, tell me, I pray,
You that dost swear that your mistress Bianca
Lov'd none in the world so well as Lucentio.

Tra. 0 despiteful love! unconstant womankind!—
I tell thee, Licio, this is wonderful.

Hor. Mistake no more: I am not Licio,
Nor a musician, as I seem to be;
But one that scorn to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion:—
Know, sir, that I am call'd—Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca;
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness
I will with you,—if you be so contented,—
Forswear Bianca, and her love for ever.

Hor. See, how they kiss and court her. Signior Lu-
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow—[centio,
Never to woo her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy of all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Ne'er to marry with her though she would entreat;
Fye on her! see, how beastly she doth court him.

Hor. Would I were in the world, but I had quite for-
For me,—that I may surely keep mine oath! [sworn!
I will be married to a wealthy widow
Ere three days pass; which hath as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggar:
And so farewell, signior Lucentio.—

Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks,
Shall win my love: and so I take my leave,
Resolution as I swore before.

[Exit Hortensio.—Lucentio and Bianca advance.

Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace
As longeth to a lover's blessed case!
Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love;
And for have forsworn you with Hortensio.

Bian. Traiano, you jest; But have you both forsworn
Tra. Mistress, we have. [me?—
Luc. Then we are rid of Licio.

Tra. I faith, he'll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be wod'd and wedded in a day.

Bian. God give him joy!

Tra. Ay, and he'll tane her.

Bian. He says so, Tranio.

Tra. 'Fair, he is gone unto the taming-school.

Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master;
That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long,—
To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello, running.

Bion. O master, master, I have watch'd so long
That I'm dog-weary; but at last I spied
An ancient eagle coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Biondello?

Bion. Master, a mercantane, or a pedant,
I know not what; but formal in apparel,
To gait and countenance surely like a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?—

Tra. If he be cedulous, and trust my tale
I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio;
And give assurance to Baptista Minola,
As if he were the right Vincentio.

Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exit Lucentio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir!

Tra. And you, sir! you are welcome,
Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest!—

Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two:
But then up further; and as far as Rome;
And so to Tripoli, if God lend me life.

Tra. What countryman, I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua, sir?—marry, God forbid!

And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua
To come to Padua; Know you not the cause?
Your ships are staid at Venice; and the duke
(For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him,)
Hath publish'd and proclaimed it openly:
'Tis marvel! but that you're but newly come,
You might have heard it else prech'd about.

Ped. Alas, sir, it is worse for me than so;
For I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy,
This will I do, and this will I advise you:
First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been:
Pisa, my native, for all good fortune.

Tra. Among them, know you one Vincentio?
Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:
A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bion. As much as an apple doth an oyster, and all one.

[Aside.

Tra. To save your life in this extremity,
This favour will I do for his sake:
And think it not the worst of all your fortunes,
That you are like to sir Vincentio.

His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in my house you shall be friendly lodg'd;—

Look, that you take upon you as you should;
You understand me, sir;—so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city:
If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O, sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good.

This, by the way, I let you understand;
My father is here look'd for every day:
A pass assurance of a dower in marriage
Twixt me and one Baptist'a daughter here:
In all these circumstances I'll instruct you;
Go with me, sir, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. — A Room in Petruchio's House.

Enter Katharine and Grumio.

Grum. No, no; forsooth, I dare not, for my life.

Kath. The more my wrong, the more his spite app.

What did he marry me to faminish me?

[ears: Boggers, that come unto my father's door,
Upon entreaty, have a present alms;
If not, elsewhere they meet with charity:
But I,—who never knew how to entreat,—
Am starv'd for meat, giddy for lack of sleep;
With oaths kept waking God, and with brawling fed;
And that which spites me more than all these wants,
He does it under name of perfect love;—
I pr'ythee go, and get me some repast;
I care not what, so it be wholesome food.
Gru. What say you to a neat's foot?—
Kate. 'Tis passing good; I pr'ythee let me have it.
Gru. I fear, it is too phlegmatic a meat:
How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil'd?
Kate. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me.
Gru. I cannot tell; I fear, 's his cholerie.
What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard!
Kate. A dish that I do love to feed upon.
Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.
Kate. Why, then the beef, and let the mustard rest.
Or else you get no beef of Grumio. [Stand.
Kate. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.
Gru. Why, then the mustard without the beef.
Kate. Go, get thee gone, thou false delaying slave.
[Beats him.
That feed'st me with the very name of meat;
Sorow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery!
Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio, with a dish of meat;
and Hortensio.

Pet. How fares my Kate? What, sweetling, all
Hor. Mistress, what cheer? [amort!]
Kate. 'Faith, as cold as can be.
Pet. Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.
Here, love; thou seest how diligent I am,
To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee:
[Sets the dish on a table.
I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.
What, not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not;
And all my pains is sorted to no good:
Here, take away this dish.
Kate. Pray you, let it stand.
Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks;
And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.
Kate. I thank you, sir.
Hor. Signior Petruchio, fye! you are to blame!
Come, mistress Kate, I'll bear you company.
Pet. Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st me.—

Much good do much unto thy gentle heart.
Kate, eat apiece;—And now my honey love,
Will we return unto thy father's house;
And revel it as bravely as the best,
With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings;
With ruffs, and euffs, and farthingales, and things;
With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.
What, last thou din'd? The tailor gave thy leisure,
To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.
Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments:

Enter Haberdasher.

Lay forth the gown.—What news with you, sir?

Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
Pet. Why, this was mounded on a porringier;
A velvet-dish;—fye, fye! 'tis lewd and filthy;
Why, 'tis a cokkle, or a walnutshell,
A knock, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap;
Away with it, come, let me have a bigger.
Kate. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit the time,
And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.
Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too,
And not till then.

Her. That will not be in haste. [Aside.
Kate. Why, sir, I trust, I may have leave to speak;
And speak I will; I am no child, no babe.
Your betters have endure'd me say my mind:
And, if you cannot, best you stop your ears.
My tongue will tell the anger of my heart;
Or else my heart, concealing it, will break;
And, rather than it shall, I will be free
Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.
Pet. Why, thou say'st true; it is a paltry cap,
A cost, you mean to make a puppet of me.
I love thee well, in that thou likest it not.
Kate. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap;
And it I will have, or I will have none.
O mercy, God! what masking stuff is here!
What's this! a sleeve! 'tis like a demi-cannon:
What's that!—What's this like an apple-tart?
Here's snap, and nip, and cut, and slit, and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop—
Why, what, o devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this?
Hor. I see, she's like to have neither cap nor gown.

[Aside.

Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion, and the time.
Pet. Marty, and did; but if you be remember'd,
I did not bid you mar it to the time.
Go, hop me over every kennel bome,
For you shall hop without my custom, sir:
I'll none of it; hence, make your best of it.
Kate. I never saw a better fashion'd gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable:
Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me.
Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.
Tai. She says, your worship means to make a puppet of her.

[Thread.

Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou
Thou thimble, thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail,
Thou bloody suck, thou winter cricket thou,—
Brav'd in mine own house with a skew of thread!
Away, thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant;
Or I shall so be mete thee with thy yard,
As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou livest!
I tell thee, 1, that thou hast mar't her gown.
Tai. Your worship is deceived; the gown is made
Just as my master had direction.
Grumio gave order how it should be done.
Gru. I gave him no order, I gave him the stuff.
Tai. But how did you desire it should be made?
Gru. Marty, sir, with needle and thread.
Tai. But did you not request to have it cut?
Gru. Thou hast faced many things.
Tai. I have.
Gru. Face not me thou hast braved many men;
brave not me; I will neither be faced nor braved
I say unto thee.—I bid thy master cut out the gown;
but I did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou liest.
Tai. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify.
Pet. Read it.
Gru. The note lies in his throat, if he say I said so.

Tai. Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown:
Gru. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it, and bent me to death with a bottom of brown thread! I said, a gown.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Enter Biondello.

Pet. I warrant you: But, sir, here comes your boy; 'Twere good, he were school'd.

Tua. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Biondello, Now do your duty thoroughly, I advise you; Imagine 'twere the right Vincenzio.

Bion. Tut! fear not me.

Tua. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista? Bion. I told him, that your father was at Venice; And that you look'd for him this day in Padua. Tua. Thou 'rt a tall fellow; hold thee that to drink Here comes Baptista:—set your countenance, sir.

Enter Baptista and Lucentio.

Signior Baptista, you are happily met—

Sir, [to the Pedant.] This is the gentleman I told you of: I pray you, stand good father to me now, Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Pet. Soft, son! Sir, by your leave, having come to Padua To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio Made acquaintance with a weighty cause Of love between your daughter and himself: And,—for the good report I hear of you; And for the love he beareth to your daughter, And to him, to stay him not too long, I am content, in a good father's care, To have him match'd; and,—if you please'd to like No worse than I,—upon some agreement, I shall find you most ready and most willing With one consent to have her so bestowed; For curious I cannot be with you, Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say;— Your planness, and your shortness, please me well. Right true it is, your son Lucentio here Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him, Or both dissemble deeply their affections: And, therefore, if you say no more than this, That like a father you will deal with him, And pass my daughter a sufficient dower, The match is fully made, and all is done: Your son shall have my daughter with consent. The match you sign, sir; for you know best We be affed; and such assurance ta'en, As shall with either part's agreement stand.

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know, Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants Besides, old Gremio is heart'ning still; And, happily, we might be interrupted.

Tua. Then at my lodging, an it like you, sir There doth my father lie; and there, this night, We'll pass the business privately and well: Send for your daughter by your servant here, My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently. The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning, You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well.—Cambio, bie you home, And bid Bianca make her ready straight; And, if you will, tell what hath happened:— Lucentio's father is arriv'd in Padua, And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.

Luce. I pray the gods she may, with all my heart.

Tua. Daily not with the gods, but get thee gone. Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way? Welcome! one mess is like to be your cheer; Come, sir; we'll better it in Padua.

Bap. Cambio.—

Luce. What say'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you?
Luc. Biondello, 'what of that?
Bion. 'Faith nothing; but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.
Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving fates of his deceitful son.
Luc. And what of him?
Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.
Luc. And then?
Bion. The old priest at Saint Luke's church is at your command at all hours.
Luc. And what of all this?
Bion. I cannot tell; except they are busied about a counterfeit assurance: Take your assurance of her, cum privilegio ad imprimentum suum: to the church;—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses;
If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,
But, bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day. [Exit.
Luc. Hearst thou, Biondello?
Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a whench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adequ sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix.
Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented:
She will be pleased, then wherefore should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her;
It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A public Road.
Enter Petruchio, Katharina, and Hortensio.
Pet. Come on, o'God's name; once more toward our father's.
Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!
Kath. The moon! the sun; it is not moonlight now.
Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright.
Kath. I know, it is the sun that shines so bright.
Pet. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list,
Or else I journey to your father's house:—
Go on, and fetch our horses back again.—
Evermore cross'd, and cross'd: nothing but cross'd!
Hort. Say as he says, or we shall never go.
Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far,
And be it moon, or sun, or what you please:
And if you please to call it a rash candle,
Henceforth I vow it shall be so for me.
Pet. I say, it is the moon.
Kath. I know it is.
Pet. Nay, then you lie; it is the blessed sun.
Kath. Then, God be blessed, it is the blessed sun:
But sun it is not, when you say it is not:
And the moon changes, even as your mind.
What you will have it moon'd, even that it is,
And so it shall be so, for Katharine.
Hort. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won.
Pet. Well, forward, forward: thus the bowl I should
And not unluckily against the bias.— [Run,
But so!; what company is coming here?

[Enter Vincentio, in a travelling dress.
Good morrow, gentle mistress: Where away?—
To Vincentio.
Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too,
Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman?
Such war of white and red within her cheeks!
What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As these two eyes become that heavenly face?—
Fair lovely maid, once more good day to thee:—
Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake.
Hort. 'A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.
Kath. Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and Whither away; or where is thy abode? [sweet,
Happy the parents of so fair a child;
Happier the man, whom favourable stars
Allow thee for this lovely bed-fellow!
Pet. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not mad:
This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.
Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun,
That every thing I look on seemeth green:
Now I perceive thou art a reverend father;
Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistake. [known
Pet. Do, good old grandsire; and, withal, make
Which way thou travellest: if along with us,
We shall be joyful of thy company.
Vin. Fair sir,—and you to my merry mistress,
That with your strange encounter much amaz'd me;
My name is call'd—Vincentio: my dwelling—Pisa;
And I bound am to Padua; there to visit
A son of mine, which long I have not seen.
Pet. What is his name?
Vin. Lucentio, gentle sir,
Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.
And now by law, as well as reverence,
I may entitle thee—my loving father;
The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman,
Thy son by this hath married: Wonder not,
Nor be not grieved; she is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;
Beside, so qualified as may beseech
The spouse of any noble gentleman.
Let me embrace with old Vincentio:
And wonder we to see thy honest son,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.
Vin. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake?
Hort. I do assure thee, father, so it is.
Pet. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof;
For our first remittance hath made thee jealous. [Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, & Vincentio.
Hort. Well, Petruchio, this hath put me in heart,
Have to my widow; and if she be forward,
The haste thou taught Hortensio to be untoward. [Exit.

ACT V.

Enter on one side Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca.
Gremio walking on the other side.
Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.
Luc. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home, therefore leave us.
Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your back;
And then come back to my master as soon as I can. [Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.
Grem. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.
Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.
Pet. Sir, here's the door, this is Lucentio's house,
My father's bears more toward the market-place;
Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.
Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go; I think, I shall command your welcome here.
And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward. [Knocks.
Gre. They're busy within, you were best knock louder.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What's he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken with.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundreds pounds to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua. —Do you hear, sir? —to leave frivolous circumstances, —I pray you, tell signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest; his father is come from Pisa, and is here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman! [To VINCENTIO.] why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Pet. Lay hands on the villain; I believe, 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter Bondeilolo.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together: God send 'em good shipping! —But who is here! mine old master, Vincentio! Now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither, crack-hemp. [Seeing BIONDEILO.]

Bion. I hope, I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come, hither, you rogue; What, have you forgot me?

Bion. Forget you? no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, man, sir; see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Is't so, indeed? [Beats BIONDEILO.

Bion. Help, help, help! here's a madman will murder me.

[Exit.]

Pet. Help, son; help, signior Baptista!

[Exit, from the window.

Pet. Pr'ythee, Kate, let's stand aside, and see the end of this controversy.

[They retire.

Re-enter Pedant below; BAPTISTA, TRAMIO, & Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are you, that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? nay, what are you, sir? —O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a copatian hat! —O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman: Why, sir, what concerns it you, if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father! O villain! he is a sail-maker in Bellarmino.

Bap. You mistake, sir; you mistake, sir: Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name: I
Act V.—Scene II.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate; Better once than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—A room in Lucentio's House.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree: And time it is, when raging war is done. To smile at 'scapes and pitfalls overthrown.—

My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome, While I with self-same kindness welcome thee:—

Brother Petruchio,—sister Katharina,— And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,— Feast with the best, and welcome to my house; My banquet is to close our stomachs up, After our great good cheer: Pray you, sit down; For now we sit to chat, as well as eat. [They sit at table.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!

Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruchio. Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind. Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true. Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his wife. Wid. Then never trust me if I be afraid. —

Pet. You are sensible, and yet you miss my sense; I mean, Hortensio is afraid of you. Wid. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round. Pet. Roundly replied.

Kath. Mistress, how mean you that? Hor. Thus I conceive by him. Pet. Conceives by me!—How likes Hortensio that? Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.

Pet. Very well mended: K'sh him for that, good widow. [Round:

Kath. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round.

I pray you, tell me what you mean by that.

Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew, Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe:

And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean meaning.

Wid. Right, I mean you.

Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her, Kate. Hor. To, widow! Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down. Hor. That's my office.

Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Ha! to thee, lad. [Drinks to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks? Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.

Bian. Head, and butt! an hasty witted body Would say your head and butt were head and horn. Vin. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd you? Bian. Ay, but not frightened me; therefore I'll sleep again.

Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun, Have at you for a bitter jest or two.

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush, And then pursue you as you draw your bow:—

You are welcome all. [Exit Bian, Kath, & Widow.

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio, This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not; Therefore, a health to all that shot and miss'd. Tran. O, sir, Lucentio slip'd it made his greyhound, Which was taken, and goes for his attender.

Pet. A good swift simile, but something curish. Tran. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself; 'Tis thought, your deer does bold you at a bay.

Bap. O ho, Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that bird, good Tranio. Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here? Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess; And, as the jest did glance away from me, 'Tis ten to one it main'd you two outright.

Bap. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio, I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say—no: and therefore, for assurance Let's each one send unto his wife;

And he, whose wife is most obedient To come at first when he doth send for her, Shall win this wager which we will propose, Hor. Content:—What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns!

I'll venture so much on my hawk, or hound, But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Pet. A match; 'tis done.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I. Go.

Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bion. I go. [Exit. Bap. Sire, will be your half, Bianca comes. Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll hear it all myself. Re-enter Biondello.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word, That she is busy, and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come! Is that an answer?

Gre. Ay, and a kind one too:

Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Pet. I hope, better.

Hor. Sirrah, Biondello, go, and entreat my wife To come to me forthwith. [Exit Biondello.

Pet. O, he! entreat her!

Nay, then she must needs come.

Hor. I am afraid, Sir, Do what you can, yours will not be entreated. Re-enter Biondello.

Now where's my wife?

Bion. She says, you have some godly jest in hand; She will not come; she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come! O vile, inolerable, not to be endured! Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress; Say I command her come to me. [Exit Grumio. Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. What?

Hor. She will not come.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end. Enter Katharina.

Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Katharina! Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me? Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife? Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire. Pet. Go, fetch them hither; if they deny to come, Swing me them soundly forth unto their husbands: Away, I say, and bring them hither straight. [Exit Katharina.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder. Hor. And so it is: I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life, An awful rule, and right supremacy; And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy.

Bop. Now fair beal thee, good Petruchio! The wager thou hast won; and I will add S
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns I
Another dowry to another daughter,
For she is chang'd, as she had never been;
Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet;
And show more sign of her obedience,
Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter Katharina, with Bianca and Widow.
See, where she comes; and brings your froward wives
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.—
Katharina, that cap of yours becomes you not;
Off with that bauble, throw it under foot.
[Katharina pulls off her cap, and throws it down.
Wid. Lord, let me never have a cause to sigh,
Till I be brought to such a silly pass!
Bian. Fye! what a foolish duty call you this?
Luc. I would, your duty were as foolish too:
The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,
Hath cost me an hundred crowns since supper-time.
Bian. The more fool you, for laying on my duty, Pet. Katharine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women,
What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.
Wid. Come, come, you're mocking; we will have no telling.
Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.
Wid. She shall not.
Pet. I say, she shall;—and first begin with her,
Kath. Fye, fye! uskait that threat'ning unkind brow;
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes,
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:
It blots thy beauty, as frosts bite the meads;
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds;
And in no sense is meet or amiable.
A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty,
And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance: commits his body
To painful labour, both by sea and land;
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
While thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience;—
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such duty as the subject owes the prince,
Even such a woman oweth to her husband:
And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,
And not obedient to her honest will,
What is she, but a foul contention rebel,
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?—
I am ashamed, that women are so simple
To offer war, where they should kneel for peace;
Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,
Unapt to toil, and trouble in the world;
But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our external parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable worms!
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,
My heart as great; my reason, haply, more,
To bandy word for word, and frown for frown;
But now, I see our lances are but straws;
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,—
That seeming to be most, which we least are.
Then vail your stomachs, for it is no boot;
And place your hands before your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready, may it do him ease. [me, Kate.
Pet. Why, there's a wrench!—Come on, and kiss
Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad: for thou shalt ha't.
Viss. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.
Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.
Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed:—
We three are married, but you two are spred.
Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;
To Luc. And, being a winner, God give you good night!
[Exeunt Petruchio and Katharine.
Hor. Now, go thy ways, thou last tam'd a curst shrew.
Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tam'd so.
[Exeunt.

Of this play the two plots are so well united, that they can hardly be called two without injury to the art with which they are intertwined. The attention is entwined with all the variety of a double plot, yet is not distracted by unconnected incidents.

The part between Katharine and Petruchio is eminently spleenish and diverting. At the marriage of Bianca the arrival of the real father, perhaps, produces more perplexity than pleasure. The whole play is very popular and diverting.—Johnson.
WINTER'S TALE.

The first edition of this play is that of the Players, the folio of 1613. It could not have been written before 1610, as we find from the office-book of Sir Henry Herbert, that it was issued by Sir George Brooke, who did not till that year get full possession of the office of Master of the Revels, which he had obtained by a reversionary grant; neither could the com- pany have been produced later than 1613, when it was performed in Court.

The plot is taken from the Pleasant History of Dorastus and Eadorta, written by Thomas Green. The poet has changed the names of the characters, and added the parts of Polixenes, Faudon, and Antigonus; he has also suppressed many circumstances of the original story; in other respects he has adhered closely to the novel. The error of representing Bohemia as a maritime country is not attributable to our author, but to the original from which he copied. Ben Jonson, in a conversation with Drummond of Hawthornden, in 1619, remarking on this geographical mistake, observed that "Shakespeare wanted art and sometimes sense; for in one of his plays he brought in a number of men, saying they had suffered shipwreck in Bohemia, where is no sea near by a hundred miles."

This remark, which was written in the course of private conversation, without the slightest suspicion of its ever being made public, is so well justified by the example that he adduced to support it, that it has been quoted as another instance in proof of Jonson's vanity to Shakespeare. Jonson only prefers to love Shakespeare, "as this side idolatry," to admire his excellence without being blinded to his defects: the incongruous mention is decidedly a great fault, but there is no melancholy or undue severity expressed by the manner in which it is expressed.

Mr. Walpole has a ridiculous conjecture that The Winter's Tale is an historical play, that it was intended as a cover compliment to Queen Elizabeth, that it is designed as a sequel to Henry the Eighth, and that Hermione represents the stuff monarch, Hermione, Anne Boleyn, Perkin, Queen Elizabeth, and Mamillius an elder brother of hers, who was still-born. "The Tale of this play," says Schlegel, "answers admirably to its subject. It is one of those histories which appear framed to delight the idleness of a long evening."

SCENE,—sometimes in Sicilia, sometimes in Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.

Sicilia.—An Antechamber to Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon our services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves: for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence,—in so rare—

I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks; that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear, for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding in-structs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot shew herself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their child-hoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their encounters, thoughमें\textsuperscript{nt} now, we been royally attended, with inter-change of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seemed to be together, though absent; shook hands as over a vast; and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens con-tinue their loves!

Arch. I think, there is not in the world either malince, or matter, to alter it. You have an unspakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius; it is a gentleman of the greatest promise, that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: It is a gallant child; one that, indeed, physics the subject, makes old hearts fresh; they, that went on crutches ere he was born, desire yet their life, to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son, they would desire to live on cruitches till he had one. [Exeunt.]
Leon. Stay your thanks awhile; And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to-morrow. I am question'd by my fears, of what may chance, Or breed upon our absence: That may blow No snapping winds at home, to make us say, This is put forth too truly! Besides, I have stay'd To tire your royalty. Leon. We are tougher, brother, Than you can put us to. Pol. No longer stay. Leon. One seven-night longer. Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow. Leon. We'll part the time between's then, and in that I'll no gainsaying.

Pol. Press me not, 'tis merech you, so; There is no tongue that moves, none, none in the world, So soon as yours, could win me; so it should now, Were there necessity in your request, although 'Twere needful I denied it. My affairs Do even drag me homeward: which to hinder, Were, in your love, a whip to me; my stay, To you a charge, and trouble: to save both, Farewell, our brother. Leon. Tongue-tied, our queen? speak you. Hermione had thought, sir, to have held my peace, until You had drawn oath from him, not to stay. You, sir, Charge him too coldly: Tell him, you are sure, All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction The bygone day proclain'd: say this to him, He's beat from his best ward. Leon. Well said, Hermione. Her. To tell, he longs to see his son, were strong: But he him say so then, and let him go: But let him swear so, and he not stay, We'll whack him hence with distaffs.-- Yet of your royal presence [to Pot.] I'll adventure The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia You take my lord, I'll give him my commission, To let him there a month, behind the gest Preced'd for his parting: yet, good deed, Leonets, I joy see not a jar o' the clock behind What lady she her lord.—You'll stay? Pol. No, madam. Her. Nay, but you will? Pol. I may not verily. Hel. Verily! You put me off with limber vows: But I, Though you would seek to unsnare the stars with Should yet say, Sir, no going. Verily [oaths, You shall not go; a lady's verily is As potent as a lord's. Will you go yet? Force me to keep you as a prisoner, Not like a guest; so you shall pay your fees, When you depart, and save your thanks. How say you? My prisoner! or my guest? by your dread verily, One of them you shall be.

Your guest then, madam: To be your prisoner, should import offending; Which is for me less easy to commit, Than you to punish. Her. Not your gaoler then, But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys; You were pretty lordlings then.

Pol. We were, fair queen, Two lads, that thought there was no more behind, But such a day to-morrow as to-day, And to be boy eternal. Her. Was not my lord the verier wag o' the two? Pol. We were as twin'd lambs that did frisk i' th'o' sun, And blest the one at the other: What we chang'd Was innocence for innocence; we knew not The doctrine of ill-doing; no, nor dream'd That any did: Had we pursued that life, And our weak spirits ne'er been higher rear'd With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven Boldly. Not guilty; the imposition clear'd, Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather, You have tripp'd since. Pol. O my most sacred lady, Temptations have since then been born to us: for In those unledger'd days was my wife a girl; Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes Of my young play-fellow. Her. Grace to boot! Of this make no conclusion; lest you say, Your queen and I are devils: Yet, go on; The offences we have made you do, we'll answer; If you first sin'd with us, and that with us You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not With any but with us. Leon. Is he won yet? Her. He'll stay, my lord. Leon. At my request, he would not. Hermione, my dearest, then never spoil'st To other purpose. Her. Never? Leon. Never, but once. [before. Her. What? have I twice said well? when wasn't I pr'ythee, tell me: Cramms with praise, and make us As fat as tame things: One good deed, dying tongueless, Slaughters a thousand, waiting upon that. Our lives are our wages. You may ride us With one soft kiss, a thousand fairlings, ere With spur we heat an acre. But to the goal;— My last good was, to entreat his stay; What was my first? It has an elder sister, Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace! But once before I spoke to the purpose. When? Nay, let me have'; I long. Why was that when Three crabbled months had sour'd themselves to death, Ere I could make thee open thy white hand, And clap thyself my love; then dist thou utter, I am yours for ever. Her. It is Grace, indeed,— Why, do you now I have spoke to the purpose twice; The one for ever earn'd a royal husband; The other, for some while a friend. [Giving her hand to Polixenes. Leon. Too hot, too hot: [Aside. To mingle friendship far, is mingling bloods. I have tender cords on me:—my heart dances; But not for joy,— not joy.—This entertainment May a free face put on; derive a liberty From heartiness, from bounty, fertile bosom, And well become the agent: it may, I grant: But to be paddling palms, and pinching fingers, As in a looking glass;—and then to sigh, as 'twere The mort o' the deer; O, that is entertainment My bosom likes not, nor my brows.—Mamillius, Art the young boy? Mam. Ay, my good lord. Leon. I'fecks? [nose? Why, that's my bawcock. What, hath smutch'd thy They say, it's a copy out of mine. Come, captain, We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain: And yet the steer, the heifer, and the calf, Are all call'd neat.—Still vignalling [Obaecting Polixenes and Hermione.
WINTHROP'S BALLET.

LEONIE: Still vixmalling.

Act I. Sc. 2.
ACT I.—SCENE II.

Upon his palm!—How now, you wanton calf! Art thou my lord?

Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord. [that I have, 1

Leon. Thou want'st a rough path, and the shoots To be full like me—yet, they say we are Almost as like as eggs; women say so, of
That will say any thing? But were they false As o'er-died blanks, as wind, as waters; false As dice are to he wish'd, by one that fixes. No bourn 'twixt his and mine; yet I must true To say this boy were like me—Come, sit page, Look on me with your wilkin eye: Sweet villain! Most dearst! my calling!—Can thy dam!—may't be? Affected! thy intention stabs the centre: Thou dost make possible, things not so held, Communicat's with dreams,—[How can this be?— With what's uncel real thou counterfeit art, And fellow'st nothing. Thou art't very credent, Thou may'st co-operate with something; and thou dost; And that by beyond commission: and I find it,) And that to the infection of my brains, And hardening of my brows.

Pol. What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems unsettled

Pol. How, my lord?

Leon. What cheer? how is 'tis with you, best brother? You look,

As if you held a brow of much distraction:

Are you now'd, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest,—

How sometimes nature will betray it's folly, Its tenderness, and make itself a slave To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines Of my boy's face, methoughts, I did recoil Twenty-three years; and saw myself unbreech'd, In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzled, Lest it should bite its master, and so prove, As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. How like, methought, I then was to this kernel, This squash, this gentleman,—Mine honest friend, Will you take eggs for money?

Mam. No, my lord, I'll fight. [My brother, My lord will you? why, happy man be his dote!— Are you so fond of your young prince, as we Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. If at home, sir.

He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter: Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy; My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all: He makes a July's day short as December; And, with his varying childishness, cues in me Thoughts that would thicken my blood.

Leon. So stands this squire.

Off'd with me: We two will walk, my lord, And leave you to your gravter steps.—Hermiton.

How thou lov'st us, shew in our brother's welcome; What let is dear in Sicily, be cheap:

Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us, We are your's! the garden: Shall'st attend you there? To your own bents dispose you: you'll be be You beneath the sky:—I am agog now, [found, Though you perceive me not how I give line.

Go to, go to! [Aside. Observing POLIXENES and HERMIONE. How she holds up the toe, the kill to hit! And arms her with the boldness of a wife To her loving husband! Gone already; Inch thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd one. [Enter POLIXENES, HERMIONE, and Attendants. Go, play, boy, play;—thy mother plays, and I
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful;
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amoist the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth: In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I was wilful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously.
I could not do it, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cory out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft affects the wisest: these, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. But, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage: if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.

Leon.
Have not you seen, Camillo,
(But that's past doubt: you have;) or your eye-glass Is thicker than a cuckold's horn; or heard,
(For, to a vision so apparent, rumour
Cannot be mute,) or your cogitation.
Resides not in that man, that does not think it,
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt cooless,
(Or else be impudently negative,
To have, nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought,) then say,
My wife's a hobbyhorse; deserves a name
As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to
Before her truth-plight: say it, and justify it.
Leon. I would not be a slander-bearer, but hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken: 'Shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this; which to reiterate, were sin
As deep as that, though true.
Leon.
Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughter with a sight? (a note infallible
Of breaking honesty;) horses foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes blind
With the pin and web, but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing?
What is there in the world? Is the all that's, is nothing?
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these notings,
If this be nothing:
Cam.
Good my lord, be cur'd
Of this diseas'd opinion, and betimes;
For 'tis most dangerous.
Leon.
Say, it be; 'tis true.
Cam.
No, no, my lord.
Leon.
It is: you lie, you lie:
I say, thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee;
 Pronounce thee a gross lout, a mindless slave;
Or else a lowering temporizer, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both: Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.
Cam.
Who does infect her?
Leon.
Why he, that wears her like her medal, hang-
About his neck, Bohemia: Who—if I
Had servants true about me: that bare eyes
To see alike mine honour as their profits,
Their own particular thrifis,—they would do that
Which should undo more doing: Ay, and thou,
His cupbearer,—whom I from meaner form
Have bench'd and rear'd to worship; who may'st see Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven,
How I am called,—might'st besipere a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink;
Which draught to me were cordial.
Cam.
Sir, my lord,
I could do this; and that with no rash potion,
But with a ling ring dram, that should not work
Maliciously like poison: But I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.
I have lov'd thee. —
Leon.
Make thy question, and go rot!
Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheats,
Which to preserve, is sleep; which being spotted,
Is goods, thorns, nettles, tails of waifs!
Give scandal to the blood o' the prince my son,
Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine;
Without ripe moving to't?—Would I do this?
Could man so blench?
Cam.
I must believe you, sir;
I do; and will fetch off Bohemia for't:
Provided, that when he's known, your highness Will take again your queen, as yours at first;
Even for your son's sake; and, thereby, for sealing
The injury of tongues, in courts and kingdoms Known and affid to yours.
Leon.
Thou dost advise me,
Even so as I mine own course have set down:
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.
Cam.
My lord.
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia.
And with your queen: I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.
Leon.
This is all:
Don't, thou hast the half of my heart;
Don't not, thou split'st thine own.
Cam.
I 't'll, my lord.
Leon.
I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me.
[Exeunt.

Cam. O miserable lady!—But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes: and my ground to do't
Begins to chance to a master: one,
Who, in rebellion with himself, will have
All that are his, so too.—To do this deed,
Promotion follows: If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And furnish'd after, I'd not do't: but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. I must Forsake the court; to do't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star, reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter Polixenes.
Poi.
This is strange! methinks,
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak! —
Good-day, Camillo.
Cam.
Hail, most royal sir:
Poi.
What is the news i' the court?
Cam.
None rare, my lord.
Poi.
The king hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some province, and a region,
Lo'd as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he,
Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me; and
So leaves me, to consider what is breeding,
That changes thus his manners.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Enter HERMIONE, MACBILUS, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord.

Shall I be your play-fellow?

No, I'll none of you.

1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard; and speak to me as if I were a baby still.—I love you better.

2 Lady. And why so, my good lord?

Mam. Not for because Your brows are blacker; yet blacker brows, they say, Become some women best; so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle, Or half-moon made with a pec.

2 Lady. Who taught you this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of women's faces.—Pray now What colour are your eye-brows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose That has been blue, but not her eye-brows.

2 Lady. Hark ye:

The queen, your mother, rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a new prince, One of these days; and then you'd wanton with us, If we would have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late Into a goodly bulk: Good time encounter her:

Her. What wisdom stirs among you! Come, sir, I am for you again: Pray you, sit by us, [Now And tell's a tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall't be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter:

I have one of sprites and goblins.

Her. Let's have that, good sir.
WINTER'S TALE.

Come on, sit down:—Come on, and do your best
To frighten me with your sprites; you're powerful at it.

Man. There was a man,—

Her. Nay, come, sit down; then on.

Man. Dwelt by a church-yard:—I will tell you
Your crickets shall not hear it.

[softly]

Her. Come on, then,
And give't me in mine ear.

Enter LEONETES, ANTIGONUS, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train! Camillo with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them; never Saw I men scourg so on their way:—ey'd them
Even to their ships.

Her. How bless'nd am I

In my just cause!—In my true opinion!—
Alack, for lesser knowledge! How accurs'd,
In being so bliss!—There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink; depart;
And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
The absurd'd ingredient to his eye, make know,
How he hath drank, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent hiccoughs:—I have drank, and seen the spider.

Camillo was his help in this; his prander:—
There is a plot against my life, my crown;
All's true that is mistrusted:—that false villain,
Whom I employ'd, was preemploy'd by him:
He has discover'd my design, and I
Remain a pinch'd thing; yea, a very trick
For them to play at will.—How came the posterns
So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority;
Which often hath no less prevail'd than so,

On your command.

Leon. I know't well too.—

Give me the boy; I am glad, you did not nurse him:
Though he does bear some signs of you, yet you
Have too much blood in him, Her.

Her. What is this? sport?

Leon. Bear the boy hence, he shall not come about
Away with him:—and let her sport herself; her;
With that she's big with; for 'tis Polixenes
Has made thee swell thus.

Her. But I'd say, he had not,
And I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying,
How'er ye lean to the nayward.

Leon. Look on her, mark her well; be but about
To say, she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will thereto add,
'Tis pity, she's not honest, honourable:
Prize her but for this her without-doors form,
(Which, on my faith, deserves high speech,) and straight
The shrug, the hum, or ha; these petty brands,
That calumni doth use:—O, I am out,
That mercy does; for calumni will sear
Virtue itself:—these shrugs, these hums, and ha's,
When you have said, she's goodly, come between,
For you can say she's honest: But be it known,
From him that has most cause to grieve it should be,
She's an adultress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world,
He were as much more villain: you, my lord,
Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady,
Polixenes for Leontes: O thou thing,
Which I'll not call a creature of thy place,
Lest barbarism, making me the precedent,

Should a like language use to all degrees,
And mannerly distinguish leave out
Betwixt the prince and beggar!—I have said,
She's an adultress: I have said, with whom:
More, she's a traitor; and Camillo is
A federary with her; and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself,
But with her most vile principal, that's she's
A bed-swerver, even as bad as those
That vulgar give bold titles; ay, and privy
To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privy to none of this: How will this grievc you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say
You did mistake.

Leon. No, no; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The center is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top.—Away with her to prison:
He, who shall speak for her, is far off guilty,
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns
Must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favorable.—Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are; the want of which vain dew,
Purchase, shall dry your pities: but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here, which burns
Worse than tears drown'd: Beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me,—and so
The king's will be perform'd!

Leon. Shall I be heard! [To the Guards.

Her. Who is't, that goes with me?—Beseech your
My women may be with me; for, you see, my highness,
My spight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know, your mis-
Has deserv'd prison; then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action I now go on,
Is for my better grace.—Adieu, my lord;
I never wish'd to see you sorry; now.
I trust, I shall,—My women, come; you have leave.

Leon. Go, do our bidding; hence.

And EUGENIA, Queen and Ladies

1 Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir: lest your justice
Prove violence: in which the three great oaks suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. I dare my life lay down, and will do's, sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless
I the eyes of heaven, and to you; I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep my stables where
I lodge my wife: I'll go in couples with her;
Then when I feel, and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world.
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace.

1 Lord. Good my lord,—
Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves:
You are about, and by some perrar-on,
That will be dand'd for; 'would I knew the villain.
I would land-damn him: Be she honour'd,—
I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven.
The second and the third, nine, and some five:
If this prove true, they'll pay for't: by mine honour,
ACT II.—SCENE II.

I'll gend them all: fourteen they shall not see, To bring false generations; they are co-heirs; And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease; no more. You smell this business with a sense as cold As is a dead man’s nose: but I do see’t and feel’t, As you do feeling thus; and see withal The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so, We need no grave to bury honesty; But there’s not a grain of it, the face to sweeten Of the whole dusty earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit? 1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord, Upon this ground: and more it would content me To have her honour true, than your suspicion; Be blam’d for’th how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this? but rather follow Our forceful insig. Our prerogative Calls not your counsels; but our natural goodness Imparts this: which—if you (for stupidity, Or seeming so in skill,) cannot, or will not, Relish as truth, like us; inform yourselves, We need no more of your advice: the matter, The loss, the gain, the ordering of’t, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege, You had only in your silent judgment tried it, Without more overture.

Leon. How could that be? Either thou art most ignorant by age, Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo’s flight, Added to their familiarity, (Which was as gross as ever touch’d conjecture, That lack’d sight only, sought for approbation, But only seeing, all other circumstances Made up to the deed,) doth push on this proceeding. Yet, for a greater confirmation, (For, in an act of this importance, ‘twere Most piteous to be wild,) I have dispatch’d in post, To sacred Delphi, to Apollo’s temple, Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know, Of stuff’d sufficiency: Now, from the oracle, They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had, Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle Give rest to the minds of others; such as he, Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth: So have we thought it good, From our free person she should be confin’d; Lest that the treachery of the two, fled hence, Be left her to perform. Come, follow us; We are to speak in public; for this business Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it, If the true report was known. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter Parina and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison,—call to him; [Exit an Attendant. Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady! No court in Europe is too good for thee, What dost thou then in prison!—Now, good sir, Re-enter Attendant, with the Keeper. You know me, do you not? Keep. For a worthy lady, And on whom much I honour. Paul. Pray you, then, Conduct me to the queen.

Keep. I may not, madam; to the contrary I have express commandment. Paul. Here’s ado, To lock up honesty and honour from The access of gentle visitors!—Is it lawful, Pray you, to see her women? any of them? Emilia! Keep. So please you, madam, to put Apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her. Withdraw yourselves. [Exeunt Attendants. Keep. And, madam, I must be present at your conference. Paul. Well, be it so, pray’t; but—

Here’s such ado to make no stain a stain, As passes colouring.

Re-enter Keeper, with Emilia. Dear gentlewoman, how fares our gracious lady? Emilia. As well as one so great, and so forlorn, May hold together: on her frights, and griefs, (Which never tender lady hath borne greater,) She is, something before her time, delivered. Paul. A boy?

Emilia. A daughter; and a goodly babe, Lusty, and like to live: the queen receives Much comfort in’t: says My poor prisoner, I am innocent at you.

Paul. I dare be sworn:— These dangerous unsafe lances o’the king! beseech him He must be told on’t, and he shall: the office [them Becomes a woman best; I’ll take him upon me, IF I prove honey-mouth’d, let my tongue blister; And never to my red-look’d anger be The trumpet any more:—Pray you, Emilia, Command my best obedience to the queen; If she dares trust me with her little babe, I’ll she’st the king, and undertake to be Her advocate to th’ loudest: We do not know How he may soften at the sight o’the child; The silence often of pure innocence Persuades, when speaking fails.

Emilia. Most worthy madam, Your honour, and your goodness, is so evident, That your free undertaking cannot miscarry. A thriving issue; there is no lady living, So meet for this great errand: please your ladyship To visit the next room, I’ll presently Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer; Who, but to-day, hammer’d of this design; But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I’ll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it, As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted I shall do good.

Emilia. Now be you bold for it! I’ll to the queen: Please you, come something nearer. Keep. Madam, if I please the queen to send the babe I know not what I shall incur, to pass it, Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir: The child was prisoner to the womb; and is, By law and process of great nature, thence Free’d and enthron’d: not a party to The anger of the king; nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Keep. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon

Mine honour, I will stand 'twixt you and danger.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and other Attendants.

Leon. Nor night, nor day, nor rest: It is but weak—

To bear the matter thus; mere weakness, if [I

The cause were not in being;—part of the cause,

She, the addressee; for the harlot king

Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank

And level of my brain, plot-proof: but she

I can hook to me: Say, that she were gone,

Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest

Might come to me again.——Who's there?

1 Attent. My lord!

[Advancing.

Leon. How does the boy?

1 Attent. He took good rest to-night;

'Tis hoped, his sickness is discharged.

Leon. His nobleness!

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,

He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;

Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on in himself;

Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,

And downright languish'd.——Leave me soley:—go,

See how he fares. [Exit Attendant.] —Fye, fye! so thought of him;

The very thought of my revenges that way

Recall upon me: in himself too mighty:

And in his parties, his alliance.——Let him be,

Until a time may serve: for present vengeance,

Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes

Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow:

They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.

Enter Paulina, with a child.

1 Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be secord tome:

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas,

Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul;

More free, than he is jealous.

Ant. That's enough.

1 Attend. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; com-

None should come at him.

Paul. Not so, good sir;

I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you,—

That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh

At each his needless beavings,—such as you

Nourish the cause of his awaking; I

Do come with words as mid cinal as true;

I honest, as either; to purge him of that humour,

That presses him from sleep.

Leon. What noise there, ho?

Paul. No noise, my lord; but needful conference;

About some gossips for your highness.

Leon. How?

Away with that audacious lady: Antigonus,

I charg'd thee, that she should not come about me;

I know, she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord,

On your displeasure's peril, and mine,

She should not visit you.

Leon. What, canst not rule her?

Paul. From all dishonesty, he can: in this,

(Unless he take the course that you have done,

Commit me, for committing honour,) trust it,

He shall not rule me.

Ant. Lo you now: you hear!

When she will take the rein, I let her run;

But she'll not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege, I come,—

And I beseech you, hear me, who profess

Myself your loyal servant, your physician,

You most obedient counsellor; yet that dare

Less appear in, comforting your evils,

Than such as most seem yours:—I say, I come

From your good queen.

Leon. Good queen? [good queen; Paul. Good queen, my lord, my good queen! I say,

And would by combat make her good, so were I

A man, the worst about you.

Leon. Force her hence.

Paul. Let him, that makes but trifles of his eyes,

First hand me: on mine own accord, I'll off;

But first, I'll do my errand.—The good queen,

For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter;

Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing.

[Shutting down the child.

Out!

A mankind witch! Hence with her, out o' door!

A most intelligencing bawd?

Paul. Not so:

I am as ignorant in that, as you

In one thing more: and no less honest

Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant,

As this world goes, to pass for honest.

Leon. Traitors!

Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard—

Thou, dotard. [to Antigonus.] thou art woman'tid, ununroosted by thy base Partilet here,—take up the bastard;

Take 't up, I say; give 't to thy cowre.

Paul. For ever

Un venerable be thy hands, if thou

Tak't up the princes, by that forced baseness

Which he has put upon't.

Leon. He dreads his wife.

Paul. So, I would, you did; then 'twere past all

You'd call your children yours. [doubt.

Leon. A nest of traitors! Ant.

I am none, by this good light.

Paul. Nor I; nor any,

But one, that's here; and that's himself: for he

The sacred honour of himself, his queen's,

His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander,

While this, as sharp as the sword's; and will not

(For, as the case now stands, it is a curse

He cannot be compell'd to,) once remove

The root of his opinion, which is rotten,

As ever oak, or siooe, was sound.

Leon. A callat,

[band Of boundless tongue; who late hath beat her hus-

And now baits me!—This brat is zone of mine;

It is the issue of Polixenes:

Hence with it; and, together with the dam,

Commit them to the fire.

Paul. It is yours;

And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge,

So like you. 'tis the worse.——Behold, my lords,

Although the print be little, the whole matter

And copy of the father, eye, nose, lip,

The trick of his brow, his forehead; nay, the valley,

The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his smiles;

The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger:—

And thou, good goddess nature, which last made it

So like to him that got it, if thou hast

The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colours

Now, as now; lest she suspect, as he does,

Her children not her husband's!

Leon. A gross bag!
ACT III.—SCENE I.

And, lovel, thou art worthy to be hang'd, That wilt not stay her tongue.

Leon. I hang all the husbands,

Paul. That cannot do that fast, you'll leave yourself

Hardly one subject.

Leon. Once more, take her hence.

Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord, Can do no more.

Leon. I'll have thee burn'd.

Cleop. I care not:

It is a heretic, that makes the fire,

Not she, which burns in't. I'll not call you tyrant;

But this most cruel usage of your queen

(Not able to produce more accusation

Than your own weak-ling'd fancy,) something sa-

Of tyranny, and will ignore make you, [yours

Yes, scandalous to the world.

Leon. On your allegiance,

Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant,

Where was her life? she durst not call me so,

If she did know me one. Away with her.

Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone.

Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her

The swiftest and most salutary spirit—What need these hands?

You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,

Will never do him good, not one of you.

So, so,—Farewell; we are gone.

[Exit.

Leon. Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this,—

My child! away with 't!—even thou, that hast

A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence,

And see it instantly consumed with fire;

Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up straight;

Within this hour bring me word 'tis done,

(And by good testimony,) or I'll seize thy life,

With what thou else call'st thine: If thou refuse,

And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;

The bastard brags with these my proper hands

Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire;

For thou sett'st on thy wife.

Ant. I did not, sir;

These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,

Can clear me in't.

1 Lord. We can, my royal liege,

He is not guilty of her coming hither.

Leon. You are liars all.

1 Lord. 'Beseech your highness, give us better cre-

We have always truly serv'd you; and beseech

So to esteem of us: And on our knees we beg,

(As recompense of our dear services,

Past, and to come,) that you do change this purpose;

Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must

Lead on to some foul issue: We all kneel.

Leon. I am a feather for each wind that blows;—

Shall I live on to see this bastard kneel

And call me father? Better burn it now,

Than cause it then. But, be it; let it live:

It shall not neither.— You, sir, come you hither;

[To Antony.

You, that have been so tenderly officious

With lady Margery, your midwife, there.

To save this bastard's life: for 'tis a bastard,

So sure as this beard's grey,—what will you adven-

To save this brat's life?

[Enter

Ant. Any thing, my lord,

That may ability may undergo,

And nobleness impose: at least, thus much;

I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,

To save the innocent: any thing possible.

Leon. It shall be possible: Swear by this sword,

Thou wilt perform my bidding.

Ant. I will, my lord.

[Exit.

Mark, and perform it; (seeest thou?) for the

Of any point in't shall not only be

Death to my self, but to thy lewd-tong'd wife;

Whom, for this time, we pardon. We enjoy thee,

As thou art beggar'd to us, that thou carry

This female bastard hence; and that thou bear it

To some remote and desert place, quite out

Of our dominions; and that there thou leave it,

Without more mercy, to its own protection,

And favour of the climate. As by strange fortune

It came to us, I do in justice thee,.—

On thy soul's peril, and thy body's torture,—

That thou commend it strangely to some place,

Where chance may nurse, or end it: Take it up.

Ant. I swear to do this, though a present death

Had been more merciful—Come on, poor babe:

Some powerful spirit instruct the kites and ravens,

To be thy nurses! Wolves, and bears, they say,

Casting their savageness aside, have done

Like offices of pity.—Sir, be prosperous

In more than this deed doth require! and blessing,

Against this cruelty, light on thy side,

Poor thing condem'n to' loss! [Exit, with the child.

Leon. No, I'll not rear

Another's issue.

1 Att._ Please your highness, posts,

From these you sent to the oracle, are come

An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,

Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both landed,

Hasting to the court.

1 Lord. So please you, sir, their speed

Hath been beyond account.

Leon. Twenty-three days

They have been absent: 'Tis good speed; foretold,

The great Apollo suddenly will have

The truth of this appear. Prepare you, lords;

Summon a session, that we may arraign

Our most disloyal lady: for, as she hath

Been publicly accus'd, so shall she have

A just and open trial. While she lives,

My heart will be a burden to me. Leave me,

And think upon my bidding.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cleo. The climate's delicate; the air most sweet;

Ferile the isle; the temple much surpassing

The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report,

For most it caught me, the celestial habits,

(Methinks, I should so term them,) and the reverence

Of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice!

How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthy

It was! the offering!

Cleo. But, of all the burst

And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle

Kins to Jove's thunder, so surpriz'd my sense,

That I was nothing.

Dion. If the event o' the journey,

Prove as successful to the queen,—O, be't so!—

As it hath been to us, rare, pleasant, speedy,

The time is worth the use on 't.

Cleo. Great Apollo,

Turn all to the best! These proclamations,

So forcing faults upon Hermione,

I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it

Will clear, or end, the business: When the oracle,
WINTER'S TALE.

(Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up.)
Shall the contents discover, something rare,
Even then will rush to knowledge. — Go, — fresh horses:
And gracious be the issue! — [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Court of Justice.

LEONTES, Lords, & Officers, appear properly seated.

Leon. This sessions (to our great grief, we pronounce,
Even pushes' gainst our heart: The party tried,
The daughter of a king: our wife: and one
Of us too much belov'd. — Let us be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in justice; which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt, or the purgation.—

Produce the prisoner.

Ofi. It is his highness' pleasure, that the queen
Appear in person here in court. — Silence!

HERMIONE is brought in, guarded; PAULINA and Ladies, attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

Ofi. Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, these are here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord the king, the royal husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night.

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation; and
The testimony on my part, no other
But what comes from myself; it shall scarce boot me
To say, Not guilty; mine integrity,
Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it,
Be so receiv'd. But thus,—If powers divine
Behold our human actions, (as they do,) I doubt not then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience.—You, my lord, best know,
(Who least will seem to do so,) my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though devils'd,
And mad, to take spurious: For beheld me,—
A fellow of the royal bed, which owe
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince,—here standing,
To prate and talk for life, and honour 'fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I price it,
As I would grief, which I would spare: for honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. — I appeal
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncourtly I
Have strain'd, to appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bound of honour: or, in act, or will,
That way inclining: harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin
Cry, Fye upon my grave!

Leon.

I ne'er heard yet,
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gain say what they did,
Than to perform it first.

Ofi. That's true enough; though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.

Leon. You will not own it.

Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
(With whom I am accus'd,) I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honour he requir'd; —
With such a kind of love, as might become
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So, and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude,
To you, and toward your friend; whose love had spoke,
Even since it could speak, from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes; though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it,
Is, that Camillo was an honest man:
And, why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have undertaken to do in his absence.

Her. Sir,
You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dreams,
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it— As you were past all shame,
(Those of your fact are so,) so past all truth:
Which to deny, concerns more than avails: for as Thy brut hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it, (which is, indeed,
Mortal criminal in thee, than it,) so soon
Shall feel our justice; in whose easiest passage,
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats;
The bug, which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me can life be no commodity;
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went: My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence,
I am barr'd, like one infectious: My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,
Haled out to murder: Myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet; with innomades, hatred,
The withheld privilege denied, which longs
To women of all fashion: Lastly, hurried
Here to this place, 't the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed,
But yet hear this; mistake me not: — No life,
I prize it not a straw:— but for mine honour,
(Which I would free,) if I shall be condemn'd
Upon surpriseth ; all proofs sleeping else,
But what your jealousies awake; I tell you
'Tis rigour, and not law. — Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracles.
Apollo be my judge.

Leon. This your request
Is altogether just: therefore, bring forth,
And in Apollo's name, his oracle.

[Exeunt certain Officers.

Her. The emperor of Russia was my father:
O, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery: yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge! —

Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.

Ofi. You here shall swear upon this sword of justice,
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have been both at Delphos; and from thence have brought
This seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's priest; and that, since then,
You have not daer'd to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in't.

Cloe. Dion. All this we swear.

Len. Break up the seals, and read.

Ofr. [Reads.] Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blameless. Camillo a true subject, I count a foolish tyrant, his innocent bohe truly begoten: and the king shall live without an heir, if that, which is lost, be not found.

Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo!

Her. Praised!

Len. Hast thou read truth?

Off. Ay, my lord; even so.

As it is here set down.

Len. There is no truth at all i' the oracle: The sessions shall proceed; this is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant, hastily.

Serv. My lord the king, the king!

Len. What is the business?

Serv. O sir, I shall be hasted to report it: The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear Of the queen's speed, is gone.

Len. How! gone?

Serv. Is dead.

Len. Apollo's angry; and the heavens themselves Do strike at my injustice. [II. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4.] How now there?

Paul. This news is mortal to the queen:—Look down.

And see what death is doing.

Take her hence:—Her heart is but o'erarch'd; she will recover.

I have too much believ'd mine own suspicion:—Beseech you, tenderly apply to her.

Some remedies for lie. — Apollo, pardon

[Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Her.]

My great proficiency 'gainst thine oracle!—
I'll reconcile me to Polixenes;
New woo my queen; recall the good Camillo;
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy:
For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloodly thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command, though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: lie, most humane,
And fill'd with honour, to my kindly guest
Uncaspl'd my practice; quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great; and to the certain hazard
Of all incertainties himself commended,
No richer than his honour:—How he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while!

O, cut my lace; lest my heart, cracking it,
Break too.

1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady?

Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast for me?
What wheels? racks? fires? What faying? boiling,
In leads, or oils? what old, or newer torture
Must I receive; whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,—
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine!—O, think, what they have done,
And then run mad, indeed; stark mad! for all

Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it.
That thou betray'st Polixenes, 'twas nothing,
That did but shew thee, of a fool, inconsistent,
And damnable ungrateful: nor was it much,
Thou would'st have poison'd Camillo's honour,
To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The casting forth to crows thy baby daughter,
To be or none, or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire, ere don't:
Nor 's t' directly laid to thee, the death
Of the young prince: whose honourable thoughts
(Thoughts high for one so tender,) cleat the heart
That could conceive, a gross and foolish sire
Blemish'd his gracious dam; this is not, no,
Laid to thy answer: But the last,—O, lords,
When I have said, cry, woe!—the queen, the queen,
The sweetest, dearest creature's dead; and vengeance
Not drop'd down yet. [for t]

1 Lord. The higher powers forbid!

Paul. I say, she's dead: I'll swear:—I swear, if word, nor Prevail not, go and see: if you can bring [earth,
Tincture, or lustre, to her lip, her eye,
Heat outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you
As I would the god: But, O thou tyrant! Do not repeat these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand knees
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Uppon a barren mountiao, and still winter
To storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.

Len. Go on, go on:

Thou canst not speak too much: I have deserv'd
All tongues to talk their bitterness.

1 Lord. Say no more

How'er the business goes, you have made fault
'T the boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for't;
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them, I do repent: Alas, I have shew'd too much
The rashness of a woman: he is touch'd [help,
To the noble heart.—What's gone, and what's past
Should be past grief: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beseech you; rather
Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman:
The love I bore your queen,—lo, fool, again!—
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children,
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too: Take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.

Len. Thou didst speak but well,
When most the truth; which I receive much better
Than to be pitied of thee. P'reythee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen, and son;
One grave shall be for both: upon them shall
The causes of their death appear, unto
Our shame perpetual: Once a day I'll visit
The chagel where they lie; and tears, shed there.
Shall be my recreation: So long as Nature will bear up with this exercise,
So long I daily vow to use it. Come,
And lead me to these sorrows.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Bohemia. A desert Country near the Sea.

Enter Antigonus, with the Child; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd
The deserts of Bohemia? [upon
WINTER'S TALE.

Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear
We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry,
And frown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done!—Go, get aboard;
Look to thy bark; I'll not be long, before
I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste; and go not Too far 't the land; 'tis like to be loud weather;
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey, that keep un't.

Ant. Go thou away:

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be so rid o'the business. [Exit.

Ant. Come, poor babe:
I have heard, (but not believ'd,) the spirits of the dead
May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night; for ne'er was dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow.
So wild, and so becoming: in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay: thrice bow'd before me;
And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her: Good Antigonus,
Since fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower-out
Of my poor babe, according to the oath,—
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,
There weep and leave it crying; and, for the babe
Is counted lost for ever, Perdita,
I pry'thee, call'st: for this ungentle business,
Put on thy by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see
Thy wife Paulina more:—and so, with shrinks,
She melted into air. Arightly mach,
I did in time collect myself; and thought
This was so, and no slander. Dreams are toys:
Yet, for this once, yea, superstition,
I will be squâd by this. I do believe,
Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that
Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of king Polixenes', it should here be laid,
Either for life, or death, upon the earth.
Of its right father. Blossom, spend thee well! [Laying down the Child.

There lie; and there thy character: there these;

[Laying down a bundle.

Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee pretty,
And still rest thine.—The storm begins.—Poor
That, for thy mother's fault, art thus expos'd [wretch,
To loss, and what may follow!—Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleed's; and most accur'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.—Farewell!

The day frowns more and more—then art like to have
A hollabuy too rough: I never saw
The heavens so dim by day. A savage cloumour?—
Well may I get aboard!—This is the chace;
I am gone for ever. [Exit. pursued by a Bear.

Enter an old Shepherd.

Shep. I would, there were no age between ten
And three-and twenty; or that youth would sleep out the rest: for there is nothing in the between but getting wrenches with child, wronging the ancienity, stealing, fighting,—Hark you now!—Would any but these boiled brains of nineteen, and two-and-twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; which, I fear, the wolf will sooner find, than the master; if any where I have them, 'tis by the seaside, browsing on ivy. Good luck, an't be thy will!
what have we here? [Taking up the Child.] Mercy on's, a barne; a very pretty barne! A boy, or a child,
I wonder! A pretty one; a very pretty one: Sure, some scape: though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting gentle woman in the face. This has been some stall-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door-work:
they were warmer that get this, than the poor thing is.
I'll take it up for pity: yet I'll 'tarry till my son come; he hollaid but even now. Whoa, bo hoa! [Enter Clown.

Clo. Hilloa, Joa! Shep. What, art so near? If thou'll see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither.
What ailst thou, man?

Shep. I have seen two such sights, by sea, and by land:—but I am not to say, it is a sea, for it is now the sky; betwixt the firmament and it, you cannot thrust a bolkin's point.

Shep. Why, boy, how is it?

Clo. I would, you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the shore! but that's not to the point! O, the most precious crew of the poor souls!
Some, alas! are lost, and not to see 'em: now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast; and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogsheds. And then for the land service. —To see how the bear tore out his shoulder-bone; —how he cried to me for help, and said, his name was Antigo-onus, a nobleman:—But to make an end of the ship:—
to see now the sea flag-dragoned it: but, first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mocked them:—
and how the poor gentleman roared, and the bear mocked him, both roaring louder than the sea, or weather.

Shep. Name of mercy, when was this, boy?

Clo. Now, now; I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, may'st hear half-dined on the gentleman; he's at it now.

Shep. Would I had been by, to have helped the old man!

Clo. I would you had been by the ship's side, to have helped her; there your charity would have lacked footing. [Aside.

Shep. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look there here, boy. Now bless thyself; thou met't with things new born, and things new born. Here's a sight for thee; look thee, a bearing-cloth for a squire's child! look thee here! take up, take up, boy; open't.
So let's see; It was told me, I should be rich by the faries; this is some changeling:—open't: What's within, boy?

Clo. You're a made old man; if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold! All gold!

Shep. This is fairy gold, boy, and 'twill prove so:
up with it, keep it close; home, home, the next way.
We are lucky, boy, and to be so still, requires nothing but secrecy. —Let my sheep go: —Come, good boy, the next way home.

Shep. Go you the next way with your findings; I'll go so far as to bear thee gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst, but when they are hungry: if there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed: if thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Clo. Marry, will I; and you shall help to put him the ground.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy, and we'll do good deeds on't. [Exeunt.
ACT IV.

Enter Time, as Chorus.

Time I.—that please some, try all, both joy, and terror.

Of good and bad: that make, and unfold error,—
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To speak the unutterable, To say To me, or my swift passage, that I slide O'er sixteen years, and leave the growth untried Of that wide gap; since it is in my power To o'erthrow law, and in one self-boro hour To plant and o'erwhelm custom: Let me pass The same I am, ere ancient'st order was, Or what is now received: I witness to The times that brought them in: so shall I do To the freshest things now reigning; and make stale The glistering of this present, as my tale Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing; I turn my glass; and give my scene such growing, As you had slept between: Leontes leaving The effects of his fond jealousies; so grieving, That he shuts up himself; imagine me, Gentle spectators, that I now may be In fair Bohemia; and remember, well, I mentioned a son the king's, which Florizel I now name to you; and with speed so pace To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace Equal with wondering: What of her ears, I list not prophecy; but let Time's news [daughter, Bekenown, when 'tis brought forth:—a shepherd's And what to her adheres, which follows after, Is the argument of time: Of this allow, If ever you have spent time worse ere now; If never yet, that Time himself doth say, He wishes earnestly, you never may. [Exit.}

SCENE I.

The same. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness, denying thee any thing; a death, to grant this; Cam. It is ten years, since I saw my country; though I have, for the most part, been aird abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the peni- tent king, my master, hath sent for me: to whose feeling sorrow I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so; which is another spur to my departure. Pol. As thou lovest me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made; better not to have had thee, than thus to want thee: thou, having made me businesses, which none, without thee, can sufficiently manage, must either stay to exe- cute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done: which if I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot,) to be more thank- ful to thee, shall be my study; and my profit therein, the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country Sicilia, pr'ythee speak no more; whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou call'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen, and children, are even new ones to thee. Say to me, when sawst thou the prince Florizel my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them, when they have ap- proved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince:

What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown: but I have, missingly, noted, he is of late much re- tired from court; and is less frequent to his princely exercises, than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo; and with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my service, which look upon his removedness: from whom I have this intelligence; that he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is ex- tended more, than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence. But, I fear the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place: where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity, I think it not un- easy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Pr'ythee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo!—We must disguise our- selves. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The same. A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When daffodills begin to peer,—
With, height! the dozy over the dale,—
With, hey! the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

The white sheet bleeding on the hedge,—
With, hey! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!
Doth set thy pugging tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that 'sra-lira chants.—
With, hey! with, hey! the thrush and the jay:—
Are summer songs for me and my aunts,
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pipe; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go morn for that, my dear?
The pale moon shines by night:
And when I wander here and there, I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sow-skin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffic is sheots; when the kite builds, look to lesser lines. My father named me Autolycus, who, being as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles: With die, and drab, I purchased this caparison; and my revenue is the silly cheat: Gallows, and knock, are too powerful on the highway; beating, and hanging, are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.—A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see—Every leetn wether—lois; ever tooth yields—pound and odd shilling: fifteen hundred shorn.—What comes the wool to?

Aut. If the spring hold, the cock's mine. [Aside.

Clo. I cannot do without counters.—Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? Three pounds of sugar; five pound of currants; rice—
What will this sister of mine do with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four and twenty nose-grays for the shearsers: three-man song-men all, and very good ones; but they are most of them means and bases: but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes. I must have sulfur, to colour the warden pies; mace, dates, none; that's out of my note: mustard, seven; a race, or two, of ginger: but that I may beg; four pound of prunes, and as many raisins of the same, and mace, nutmegs. Aut. O, that ever I was born! [Grovelling on the ground.]

Clo. How do you now?

Aut. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand, and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and presently to yourkinsman's.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Aut. No, good faced sir; no, sweet sir.

Clo. Then fare thee well; I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

Aut. Prosper you, sweet sir!—[Exit Clown.] Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too: If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearsers prove sheep, let me be unrolled, and my name put in the book of virtue!

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merily hent the stile-a:
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter FLORIUS and PERIETA.

Flo. These your unusual needs to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdsees; but Floria,
Peering in April's front. This your sheep-shearing
Is as a meeting of the petty gods,
And you the queen on't.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord,
To chide at your extremes, it not becomes me;
O, pardon, that I name them: your high self,
The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscure'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like pranks up: But that our feasts
In every mess having, and the feasters
Digest it with a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired; swora, I think,
To shew myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time,
When my good falcon made her flight across
Thy father's ground.

Per. Now Jove afford you cause!
To me, the difference forges dread; your greatness
Hath not been us'd to fear. Even now I tremble
To think, your father, by some accident,
Should pass this way, as you did: O, the fats!
How would he look, to see his work, so noble,
Vilely bound up? What would he say! Or how Should I, in these my borrow'd raiments, behold
The sternness of his presence?

Flo. Apprehend nothing but jollity. The gods themselves,
Humbling their deities to love, have taken
The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter
Became a bull, and Jove did: the green Neptune
A ram, and bleated: and the fire-ro'd god,
Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain,
As I seem now: Their transformations
Were never for a piece of beauty rarer;
Nor in a way so chaste: since my desires
Run not before mine honour; nor my lusts
Burn better than my faith.

Per. O but, dear sir,
Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis
Opposed, as it must be, by the power o' the king;
One of these must be necessities,
Which then will speak; that you must change this
Or I my life.

Flo. Thou dearest Perdita,
With these forc'd thoughts, I pr'ythee, darken not
The mirth o' the feast: Or I'Il be thine, my fair,
Or not my father's: for I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any, if

[Exit.
ACT IV.—SCENE III.

I be not thine: to this I am most constant, Though destiny say, no. Be merry, gentle; Strangle such thoughts as these, with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are coming: Lift up your countenance; as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O lady fortune Stand you auspicious!

Enter Shepherd, with Polixenes and Camillo disguised; Clowes, Mopsa, Dorcas, and others.

Flo. See, your guests approach: Address yourself to entertain them sprightly, And let's be red with mirth.

Shep. Fye, daughter! when my old wife liv'd upon This day, she was both pantler, butler, cook; Both dame and servant: welcome all: serve'd all: Would sing her song, and dance her turn: now here, At upper end o' the table, now, 'tis the middle; On his shoulder, and his: her face o' fire With labour; and the thing, she took to quench it, She would to each one slip: You are retir'd, As if you were a feasted one, and not The hostess of the meeting: Pray you, bid These unknown friends to us welcome: for it is A way to make us better friends, more known. Come, quench your blushes; and present yourself That which you are, mistress o' the feast: Come on, And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing, As your good flock shall prosper.

Pol. Groom, come, sir! [To Pol. It is my father's will, I should take on me The hostess-ship o' the day: — You're welcome, sir! [To Camillo.

Give me those flowers there, Dorcas.—Reverend sirs, For you there's rosemary, and rose; these keep Seeing, and savour, all the winter long: Grace, and remembrance, be you both; And welcome to our shearing!

Per. Shepherdess, (A fair one are you,) well you fit our ages With flowers of winter.

Flo. Sir, the year growing ancient,— Not yet on summer's death, nor on the birth Of trembling winter,—the fairest flowers of the season Are our curations, and streak'd gillyflowers, Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind Our rustic garden's barren; and I care not To get slips of them.

Flo. Wherefore, gentle maiden, Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said, There is an art, which, in their priesthood, shares With great creating nature.

Say, there be; Yet nature is made better by no mean, But nature makes that mean: so, o'er that art, Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art, That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry And tender scion to the wildest stock; And make conceive a barker of baser kind By bond of nobler race, this is an art Which does mend nature,—change it rather: but The art itself is nature.

Flo. Then make your garden rich in gillyflowers, And do not call them bastards.

Per. I'll not put The dibble in earth to set one slip of them: No more than, were I painted, I would wish This youth should say, 'twere well; and only therefore Desire to breed by me.—Here's flowers for you; Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram; The marigold, that goes to bed with the sun, And with him rises weeping: these are flowers Of middle summer, and I, think, they are given To men of middle age: You are very welcome. Cam. I should have graving, were I of your flock, And only live by gazing.

Per. You'd be so lean, that blasts of January [est friend, Would blow you through and through.—Now, my fair I would, I had some flowers o' the spring, that might Become your time of day; and yours, and yours; That wear upon your virgin branches yet Your maidenheads growing:—O Proserpina, For the flowers now, that, brightened, thou let'st fall From Dis's waggon! daffodil, That eome before the swallow dares, and take The winds of March with beauty; violets, dim, But sweeter than the lads of Juno's eyes, Or Cynthia's breath; pale primroses, That die unmarried, ere they can behold Bright Phloxes in his strength, a madaly Most incident to maidies; bold oxlips, and The snap-dragon's imperial; little redling, The flower-de-luce being one! O, these I lack, To make you garlands of; and, my sweet friend, To strew him o'er and o'er.

What? like a corse? Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on; Not like a corse: or if,—not to be buried, But quelled, and in many colors. Come, take your flowers: Methinks, I play as I have seen them do In Whitsun' pasturals: sure, this robe of mine Does change my disposition.

What you do, Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet, I'd have you do it ever: when you sing, I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms; Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs, To sing them too: When you do dance, I wish you A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do Nothing but that: move still, still so, and own No other function: Each your doing, So singular in each particular, Crown'd what you are doing in the present deeds, That all your acts are queens.

O Doricles, Your praises are too large: but that your youth, And the tree blood, which fairly peeps through it, Do plainly give you out an unsta'd shepherd; With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles, You wou'd me the false way.

I think, you have As little skill to fear, as I have purpose To put you to's.—But, come; our dance, I pray: Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair, That never mean to part.

I'll swear for 'em. Per. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran on the green sward; nothing she does or seems But smacks of something greater than herself; Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something, That makes her blood look out: Good sooth, she is The queen of crows and cream.

Flo. Come on, strike up. Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress: marry, garlick, To mend her kissing with.

Flo. Now, in good time! Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our man- Come, strike up. [Music.
Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray,good shepherd,what

Fair swain is this,which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles; and he boasts himself

To have a worthy footing; but I have it

Upon his own report, and I believe it;

He looks like sooth: He says, he loves my daughter;

I think so too: for he never gazed the moon

Upon the water, as he'll stand, and read,

As 'twere, my daughter's eyes: and, to be plain,

I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,

Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances fealty.

Shep. So she does any thing; though I report it,

That should be silent: if young Doricles

Do light upon her, she shall bring him that

Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.

Serr. O master, if you did but hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe: so, the bagpipe could not move you: he sings several tunes, faster than you'll tell money;

he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all men's ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better: he shall come in:

I love a ballad but even too well; if it be doleful matter, merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sang lamentingly.

Serr. He hath songs, for man, or woman, of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves:

he has the prettiest love songs for maids; so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burdens of dildos and fadings: jump her and thrust her;

and when a vomit stretch most that's rauced would, as it were, mean mischief, and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer, Where do we have no harm, good man? puts him off, sitteth him, with Whooop, do me no harm, good man.

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable-conceived fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?

Serr. He hath ribands of all the colours I the rainbow; points, more than all the lawyers in Bohemia can learnedly handle, though they come to him by the gross; inkles, caddisses, cambries, lawns; why,

he sings them over, 'as they were gods or goddesses;

you would think, a smock were a she-angel: he so chauts to the sleeve-hand, and the word about the square on't.

Clo. Pr'ythee, bring him in; and let him approach

singing.

Per. Forewarn him, that he use no scurrilous words in his tunes.

Clo. You have of these pedlars, that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister.

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

Lawn, as white as driven snow;

Cupraes, black as e'er was crow;

Gloves, as sweet as damask roses;

Masks for faces, and for notes;

Bugle bracelet, necklace-amber,

Perfume for a lady's chamber:

Golden quofs, and stomachers,

For my lady to give their dears;

Plays, and pikling-sticks of steel,

What maids lack from head to heel.

Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buy;

Buy, lad, or else your lasses cry;

Come, buy, &e.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me: but being enthralled

as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribands and gloves.

Mops. I was promised them against the feast; but they came not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mops. He hath paid you all he promised you: may be, he has paid you more; which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their placlets, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time, when you are going to bed, or kith hole, to whistle off these secrets; but you must be little-tattling before all our guests? 'Tis well they are whispering: Charm your tongues, and not a word more.

Mops. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry lace, and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozened by the way, and lost all my money?

Aut. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;

therefore, be not men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

Mops. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print, a-like; for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here's one to a very doleful tune, How a usurer's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a burden; and how she longed to eat adders' heads, and toads carbonadoed.

Mops. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true; and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here's the midwife's name to', one mistress

Taleporter, and five or six honest wives that were present: Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mops. Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: And let's first see more ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad, Of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sang this ballad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought, she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: The ballad is very pitiful, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

Aut. Five justices' hands at it; and witnesses, more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: Another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad; but a very pretty one.

Mops. Let's have some merry ones.

Aut. Why, this is a passing merry one; and goes to the tune of Two maid's wooing a man: there's scarce a maid westward, but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mops. We can both sing it; if thou'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, 'tis my occupation: have at it with you.

SONG.

A. Get you hence, for I must go;

Where it fits not you to know.

D. Whither? M. O, Whither? D. Whither?

M. It becomes thy oath full well,

Thou to me thy secrets tell:

D. Me too, let me go thither.
ACT IV.—SCENE III.

M. Or thou go'st to the groove, or mil?
D. If to either, thou dost ill.
D. Then hast soon in my love to be,
M. Then hast sworn it more to me:
Then, whither go'st? say, whither?

Col. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves:
My father and the gentlemen are in sad talk, and we'll not trouble them: Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenches, I'll buy for you both—Pedler, let's have the first choice—Follow me, girls.

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Aside.

Will you buy any tape,
Or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my dear—
Any silk, any thread,
Any toys for your head,
Of the new'st, and sin'st, isn't worn—
Come to the pedler;
Honey's a medler,
That doth utter all men's voice-

[Exeunt Clowns, Autolycus, Dorcas, and Mopsa.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair; they call themselves saltiers: and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallowaunty of gambols, because they are not in't; but they themselves are o the mind, (if it be not too rough for some, that know little but bowing,) it will please plentifully.

Step. Away! we'll none on't; here has been too much homely folly already:—I know, sir, we weary you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: Pray, let's see these four throes of herdsmen.

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of the three, but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire.

Step. Leave your prating: since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.

Re-enter Servant, with twelve Rustics, habited like Satyrs. They dance, and then exit.

Pol. O, father, you'll know more of that hereafter.—Is it not too far gone?—'Tis time to part them.—He's simple and tells much. [Aside.]—How now, fair shepherd?

Your heart is full of something, that does take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young, And handed love, as you do, I was wont To load me with knacks: I would have ransack'd The pedler's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance; you have let him go, And nothing parted with him: If your lash Interpretation should abuse; and call this, Your lack of love, or bounty: you were straited For a reply, at least, if you make a care Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are: The gifts, she looks from me, are pack'd and lock'd Up in my heart; which I have given already, But not deliver'd.—O, hear me breathe my life Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem, Hath sometime lov'd: I take thy hand; this hand, As soft as dove's down, and as white as it; Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fawn's snow, That's bolted by the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this—
WINTER'S TALE.

Whom son I dare not call; thou art too base
To be acknowledg'd: Thou a scepter's heir,
That thus affect'st a sheep-hook!—Thou old traitor,
I am sorry, that, by hanging thee, I can but Shorten thy life one week.—And thou, fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft; who, of force, must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with;—

_Shep._ O, my heart! [made

_Pol._ I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with briars, and
More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond boy,—
If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh.
That thou no more shall see this knack,—as never
I mean thou shalt,) we'll bar thee from succession;
Not hold thee of our blood, nor our kin, my Far than Deceuiln off.—Mark thou my words;
Follow us to the court.—Thou churl, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,—
Worthy enough a herdsman; yes, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honour therein,
Unworthy thee,—if ever, henceforth, thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
Or hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death as cruel for thee,
As thou art tender to't.

_Exit._

_I told you, what would come of this: Beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,—
Being now awake, I'll quench it no inch further,
But milk my ewes, and weep.

_Cam._ Why, how now, father?

_Shep._ I cannot speak, nor think,
Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir,
You have undone a man of fourscore three
That thought to fill his grave in quiet; yes,
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones: but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust.—O cursed witch!

_Exit._

_That knewst this was the prince, and would'st adven-
To mingle faith with him.—Undone! undone! [tune
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd
To die when I desire.

_Exit._

_Fio._ Why look you so upon me?
I am sorry, but not afraid; delay'd,
But nothing alter'd: What I was, I am:
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My lash unwillingly.

_Cam._ Gracious my lord,
You know your father's temper; at this time
He will allow no speech,—which, I do guess,
You do not purpose to him; and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear:
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him.

_Fio._ I think, Camillo.

_Cam._ Even he, my lord.

_Per._ How often have I told you, 'twould be thus?
How often said, my dignity would last
But till 'twere known?

_Fio._ It cannot fail, but by
The violation of my faith; And then
Let nature crush the sides of the earth together,
And mar the seeds within! Lift up thy looks:
From my succession wipe me, father! I
Am heir to my affection.

_Cam._ Be advised.

_Fio._ I am; and by my fancy: if my reason
Will thereto be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleas'd with madness,
Do bid it welcome.

_Fio._ This is desperate, sir.

_Cam._ So call it; but it does fulfil my vow;
I must, I must think it honestly. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may Be tierat glean'd; for all the sun sees or
The close earth worms, or the profound seas hide
In unknown fathom, will I break my oath
To this my fair belov'd: Therefore, I pray you,
As you have ever been my father's honour'd friend,
When he shall miss me, (as, in faith, I mean not
To see him any more,) cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; Let myself and fortune,
Tag for the time to come. This you may know,
And so deliver,—I am put to sea
With her, whom here I cannot hold on shore;
And, most opportune to our need, I have
A vessel rides fast by, but not prepared
For the design. What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.

_Cam._ O, my lord,
I would your spirit were easier for advice,
Or stronger for your need.

_Fio._ Hark, Perdita.—_[Takes her aside
I'll hear you by and by._

_Cam._ He's irremovable.

_Resolv'd for flight: Now were I happy, if
His going I could frame to serve my turn;
Save him from danger, do him love and honour,
Purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia,
And that unhappy king, my master, whom
So much thirst to see.

_Fio._ Now, good Camillo,
I am so fraught with curious business, that
I leave out ceremony.

_Going._

_Sir, I think,
You have heard of my poor services, i' the love
That I have borne your father?

_Very nobly
Have you deserv'd: it is my father's music,
To speak your deeds; not little of his care
To have them recompens'd as thought on.

_Cam._ Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the king;
And, through him, what is nearest to him, which is
Your gracious self; embrace but my direction,
(If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration, on mine honour)
I'll point you, where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness: where you may Enjoy your mistress: (from the whom, I see,
There's no disjunction to be made, but by,
As heavens forfend! your ruin:) marry her;
And (with my best endeavours, in your absence,) Your dis-contenting father strive to qualify,
And bring him up to liking.

_How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call thee something more than man,
And, after that, to trust thee.

_Cam._ Have you thought on
A place, whereunto you'll go?

_Fio._ Not any yet:
But as the unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do; so we profess,
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows.

Then list to me:—

This follows,—if you will not change your purpose,
But undergo this flight;—Make for Sicilia:
And there present yourself, and your fair princess,
(For so, I see, she must be,) fore Leonotes;
She shall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Methinks, I see
Leonotes, opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcomes forth: ask thee, the son, forgiveness,
As 'twere if the father's person: kisses the hands
Of you fresh princess: o'er and o'er divides him
Twist his unkindness and his kindness; the one
He chides to hell, and bids the other grow,
Faster than thought, or time.

Flor. What colour for my visitation shall I Hold up before him?

Cam. Worthy Camillo,
Sent by the king your father
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with Worthiness, as from your father, shall deliver,
Things known betwixt us three. I'll write you down the
Which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say; that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your father's bosom there,
And speak his very heart.

Flor. There is some sap in this,

Cam. A course more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain,
To miseries enough: no hope to help you:
But, as you shake off one, to take another:
Nothing so certain as your anchors: who
Do their best office, if they can stay you
Where you'll be loath to be: Besides, you know,
Prosperity's the very bond of love:
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affliction alter.

Flor. One of these is true:
I think, affliction may subdue the cheek,
But not in the mind.

Cam. Yes, say you so?
There shall not, at your father's house, these seven Beborn another such. [Years, Flor.
My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is the fear of birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pity
She lacks instructions; for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.

Flor. Your pardon, sir, for this:
I'll blush you thanks.

Flo. My pretiest Perdita.—

But, O, the thorns we stand upon!—Camilo,— Preserver of my father, now of me!
The more of our care!—How shall we do?
We are not furnish'd like Belonia's sea;
Nor shall appear in Sicily—

Cam. My lord,
Fear none of this: I think, you know, my fortunes
Do all lie there: it shall be so my care to have you royally apprized, as if
The scene you play, were mine. For instance, sir,
That you may know you shall not want.—one word.

[They talk aside.

Enter Autolycus.

Ant. Ha, ha! what a fool honesty is! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery; not a counterfeit stone, not a riband, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tye, bracelet, horn-ring, to keep my pack from fasting: they throag who should buy first; as if my trinkets had been hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer: by which means,
I saw whose purse was best in picture; and, what I saw, to my good use, I remembered. My clown, (who wants but something to be a reasonable man,)grew so in love with the wenches' song, that he would not stir his pettoes, till he had both tune and words; which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears: you might have pinched a placket, it was senseless; 'twas nothing, to geld a colpice of a purse: I would have filed keys off, that hang in chains: no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that, in this time of lethargy, I picked out and cut most of their festival purses: and had not the old man come in with a whoop! against his daughter and the king's son, and scared my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army.

[Cam. Flor. and Per. come forward.

Cam. Nay, but my letters by this means being there
So soon as you go forward, shall clear that dole.

Flor. And those that you'll procure from king Leon-

Cam. Shall satisfy your father. [Yes,—

Per. Happy be you!
All, that you speak, shews fair.

Cam. Who have we here?—[Seeing Autolycus.
We'll make an instrument of this; omit
Nothing, may give us what deliver.

Aut. If they have overheard me now,—why hanging.

[Aside.

Cam. How now, good fellow? why shakest thou so? Fear not, man: here's no harm intended to thee.

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.

Cam. Why, he so still; here's nobody will steal that from thee: Yet, for the outside of thy poverty, we must make an exchange: therefore, disperse thee instantly, (thou must think, there's necessity in 't,) and change garments with this gentleman: Though the pennyworth, on his side, be the worst, yet hold thee, there's some boot.

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir:—I know ye well enough.

[Aside.

Cam. Nay, pr'ythee, despatch: the gentleman is half fainted already.

Aut. Are you in earnest, sir—I smell the trick of it.—[Aside.

Flo. Despatch, I pr'ythee.

Aut. Indeed, I have had earnest; but I cannot with conscience take it.

Cam. Unlock, unlock, unbrace.—

[Flor. and Flor. exchange garments.

Fortunate mistress.—let my prophecy
Come home to you!—you must retire yourself
Into some covert; take your sweetheart's hat,
And pluck it o'er your brows; muzzle your face;
Dismantle you; and as you can, disliken
The true cane of your own seeming: thence you may,
(For I do fear eyes over you,) to shipboard
Get undescribed.

Per. I see, the play's nigh, that I must bear a part.

Cam. No remedy.—

Flor. Have you done there?

Flor. Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.

Cam. Nay, you shall have No hat:—Come, lady, come,— Farewell, my friend,
Adieu, sir.

Flo. O Perdita, what have we twain forget!
Pray you, a word.
Clos. What do I next, shall I, to tell the king
Of this escape, and whether they are bound?
[Aside.
Wherein, my hope is, I shall so prevail,
To force him after; in whose company
I shall review Sicilia; for whose sight
I have a woman's longing.
FLO.
Fortune speed us!—
Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.
Camm. The swifter speed, the better.
[Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside;—here is more matter for a hot brain:
Every man's end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man's work.
Clo. See, see; what a man you are now! there is no other way, but to tell the king she's a changeling, and none of your flesh and blood.
Shep. Nay, but hear me.
Clo. Nay, but hear me.
Shep. Go to then.
Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and, so, your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him,
Shew those things you found about her; those secret things,
all but what she has with her: This being done,
let the law go whistle; I warrant you.
Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.
Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the furthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer, by I know not how much an ounce.
Aut. Very wisely; puppies!
[Aside.
Shep. Well; let us to the king; there is that in this fardel, will make him scratch his beard.
Aut. I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.
Clo. Pray heartily he be at palace.
Aut. Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance;—Let me pocket up your pedler's excrement.—[Takes off his false beard.] How gow, rustics! whither are you bound?
Clo. To the palace, as it like your worship.
Aut. Your affairs there? what with whom? the condition of that fardel, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.
Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.
Aut. A lie! you are rough and hairy; Let me have no lying; it classname none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie! but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel; therefore they do not give us the lie.
Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one,
if you had not taken yourself with the manner.
Shep. Are you a curtier, an't like you, sir?
Aut. Whether it like me, or no, I am a curtier.
shew the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado: Remember, stoned and slay'd alive.

Shy. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more; and leave this young man in pawn, till I bring it you.

Act. After I have done what I promised?

Shy. Ay, sir.

Act. Well, give me the money:—Are you a party in this business?

Cleo. In some sort, sir: but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Act. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son: Hang him, he'll be made an example.

Cleo. Comfort, good comfort: we must to the king, and shew our strange sights: he must know, 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, till it be brought you.

Act. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right hand; I will but look upon the hedge, and follow you.

Cleo. Who are blessed in this man, as I may say, even blessed.

Shy. Let's before, as he bids us: he was provided to do us good.——[Exit Shepherd and Clown.

Act. If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion; gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which, who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, abroad him: if he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him nothing, let him call me, rogue, for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame she belongs to 't; To him will I present them, there may be matter in it.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. A Room in Leontes' Palace. Enter LEONTES, CLEOMENES, DIAN, PAULINA, and others.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd a saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make, Which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid down More penitence, than done trespasse: At the last Do, as the heavens have done; forget your evil; With them, forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember Her, and her virtues, I cannot forget My blemishes in them; and so still think Of the wrong I did myself: which was so much, That hearkens it hath made my kingdom; and Destroy'd the sweetest companion, that ever man Bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, too true, my lord: If, one by one, you wedded all the world, Or, from the all that are, took something good, To make a perfect woman; she, you kill'd, Would be unparallel'd.

Leon. I think so. Kill'd! She I kill'd! I did so: but thou strikst at me Sorely, to say I did; it is as bitter Upon thy tongue, as in my thought: Now, good, good, Say so but seldom.

Cleo. Not at all, good lady: You might have spoken a thousand things that would Have done the time more benefit, and grace'd Your kindness better.

Paul. You are one of those, Would have him wed again.

Dion. If you would not so, You pity not the state, nor the remembrance Of his most sovereign dace; consider little, What dangers, by his highness' fall of issue, May drop upon his kingdom, and devour Incurant lookers-on. What were more holy, Than to rejoice, the former queen is well! What holier, than,—for royalty's repair, For present comfort and for future good,— To bless the bed of majesty again With a sweet fellow to 't!

Paul. There is none worthy, Respecting her that's gone. Besides, the gods Will have fulfill'd their secret purposes: For has not the divine Apollo said, Is't not the tenour of his oracle, That king Leontes shall not have an heir, Till his lost child be found? which, that it shall, Is all as monstruous to our human reason, As my Antigonus to break his grave, And come again to me; who, on my life, Did perch with the infant. Is't your counsel, My lord, should to the heavens be contrary, Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue,

[To Leontes.]

The crown will find an heir: Great Alexander Left his to the worthiest; so his successor Was like to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,—Who hast the memory of Hermione, I know, in honour,—O, that ever I Had squard' me to thy counsel!—then, even now, I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes; Have taken treasure from her lips,—

Paul. And left them More rich, for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speak'st truth. No more such wives; therefore, no wife: one worse, And better us'd, would make her sanctified spirit Again possess her corps; and, on this stage, (Where we offenders now appear,) soul- vexed, Begin, And why to me?—

Paul. Had she such power, She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so: Were I the ghost that walk'd, 'I'd bid you mark Her eye; and tell me, for what dull part in 't You chose her: thou I'd shriek, that even your ears Should rift to hear me; and the words that fellow'd Should be, Remember mine!

Leon. Stars, very stars, And all eyes else dead coals!—fear thou no wife, I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear Never to marry, but by my free leave?

Leon. Never, Paulina; so be bless'd my spirit! Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Unless another, As like Hermione as is her picture, Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good madam,—

Paul. I have done. Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir, No remedy, but you will; give me the office To choose you a queen; she shall not be so young As was your former: but she shall be such, As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy To see her in your arms.
Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, (she The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires access To your high presence.

Leon. What with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach, So out of circumstance, and sudden, tells us, 'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but fore'd By need, and accident. What train?

Gent. But few, And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him?

Gent. Ay, the most peerless piece of earth, I think, That e'er the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione, As every present time doth boast itself Above a better, gone; so most thy grave Give way to what's seen now. Sir, you yourself Have said, and writ so, (but your writing now Is colder than that thought,) She had not been, Nor was not to be equal'd—thus your verse Flow'd with her beauty once; 'tis shrewdly ebb'd, To say you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam; The one I have almost forgot; (your pardon,) The other, when she has obtain'd your eye, Will have your tongue too. This is such a creature, Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal Of all professors else; make proscytes Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How? not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman, More worth than any man; men, that she is The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes; Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends, Bring them to our embraces.—Still 'tis strange, [Exeunt Cleomenes, Lords, and Gentleman. He thus should steal upon us.

Paul. Had our prince, (Jewel of children,) seen this hour, he had pair'd Well with this lord; there was not full a month Between their births.

Leon. 'Pr'ythee, no more; then know'st thou, He dies to me again, when talk'd of: sure, When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason.—They are come.—

Re-enter Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Attendants.

Your mother was most true to wealock, prince; For she did print your royal father off, Conceiving you: I was but twenty-one, Your father's image is so hit in you, His very air, that I should call you brother, As I did him; and speak of something, wildly By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome! And your fair princess, goddess!—O, alas! I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as Your gracious couple, do! and then I lost (All came one own folly,) the society, Amity too, of your brave father; whom, Though bearing misery, I desire my life Once more to look upon.

Flo. By his command Have I here touch'd Sicilia: and from him Give you all greetings, that a king, and friend, Can send his brother: and, but infirmity (Which waits upon worn times,) hath something seiz'd His wish'd ability, he had himself The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Meaur'd, to look upon you; whom he loves (He had me say so,) more than all the scepters, And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother, (Good gentleman!) the wrongs I have done thee, stir Afresh within me; and these thy offices, So rarely kind, are as interpreters Of my behind-hand slackness—Welcome hither, As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too Exposed this paragon to the fearful usage (At least, ungentle,) of the dreadful Neptune, To greet a man, not worth her pains; much less The adventure of her person?

Flo. Good my lord, She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Simalus, That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd, and lov'd?

Flo. Most royal sir, from Thence; from him, whose daughter His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence (A prosperous south-wind friendly,) we have cross'd, To execute the charge my father gave me, For visiting your highness: My best train I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd; Who for Bohemia bend, to signify Not only my success in Libya, sir, But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety Here, where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do climate here! You have a holy father, A great and gentle man; against whose person, So sacred as it is, I have done sin: For which the heavens, taking angry note, Have let me issueless; and your father's bless'd, (As he from heaven merit's,) with you, Worthy his goodness. What might I have been, Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on, Such goodly things as you! Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir, That which I shall report, will bear no credit, Were not the proof so high. Please you, great sir, Bohemia greets you from himself by me: Desires you to attach his son; who has (His dignity and duty both cast off,) Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with A shepherd's daughter.

Leon. Where's Bohemia? speak Lord. Here in the city; I now came from him: I speak amazedly; and it becomes My marvelous, and my message. To your court While he was hast'ning, (in the chase, it seems, Of this fair couple,) meets he on the way The father of this seeming lady, and Her brother, having both their country quitted With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me; Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now, Endur'd all weathers.

Lord. Lay'st so to his charge; He's with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo? Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him; who now Has these poor men in question. Never saw I Wretches so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth; I forsware themselves as often as they speak:
ACT V.—SCENE II.

Bohemia steps his ears, and threatens them
With divers deaths in death.

Per. O, my poor father!—

The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have
Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married?

Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be;
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:—
The odds for high and low’s alike.

Leon. My lord, Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is,

When once she is my wife.

Leon. That once, I see, by your good father’s speed,
Will come on very slowly. I
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking,
Where you were tied in duty: and so sorry,
Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up:—
Though fortune, visible an enemy,
Should chase us, with my father: power no jot
Of love, for to change our loves.—Beseech you, sir,
Remember since you ow’d no more to time
Than I do now: with thought of such affections,
Step forth mine advocate: at your request,
My father will grant precious things, as trifles.

Leon. Would he do so, I’d beg your precious mistress,
Which he counts but a trifle. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in’t: not a month
’Tore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now.

Leon. I thought of her,
Even in these looks I made.—But your petition
Is yet unanswer’d: I will to your father: [To Flo.]
Your honour not o’erthrown by your desires,
I am a friend to them, and you: upon which errand
I now go toward him; therefore follow me,
And mark what way I make: Come, good my lord.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The same. Before the Palace.

Enter Aurylucus and a Gentleman.

Aur. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard
The old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it: whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all Commanded out of the church. Methought I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aur. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

2 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business:—
But the changes I perceived in the king, and Camillo,
Were very notes of admiration: they seemed almost, with staring on another one, to bear the cases
Of their eyes; there was a speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture: they looked, as they Had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed: A noble passion of wonder appeared in them: but the Worst beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance were joy, or sorrow: but in The extremity of the one it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that, happily, knows more: The news, Rogero?

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires: The oracle is fulfilled: the king’s daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that balladmakers cannot be able to express it.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes the little child’s steward; he can deliver you more.—How goes it now, sir? this news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion: Has the king found his heir?

3 Gent. Most true: if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance; that, which you hear, you’ll swear you see, there is such unity in the proofs. The mantle of queen Hermione — her jewel about the neck of it:—the letters of Antigonus, found with it, which they know to be his character — the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother — the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding.—and many other evidences, proclaim her, with certainty, to be the king’s daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that, it seemed, sorrow went to take leave of them; for their joy waxed in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands; with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be known by garments only. They, by the way, desired me to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter: as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, O, thy mother, thy mother! then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter, with clipping her; now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather-bitten roudni of many kings’ reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which lanes report to follow it, and undoes description to do it.

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

3 Gent. Like an old tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep, and not an ear open: He was torn to pieces with a bear; this avouches the shepherd’s son; who has not only his innocence (which seems much,) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings, of his, that Paulina knows.

1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his followers?

3 Gent. Wrecked, the same instant of their master’s death; and in the view of the shepherd; so that all the issues of the child to be recovered, were even then lost, when it was found. But, O, the noble combat, that, ‘twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband; another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: She lifted the princess from the earth; and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though not the fish,) was, when at the relation of the queen’s death, with the manner how she came to it, (bravely confessed, and lamented by the king,) how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, from one sign of colour to another, she did, with an alius! I would fain say, bleed tears; for, I am sure, my heart wept blood. Who was most marble there, changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed; if all the world could have seen it, the woe had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?

3 Gent. No: the princess hearing of her mother’s statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina,—a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano; who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would have set Paulina to be a, most perfect he is her ape: he so near to Hermione hath do not wonder, how thou darest venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not.—Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in Paulina's House.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Leon. O grace and good Paulina, the great comfort That I have had of thee! For, whatsoever sir, I did not well, I meant well: All my services, You have paid home: but that you have vouchsaf'd With your crown'd brother, and these your contracted Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit: It is a surplus of your grace, which never My life may last to answer.

Paul. We honour you with trouble: but we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content In many singularities; but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The image of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Excels whatever yet you look'd upon, Or hand of man bath done; therefore I keep it Lonely, apart; But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold; and say, 'tis well, Paulina undraws a curtain and discovers a statue, I like your silence, it the more shews off Your wonder: But yet speak;—first, you, my liege; Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture!—

Chide me, dear stone; that I may say, indeed, Thou art Hermione: or, rather, thou art she, In life not chiding; for she was as tender, As infancy and grace.—But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing So aged, as this seems.

Pol. O, not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carer's excellence; What is it now by some sixteen years, and makes her As she liv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood, Even with such life of majesty; (warrn life, As now it coldly stirs,) when first I wou'd her! I am ashamed: Does not the stone rebuke me, For being more stone than it?—O, royal piece, There's magic in thy majesty; which has My evils conjured in remembrance; and From my admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee!—

Per. And give me leave; And do not say, 'tis superstition, that, I kneel, and then implore her blessing.—Lady, Dear queen, that ended when I but began, Give me that hand of yours, to kiss.

Paul. O, patience; The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's Not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on: Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers, dry and sour; scarce any joy Did ever so long live; no sorrow; But kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother, Let him, that was the cause of this, have power.
To take off so much grief from you, as he will piece up himself in it.

Paul. Indeed, my lord. If I had thought, the sight of my poor image Would thus have wrought you (for the stone is mine,) I'd not have shew'd it.

Leon. Do not draw the curtain.

Paul. No longer shall you gaze on it; lest your May think anon, it moves. [fancy

Leon. Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already— What was he, that did make it?—See, my lord, Would you not deem, it breath'd? and that those veins Did verily burn blood?

Pol. Masterly done: The very life seems warm upon her lip.

Leon. The fixture of her eye has motion in't, As we are mock'd with art. I'll draw the curtain; My lord's almost so far transported, that He'll think anon, it lives. O sweet Paulina, Make me to think so twenty years together; No settled senses of the world can manage I got from one of that madness. Let's alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you: but I could afflict you further.

Leon. Do, Paulina; For this afflication has a taste as sweet As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks, There is an air comes from her: What fine chisel Ever yet cut breath? let no man mock me, For I will kiss her.

Paul. Good my lord, forbear: The rudness upon her lip is wet; You'll mar it, if you kiss it; stan your own With oily painting: Shall I draw the curtain? Leon. No, not these twenty years.

Solicitude. So long could I stand by, a looker on. Paul. Either forbear, Quit presently the candel; or resolve you For more amazement: If you can behold it, I'll make the statue move indeed; descend, And take you by the hand: but then you'll think, (With reason, I made it against,) I am assisted By wicked powers.

Leon. What you can make her do, I am content to look on: what to speak, I am content to hear: for 'tis as easy To make her speak, as move.

Paul. It is requir'd, You do awake your faith: Then, all stand still; Or those, that think it unlawful business I am about, let them depart.

Leon. Proceed; No foot shall stir. Paul. Music: awake her; strike. [Music. Tis time; descended; be stone no more: approach; Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come; I'll fill your grave up: stir; nay, come away: Bequeath to death your numbress, for from him Dear life redeems you.—You perceive, she stirs; [Embracing her. Start not: her actions shall be holy, as, You hear, my spell is lawful: do not shun her, Until you see her die again: for then You kill her double; Nay, present your hand: When she was young, you woud her; now, in age, Is she become the suitor.

Leon. O, she's warm! If this be magic, let it be an art Lawful as eating.

Pol. She embraces him. Cun. She hangs about his neck; If she pertain to life, let her speak too. Pol. Ay, and make't manifest where she has liv'd, Or, how stol'n from the dead?

Paul. That she is living, Were it but told you, should be hooted at Like an old tale; but it appears, she lives, Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while,— Please you to interpose, fair madam; kneel, And pray your mother's blessing.—Turn, good lady; Our Perdita is found.

[Presenting Perdita, who kneels to Hermione. Her. You gods, look down, And from your sacred vials pour your graces Upon my daughter's head!—Tell me, mine own, Where hast thou been preserv'd? where liv'd? how found Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear, that I,— Knowing by Paulina, that the oracle Gave hope thou was in being,—have preserv'd Myself, to see the issue.

Paul. There's time enough for that; Lest they desire, upon this push to trouble Your joys with like relation.—Go together, You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. I, an old turtle, Will wing me to some wither'd bough; and there My mate, that's never to be found again, Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O peace, Paulina; Thou should'st a husband take by my consent, As I by thine, a wife: this is a match, And made between's by vows. Thou hast found mine; But how, or whither, for to draw her,

As I thought, dead; and, have, in vain, said many A prayer upon her grave: I'll not seek far (For him, I partly know his mind,) to find thee An honourable husband:—Cone, Camillo, And take her by the hand: whose worth, and honesty, Is richly voted; and here justified By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.— What!—Look upon my brother:—both your pardons, That e'er I put between your holy looks My ill suspicion.—This your son-in-law, And son unto the king, (whom heavens directing,) Is truth-plaint to your daughter.—Good Paulina, Lead us from hence; where we may leisurely Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first We were dissever'd: Hastily lead away. [Exeunt.

This play, as Dr. Warburton justly observes, is, with all its absurdities, very entertaining. The character of Autolycus is Eternally conceived, and strongly represented.—JOHNSON. Warburton is not guilty of a criticism so frijicid as Johnson has represented,—his words are: "On this play, throughout, is written in the very spirit of its author. In telling this homely and simple, though agreeable, couplet as above, Our learned Shakespeare, fancy's child, Hath his native good-natured wit, This was necessary to observe in mere justice to the play; as the meanness of the fable, and the extravagant conduct of it, had induced some of great name into a wrong judgment of its merit; which, as far as it regards sentiment and character, is scarce to the extor to any in the whole collection."

The persons of great name to whom Warburton alludes are Dryden and Pope. The former of whom mentions this play with no great exceeding, in his Essay at the end of the second part of the Conquest of Granada; while the latter, in the preface to his edition of our author's works, is rather inclined to class it with Love's Labour's Lost, the Comedy of Errors, and Titus Andronicus, as one of the plays, in which Shakespeare had produced only some characters, or single scenes, or perhaps a few particular passages.
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

This play, of which the first edition was that of the folio 1623, is mentioned by Nares in 1609, and exhibits internal proofs of having been one of Shakespeare’s earliest productions. A translation of the Menandri di Plauto by W. W. (C. according to Ward, William Warner) was published in 1623, and may have afforded the groundwork of the present comedy.

SCENE,—Ephesus.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A Hall in the Duke’s Palace.

Enter Duke, Ægeon, Gr Calder, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ægeon. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And, by the doom of death, end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more;
I am not partial, to infringe our laws:
The enmity and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders to redeem their lives,
Have sealed his rigorous statutes with their bloods,—
Excludes all pity from our threat’ning looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in sundry heads been deeply rooted
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more,
If any, born at Ephesus, be seen
At any Syracusan marts or fairs,
Again, if any Syracusan born,
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the dukedom dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore, by the law thou art condemn’d to die.
Ægeon. Yet this my comfort; when your words are My woes end likewise with the evening sun. [Duke.
Duke. Well, Syracusan, say in brief the cause
Why thou departest from thy native home;
And for what cause thou cam’st to Ephesus.
Ægeon. A heavier task could not have been impos’d,
Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable;
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was brought by nature, not by vile offence,
I’ll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracusa I was born; and wed
Unto a woman, happy but for me.
And by me too, had not our lap been bad.
With her I liv’d in joy; our wealth increas’d,
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidaurus, till my factor’s death.
And he (great care of goods at random left)
Draw me from kind embraces of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old,
Before herself (almost at fainting, under The pleasing punishment that women bear,) I
Had made provision for her following me,
And, soon, and safe, arrived where I was.
Thou hadst not been long, but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other,
As could not be distinguish’d but by names.
That very hour, and in the self same inn,
A poor mean woman was deliver’d
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought, and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed; alas, too soon.
We came aboard
A league from Epidaurus we had sail’d,
Before the alway’s wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance of our harm:
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscure light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Where, though myself would gladly have embrac’d,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And pitious plaintings of the pretty babies,
That mour’d for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forc’d me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was,—for other means was none.—
The sailors sought for safety by our beat,
And, with a ship, that was asking-ripe
My wife, more careful for the latter born,
Had fasten’d him unto a small spar mast,
Such as sea-faring men provide for storms;
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.
The children thus dispos’d, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix’d,
Fasten’d ourselves at either end the mast;
And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
Were carried towards Corinthus, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispares’d those vapours that offend us;
And, by the benefit of his wish’d light,
The seas was’t calm, and we discover’d
Two ships from far mark’d, which also remain to us;
Of Corinthus that, of Epidaurus this:
But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.

Duke. Nay, forward, old man, do not break off so,
For we may pity, though not pardon thee.
Ægeon. O, had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily tender them will-less absence.
For ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter’d by a mighty rock;
ACT I.-SCENE II.

Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpful ship was splinter'd in the midst,
So that, in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delight in, what to sorrow for.
Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind;
And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length, another ship had seiz'd on us;
And, knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave helpful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;
And would have rest the fishers of their prey,
Had not the wind been very slow of sail;
Thus have you heard me sever'd from my bliss;
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd;
To tell sad stories of my own misships.

Duke. And for the sake of them thou sorrowest for,
Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now.

Ege. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother; and importun'd me,
That his attendant, (for his case was like,
Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name,) Might bear him company in the quest of him:
Whom whilst I labour'd of a mind to see,
And happy were I in my timely death,
Could all my travels warrant me they live.

Duke. Hapless. Egeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear the extremity of dire mishap:
Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
Against my crown, my oath, my dignity,
Which princes, would they, may not disannul,
My soul should see as an advocate for thee.
But, though thou art adjudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recall'd,
But to our honour's great disparagement,
Yet will I favour thee in what I can:
Therefore, merchant, I'll hunt thee this day,
To seek the help by benefactors hast:
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
And live; if not, then thou art doom'd to die:
Gaoler, take him to thy custody.

Gaoler. I will, my lord.

Ege. Hopeless, and helpless, both. Egeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end.

[Exit Egeon.

SCENE II.—A public Place.

Enter Antisthene and Dromio of Syracuse, and a Merchant.

Mer. Therefore, give out, you are of Epidamnum,
Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate.
This very day a Syracusan merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And, not being able to lay out his life,
And save to the strait of the town,
Dies ere the weary sun set in the west.
There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.
Within this hour it will be dinner-time:

Till that, I'll view the manners of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return, and sleep within mine inn;
For with long travel I am stiff and weary.
Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word.
And go indeed, having so good a mean. [Exit Dromio. Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir; that very old,
When I am dull with care, I cannot help,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon, at five o'clock,
Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart,
And afterwards consort you till bed-time;
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city.

Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content,
[Exit Merchant. Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content, Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
To the world I am like a drop of water,
That in the ocean seeks another drop;
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself.
So I, to find a mother, and a brother
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus. Here comes the almanac of my true date.—

What now? How chance, thou art return'd so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late:
The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit:
The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell,
My mistress made it one upon my check:
She is so hot, because the meat is cold;
The meat is cold, because you come not home;
You come not home, because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach, having broke your fast;
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for your default to-day.

Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sir; tell me this, I pray,
Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. — For the expense, that I have lost 1 day last,
To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper;—
The saddler had it, sir, I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now:
Tell me, and daily not, where is the money?
We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner:
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed;
For she will score your fault upon my pate.

Mer. Think'st, your maw, like mine, should be your clock,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of Reserve till a merrier hour than this season;
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? why you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir knife; Have done your foolishnesses,
And tell me, how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart,
Home to your house, the Pharoan's house for dinner;
My mistress, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a chri-stian, answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow'd my money;
Or I shall break that merry scorne of yours,
That stands on tricks when I am undisposed:
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Where is the thousand marks thou hast of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate,
Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks you have between you both.

Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks? what mistress, slave, hast thou?

[Phoenix;]

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the
She that doth fast, till you come home to dinner,
And prays, that you will lie home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus in my face,
Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands:

Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels. [Exit.

Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other,
The villain is o'er-taught of all my money.

They say, this town is full of conjurors;

As, nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,

Dark-working sorcerers, that change the mind,

Soul-killing witches, that deform the body;

Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,

And many such like liberties of sin:

If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.

I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave;

I greatly fear, my money is not safe.

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master!

Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,

And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.

Good sister, let us dine, and never fret:

A man is master of his liberty:

Time is their master; and, when they see time,

They'll go, or come: If so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o' door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. Why, know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none, but asses, will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe.

There's nothing, situate under heaven's eye,

But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fouls,

Are their males' subject, and at their controls:

Men, more divine, the masters of all these,

Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seas,

Induced with intellectual sense and souls,

Of more pre-eminence than fish and fouls,

Are masters to their females and their lords:

Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwed.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed.

Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey. [sway.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience, unwed'd, no marble though she

They can be meek, that have no other cause.

[ Pause;

A wretched soul, brand'd with adversity,

We bid be quiet, or our heart cry:

Here you are burden'd with like weight of pain,

As much, or more, we should ourselves complain:

So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee,

With urging helpless patience wouldst relieve me;

But, if thou live to see like right bereft,

This fool begg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try:

Here comes your man, now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dhioio of Euphues.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he is; is it two hands with me, that

My two eyes can witness. [his maid?

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know'st thou

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear;

Beheld his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning.

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could see well feel his sufferings; and withal so doubtfully, that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I pray thee, is he coming home?

It seems he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Luc. Horn-mad, thou villain! [stark mad:

Dro. E. I mean not cuckold mad; but, sure, he's

What I'd'd him to come home to dinner, and

He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold:

"Tis dinner time, quoth I; My gold, quoth he:

Your meat doth burn, quoth I, My gold, quoth he:

Will you come home? quoth I; My gold, quoth he:

Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain?

The pig, quoth I, is born'd; My gold, quoth he:

My mistress, sir, quoth I; Hang up thy mistress;

I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress!

Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

I know, quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistress:

So that my errand, due unto my tongue,

I thank him, I bare home upon my shoulders;

For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.

Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home.

For God's sake send some other messenger.

Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other

Between you I shall have a holy head. [beating:

Adr. Hence, prating peasant; fetch thy master home,

Dro. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me, That Thou dost too football you, and to spurn me?

You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me hither:

If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

[Exit.

Luc. Fye, how impatient lowrich in your face!

Adr. His company must do his minions grace,

Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.

Hath homely age the alluring beauty took

From my poor count? then he hath wast it;

Are your discourses dull? barren my wit?

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,

Unkindness blunts it, more than marble hard.

Do their gay vestments his affections bait?

That's not my fault, he's master of my state:

What rains are in me, that can be found

By him not rain'd? then is he the ground

Of my defeatures: My decayed fair

A sunny look of his would soon repair:

But, too unruly deer, he breaks the pale,

And feels from home; poor I am but his state.

Luc. Self-harming jealousies!—fye, bear it hence.

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrongs dispense.

I learnt his eye doth homage other where;

Or else, what lets it but he would be here?

Sister, you know, he promised me a chain;—

Would that alone alone he would detain,

So he would keep fair quarter with his bed!

I see the jewel, best enamelled,
Will lose his beauty; and though gold hides still, That others touch, yet often touching will Wear gold; and so no man that hath a name, But falsehood and corruption doth it shame. Since that my beauty cannot please his eye, I'll weep what's left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold I gave to Dromio, is laid up Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out. By computation, and mine host's report, I could not speak with Dromio, since at first I sent him from the mart: See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse. How now, sir? is your merry humour alter'd? As you love strokes, so jest with me again. You know no Centaur? You receiv'd no gold?

Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner! My house was at the Phoenix! Wast thou mad, That thus so madly thou didst answer me?

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since. Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence, Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt; And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner; For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeas'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein: What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jeer, and flout me in the teeth? Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that.

[Beating him.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake: now your jest is Upon what bargain do you give it me? [earnest.

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your sauciness will just upon my love, And make a common of my serious hours. When the sun shines, let foolish grunts make sport, But creep in crannies, when he hides his beams. If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And observe you my demeanour by my looks, Or I will beat this method in your head.

Dro. S. Sconce, call it you! so you would have battering, I had rather it had a head: an you use these blows long, I must get a sconce for my head, and insconce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Do not thou know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir, but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flattering me; and then, For urging it a second time to me.

[wherefore,—

Dro. S. Was it ever any man thus beaten out of season! When, in the why, and the wherefore, is neither rhyme Well, sir, I thank you.

[no reason!]

Ant. S. Thank me, sir? for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I meant to make amends next, to give you nothing for something. But, say, sir, is it dinner-time?

Dro. S. No, sir; I think the meat wants that I have.

Ant. S. In good time, sir, what's that?

Dro. S. Basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.

Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.

Ant. S. Your reason?

Dro. S. Last it make you choleric, and purchase me another dry basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time; There's a time for all things.

Dro. S. I durst have denied, that before you were so choleric.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Time himself.

Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair, that grows bald by nature.

Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?

Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a peruke, and recover the lost hair of another man.

Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts: and what he hath scanted men in hair, he hath given them in wit.

Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.

Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost: Yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.

Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.

Dro. S. Sure ones then.

Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.

Dro. S. Certain ones then.

Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in tiring; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.

Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bald followers.

Ant. S. I knew, 'twould be a bald conclusion: But soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange, and frown; Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects, I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

The time was once, when thou unurg'dallest vow That never words were music to thine ear, That never object pleasing in thine eye, That never touch well welcome to thy hand, That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste, Unless I spake, look'd, touch'd, or carv'd to thee. How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it, That thou art then estranged from thyself? Thyself I call it, being strange to me, That undivisible, incorporate, Am better than thy dear self's better part.

Ah, do not tear away thyself from me; For if it be, I am, as easy may'st thou fall,

A drop of water in the breaking galph,

And take unmingled thence that drop again, Without addition or diminishing,

As take from me thyself, and not me too.

How dearly would it touch thee to the quick

Shouldst thou but hear I were licentious!
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By rufian lust should be contaminat?
Would'st thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the saint'd skin off my harlot brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
And break it with a deep-divoring web
I know thou canst; and therefore, see, thou do it.
I am possess'd with an adulterer blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For, if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by thy contagion.
Keep then fair league and true with thy true bed;
I live dis-stain'd, thou, undi-honour'd.
Ant. S. Plead to thee, fair d wine? I know you
In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
[not:
As strange unto your town, as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd,
Want wit in all one word to understand.
I, thy brother? how the world is chang'd with
When were you want to use my sister thus? [you:
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.
Ant. S. By Dromio?
Dro. S. I by me?
Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from him,—
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows,
Denied my house for his, me for his wife. [man?
Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentle-woman?
What is the course and drift of your compact?
Dro. S. 1, sir? I never saw her till this time.
Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words
Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.
Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.
Ant. S. Howean she thus then call us by our names,
Using us by his imprerative,
Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity,
To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,
Abetting him to thwart me in my mood?
Be it your wrong, you are from me exempt,
But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.
Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine;
Thou art an elin, my husband, I a vine;
When thou dost press to thy green state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate:
If aught possess thee from me, it is dross,
Usurping ivy, briar, or idle moss;
Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion
Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion. [theme: Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her
What, was I married to her in my dream?
Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this?
What error drives our eyes and ears amiss?
Until I know this sune uncertainty,
I'll entertain the offer'd fallacy.
Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.
Dro. S. O, for my beads! I cross me for a sinner.
This is the fairy land;—O, spite of spites!—
We talk with goblings, owls, and elvish sprites;
If we obey them not, this will ensue.
They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue.
Luc. Why pratt'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
Dromio, thou dronc, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!
Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am not I!
Ant. S. I think, thou art, in mind, and so am I.
Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind, and in my shape.
Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.
Dro. S. No, I am an ape.
Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass.
Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass
'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be,
But I should know her as well as she knows me.

Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool.
To put the finger in the eye and weep,
Whist man, and master, laugh my woes to scorn.—
Come, sir, to dinner; Dromio, keep the gate:
Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day,
And shrieve you of a thousand idle pranks.
Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,
Say, he dines forth, and let no creature enter.
Come, sister;—Dromio, play the porter well.
Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?
Sleeping or waking? mad, or well advis'd?
Known unto these, and to myself disgrac'd!
I'll say as they say, and persevere so,
And in this mist at all adventures go.
Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?
Adr. Ay; and let none enter, lest I break your pate.
Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.
Enter ANTIPHOLES OF EPHESUS, DROMIO OF EPHESUS, ANDELO, AND BALTHAZAR.

Ant. E. Good signior Angelo, you must excuse us
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours: [all.
Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop,
To see the making of her carkathet,
And this will bring her home to keep it home.
But here's a villain, that would face me down
He met me on the mart; and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold;
And that I did deny my wife and house:—
Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thou mean by this?
Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what show
That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to
If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink,
Your own handwriting would tell you what I think
Ant. E. I think, thou art an ass.
Dro. E. Marry, so doth appear
By the songs I suffer, and the blows I bear.
I should kick, being kick'd; and, being at that pass,
You would keep from my heels, and bewail of an ass.
Ant. E. You are sad, signior Balthazar: 'Pray
God, our cheer [here.
May answer my good will, and your good welcome
But I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your wel-come dear.
Ant. E. O, signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish,
A table full of welcome makes scarce one dishy dine.
But, Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords. [nothing but words.
Ant. E. And welcome more common; for that's
But, Small cheer,' and great welcome, makes a merry feast. [guest.
Ant. E. Ay, to a niggardly host, and more sparing
But thou mayest eate be mean, take them in good part;
Better cheer you may have, but not with better names,
But, soft; my door is lock'd; Go bid them let us in.
Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Mariam, Cicely, Gillian, Jen!?
Dro. S. [Within.] Mome, malf-horse, capon, cor-comb, idiot, patch!
Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch:
Dost thou conjure for wenchens, that thou call'st for such stuff as thou shouldest.
When one is one too many, Go, get thee from the Dro. E. What patch is made our partner? My master stays in the street.
Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came; lest he catch cold on's feet.
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

ANDRIANA Come, I will put on this sleeve of thine.

Act II. Sc. 2.
ACT III. SCENE II.

Ant. E. Who talks within there? ho, open the door!

Dro. S. Right, sir, I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me to-day.

Ant. E. Wherefore? for my dinner, I have not din'd Dro. S. Nor to day here you must not; come again, when you may.

Ant. E. What art thou, that keep'st me out from the house I owe!

[Dromio.

Dro. S. The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dro. E. O villain, thou hast stolen both my office and my name:

The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame.

If thou hadst 'st been Dromio to-day in my place, Thou would'st have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an ass.

Luce. [Within.] What a coil is there! Dromio, who are those at the gate?

Dro. E. Let my master in, Luce.

Luce. Faith no; he comes too late;

And so tell your master.

Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh,—

Have at you with a proverb.—Shall I set in my staff?

Luce. Have at you with another: that's—Wench!

Dro. S. If thy name be called Luce, Luce, thou hast answer'd him well.

Ant. E. Do you hear, you minion? you'll let us in,

Luce. I thought I had asked you. [I hope!

Dro. S. And you said, no.

Dro. E. So, come, help; well stricken; the man blest

Ant. E. Thou baggaz, let me in, [for blow.

Luce. Can you tell for whose sake.

Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.

Luce. Let him knock till it ake.

Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.

[Luce.

Luce. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in me that is at the door, that keeps all this noise?

[Dro. S. By my troth, your town is troubled with un-

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before.

Adr. Your wife, sir knave! go, get you from the door,

Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this knave would go sore.

Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome; we were fain have either.

[Neither.

Bal. In debating which was best, we shall part with Dro. E. They stand at the door, master; bid them welcome hither.

[Not in.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we can't

Ant. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.

Cold:

Your cake here is warm within; you stand here in the

It would make a man mad as a buck, to be sought out here and sold.

[Gate.

Ant. E. Go, fetch me something, I'll break ope the Dro. S. Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knaves gate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir, and words are but wind;

Av, and break it in your face, so he break it not behind.

Dro. S. It seems, thou wastest breaking; Out upon thee, hind!

[Let me in.

Dro. E. Here's too much, out upon thee! I pray thee,

Dro. S. Ay, when fowls have no feathers, and fish

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in; Go borrow me a crow.

Dro. E. A crow without a feather; a master, mean you so?

For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather:
If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

Ant. E. Go get thee gone, fetch me an iron crow.

Bat. Have patience, sir, O, let it be so;

Herein we'll gain against your reputation.

And draw within the compass of suspect
The unviolated honour of your wife.

Once this,—Your long experience of her wisdom,
Her sober virtue, years, and modesty,

Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;

And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse

Why at this time the doors are made against you.

Be rul'd by me; depart in patience,

And let us to the Tiger all to dinner:

And, about evening, come yourself alone,

To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in,

Now in the sooner passage of the day,

A vulgar comment will be made on it;

And that supposed by the common rout

Against your yet ungaUed estimation,

That may with foul intrusion enter in,

And dwell upon your grave when you are dead

For slander lives upon succession;

For every hour, where it once was possession.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in quiet.

And, in despight of mirth, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,—

Pretty and witty; wild, and yet too, gentle:—

There will we dine: this woman that I mean,

My wife (but, I protest, without desert,)

Hath oftentimes upbraid'd me with the world.

To her we will be dinner.—Get you home,

And fetch the chain: by this, I know, 'tis made—

Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine:

For there's the house; that chain will I bestow

(De it for nothing but to spite my wife,)

Upon mine hostess there: good sir, make haste:

Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,

I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll dissemble me.

Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour hence.

[Exeunt.

SENE II.—The same.

Enter Lucius and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot

A husband's office? shall, Antipholus, hate,

Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?

Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate?

If you did wed my sister for her wealth,

Then, for her wealth's sake, use her with more kind-

Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth:—

Muffle thy false love with some show of blindness;

Let not my sister read it in your eye;

Be not thy tongue thy owne shame's orator;

Look sweet, speak fair, become disorderly;

Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger:

Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;

Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint,

Be secret-false: What need she be acquainted?

With what did she the thief brag of his own attain't?

Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed

And let her read it in thy looks at board:

Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;

Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.

Alas, poor women! make us but believe,

Being compact of credit, that you love us

Though history have this with their own slave;

We in your motion turn, and you may move us.

Then, gentle brother, get you in again;

Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife.

Tis holy sport, to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

U
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else, I know)
Not by what wonder you do hit on mine,) [not,
Less, in your knowledge, and your grace, you show not,
Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
And open to my earthly gross conceit.
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth why labour you,
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am i, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no noage I owe;
Far more, far more, to you I do decline.
O train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears;
Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote:
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And, a bed I'll take thee, and mine her;
And, in that glorious apparition, think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die:
Let love, being light, be drowned if she sink!
Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?
Ant. S. Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know.
Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.
Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.
Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.
Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.
Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.
Luc. That's my sister.
Ant. S. No;
It is thyself, mine own self's better part;
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart;
My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.
Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I aim thee:
Thee will I love, and with thee lead my life,
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife:
Give me thy hand.
Luc. O, soft, sir, hold you still;
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will. [Exit Luc.
Enter from the house of ANTINOEUS of Ephesus,
DROMIO of Syracuse.
Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio? where ranst thou so fast?
Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am
I your man? am I myself?
Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.
Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and besides myself.
Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.
Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she,
being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.
Ant. S. What is she?
Dro. S. A very reverend body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir-reverence.
I have but lean luck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.
Ant. S. How dost thou mean a fat marriage?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rage, and the tallow in them, will burn a Polish winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.
Ant. S. What complexion is she of?
Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: For why? she swears, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.
Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.
Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.
Ant. S. What's her name?
Dro. S. Nell, sir;—but her name and three quarters, that is an ell and three quarters, will not measure
her from hip to hip.
Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?
Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.
Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks; I found it out by the bags.
Ant. S. Where Scotland?
Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard, in the palm of the hand.
Ant. S. Where France?
Dro. S. In her forehead: armed and reverend, making war against her hair; and, she transformed me to a curtil-dog, and made me turn the wheel.
Ant. S. Where Spain?
Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it, hot in her breast.
Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?
Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadas of carracks to be ballast at her nose.
Ant. S. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?
Dro. S. Sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; called me Dromio; swore, I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and,
I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail-dog, and made me turn the wheel.
Ant. S. Go, he thee presently, post to the road;
And if the wind blow any way from shore,
I will not harbour in this town to-night.
If any bark put forth, come to the mart,
Where I will walk, till thou return to me.
If every one knows us, and we know none,
'Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and be gone.
Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life,
So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.
Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here;
And therefore 'tis high time that I were hence.
She, that doth call me husband, even my soul
Doth for a wife abhor: but her fair sister,
Pussess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace,
Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me traitor to myself;
But, lest myself be guilty to self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter ANGELO.

Ang. Master Antipholus?
Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.

Ang. I'll call thee, sir! Lo, here is the chain; I thought to have it en you at the Porcupine: the chain unfinish'd made me stay thus long.

Ant. S. What is your will, that I shall do with this?

Ang. What please yourself, sir; I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespeak it not.

Ang. I am your wife, but twenty times you have: go home with it, and please your wife withal; and soon at supper time I'll visit you, and then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now.

For fear you never see chain, nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well.

Ant. S. What I think of this, I cannot tell; but this I think, there's no man is so vain, that would refuse so fair an offer'd chain.

I see, a man here needs not live by shits, when in the streets he meets such golden gifts. I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay; if any ship put out, then straight away. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter a Merchant, ANGELO, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due, and since I have not much importun'd you; Nor now had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage: Therefore make present satisfaction, Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you, Is growing to me by Antipholus; and, in the instant that I met with you, He had of me a chain; at five o'clock, I shall receive the money for the same: Please you walk with me down to his house, I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter ANTIPOPHUS OF EPHESUS, AND DROMIO OF EPHESUS.

Off. That labour may you save; see where he comes.

Ang. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou And buy a rope's end; that will I bestow Among my wife and her confederates, For locking me out of my doors by day,— But soft, I see the goldsmith:—get thee gone; Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year! I buy a rope! [Exit Dromio.]

Ang. E. A man is well hulp up, that trusts to you. I promised your presence, and the chain; But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me: Belike, you thought our love would last too long, If it were chain'd together; and therefore came not. Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note, How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat; The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion; Which doth amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman: I pray you, see him presently discharge'd, For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it. Ang. I will discharge him with the present money; Besides I have some business in the town: Good signor, take the stranger to my house, And with you take the chain, and bid my wife Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof; Perchance I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ang. E. No, I will bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will: Have you the chain about

Ang. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have; Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain; Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman, And I, to blame, have held him here too long.

Ang. E. Good lord, you use this dilliance to excuse Your breach of promise to the Porcupine: I should have chid you for not bringing it, But, like a shrew, you first begin to brawl.

Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you, sir, despatch.

Ang. You hear how he importunes me; the chain— Ang. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch you your money. [Exit.]

Ang. Come, come, you know, I gave it you even Either send the chain, or send me by some token.

Ang. E. E'ye! now you run this humour out of breath. Come, where's the chain? I pray you, let me see it. Mer. My business cannot brook this dilliance: Good sir, or else you'll answer me, or no, If not, I'll leave him to the officer.

Ang. E. I answer you! What should I answer you? Ang. The money, that you owe me for the chain.

Ang. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.

Ang. You know, I gave it you half an hour since.

Ang. E. You gave me none; you wrong me much I say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it. Consider, how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Off. I do; and charge you in the duke's name, to Ang. This touches me in reputation:—[obey me. Either consent to pay this sum for me, Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had! Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ang. Here is thy fee; arrest him, officer:— I would not spare my brother in this case, If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir; if you hear the suit.

Ang. E. I do obey thee; till I give thee bail. But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus, To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter DROMIO OF SYRACUSE.

Dro. S. Master, there is a barn of Epidamnum, That stays but till her owner comes aboard, And then, sir, bears away; our freightage, sir, I have convey'd aboard, and I have bought The oil, the balsamum, and aquavita. The ship is in her trim: the merry wind Blows fair from land: they stay for nought at all, But for their owner, master, and yourself. [Sheep.

Ang. E. How now! a madman! Why thou perversh What ship of Epidamnum stays for me! Dro. S. You sent me, sir, for a rope's-end as soon: You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.

Ang. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure, And teach your ears to listen with more heed. To Adrian, within, be there this present money; Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk That's cover'd over with Turkish tapestry, There is a purse of ducats; let her send it; Tell her, I am arrested in the street, And that shall bail me: hie thee, slave; be gone.

U 2
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Enter Merchants, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E. Doro. To Adriana! that is where we did din', Where Dow-dabel did claim me for her husband. She is too big, I hope, for me to compas-s, Thither I must, although against my will. For servants must their masters' minds fulfill. — [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee too?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plied in earnest, yea or no!
Look'd he or red, or pale; or sad, or merrily?
What observation ma'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's motions tending in his eyes?
Luc. First, he denied you had in him no right.
Adr. He meant, he did me none: the more my slyte.
Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.
Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.
Luc. Then plead'd for you.
Adr. And what said he?
Luc. That love beg'd for you, he beg'd of me.
Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.
First, he did praise my beauty; then, my speech.
Adr. Didst speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
Adr. I cannot, nor will I not, hold me still;
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deform'd, crooked, old, and sere.
Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind;
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?
No evil lost is wail'd when it is gone.
Adr. Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And that the doubts of others were worse:
Far from her nest, the laiving cries, away. — [curse.
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here, go: the desk, the purse: sweet now,
Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath? [make haste.
Dro. S. By running fast.
Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?
Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One, whose hard heart is buttow'd up with steel;
A brand, a fiery, pitless and rough;
A wolf, nay, worse, a fellow all in buff;
[mands
A hack-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that counter-
The passages of alleys, crooks, and narrow lands;
A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry foot well;
One, that before the judgment, carries poor souls to
Adr. Why, man, what is the matter? [hell.
Dro. S. I do not know the matter; he is 'rested on the case.
Adr. What, is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit.
Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested, well;
But he's in a suit of buff, which 'rested him, that can I tell:
[the desk
Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at.

[Exit Luciana.

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt: —
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?
Adr. What, the chain?
Dro. S. No, no, the bell: 'tis time, that I were gone.
It is twice one, I let him, and now the clock strikes one.
Adr. The hours come back! that I did never hear.

Dro. S. O yes. If any hour meet a sergeant, a turns back for very fear.

Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth, to season
Nay, he's a thief too: Have you not heard men say,
That time comes stealing on by night and day?
If he be in debt, and then, and a sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in the day?

[Enter Luciana.

Adr. O, Dromio; there's the money, hear it straight;
And let thy master some immediately then.
Conceit; I am press'd down with conceit;
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury. — [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet, but doth salute me
As if I were their well acquainted friend;
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me, some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy,
Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,
And shewed me silks that he had bought for me,
And, therewithal, took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for;
What, have you got the picture of Old Adam new appraised?
[mean? I mean
Ant. S. What good is this? What Adam dost thou
Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the paradise, but that Adam, that keeps the prison: he goes in the calf's skin that was killed for the prodigal; he that came behind you. sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake thy liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.
Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went like a base-vol, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob, and rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike.
Ant. S. What? thou mean'st an officer?
Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the hand; he, that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band;
one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says,
Gad give you good rest!

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your folly. Is there any ship puts forth to night? may we be gone?
Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night;
and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to tarry for the hoy. Delay: Here are the angels that you sent for, to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distant, and so am I;
And here we wander in illusions;
Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtezan.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus.
I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now:
Is that the chain, you promised me to-day?
Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee tempt me not:
Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan?
Ant. S. It is the devil.
Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam;
and here she comes in the habit of a light witch;
and thereof comes, that the wenches say, God damn me, that’s as much as to say, God make me a light wrench. It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wrenches will burn. Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir, Will you go with me? We’ll mend our dinner here.

Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meat, or bespeak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon, that may reach with the devil. [supping]

Ant. S. Avoid then, feed! what tell’st thou me of Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress; I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.

Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or for my diamond, the chain you promised.
And I’ll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of one’s nail.

A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin,

A nut, a cherry-stoole; but she, more covetous,

Would have a chain.

Master, be wise; an’ if you give it her,
The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain;
I hope you will not mean to cheat me so.

Ant. S. Avouart, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.

Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock; Mistress, that

[Exit Ant. S. and Dro. S.]

Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad,
Else would he never so demean himself;

A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats.
And for the same he promised me a chain;

Both one, and other, he denies me now,
The reason that I gather he is mad,
(Besides this present instance of his rage,) Is a mad tale, he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own doors being shut against his entrance.

Belike, his wife, acquainted with his sin,

On purpose shut the doors against his way.

My way is now, to bie home to his house,

And tell his wife, that, being lunatic,

He rush’d into my house, and took perforce

My ring away: This course I fittest choose;

For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit]

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and an Officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man, I will not break away;

I’ll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money

To warrant thee, as I am restor’d.

My wife is in a wayward mood to day;

And will not lightly trust the messenger,

That I should be attach’d in Ephesus:

I tell you twill sound harshly in her ears.

[Enter Dromio of Ephesus, with a rope’s end.]

Here comes my man; I think, he brings the money.

How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here’s that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where’s the money.

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I’ll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee thee home?

Dro. E. To a rope’s end, sir; and to that end am I return’d.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you.

[Beating him.

Dro. E. Nay, ’tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Off. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands,
Ant. E. This is the reasonless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed; you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my native birth, and am ten times better at his hands for my service, but blows: when I am cold, he beats me with beating: when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am waked with it, when I sleep; raised with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home; welcomed home with it, when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a heggar won her brat: and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Enter Adriana, Lucina, and the Courtezan, with Pinch, and others.

Ant. E. Come, go along: my wife is coming yonder.

Dro. E. Mistress, requisi renum, respect your end; or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, Beware the rope’s end.

Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beats him.

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad?

Adv. His incivility confirms no less.—

Good doctor Pinch, you are a coquett.

Establish him in his true sense again,
And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his exac’ty!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, bound’st within this man,
To yield possession to my holy prayers,

And to thy state of darkness thee straight;

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, dozing wizzard, peace: I am not mad.

Adv. Doth thou went not, poor distressed soul!

Ant. E. You, minion, are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face

Revel and feast it at my house to day,

Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut,
And I denied to enter in my house?

Adv. O unkind husband, God doth know, you din’d at home,
Where ’twould you had remain’d until this time,

Free from these shand’s, and this open shame! [thou?

Ant. E. I din’d at home! Thou villain, what say’st

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock’d up, and I shut out? [out.

Dro. E. Perdy, your doors were lock’d, and you shut

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans false, she herself revil’d you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me?

[you.

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scold’d

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity, you did;—my bones bear witness,

That since we have felt the vigour of that

Adr. Is’t good to sooth him in these contrai’ries?

Pinch. It is no shame; the fellow finds his vein;

And, yielding to him, humours well his frenzy. [me.

Ant. E. Thou hast sborn’d the goldsmith to arrest

Adv. Alas! I sent you money to redeem you.

By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

Dro. E. My heart and good will you.

But, surely, master, not a rag of money.

[Exit.

Ant. E. Went not thou theret for a purse of ducats?
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.
Luc. And I am witness with her, that she did.
Dro. E. God and the rope-maker bear me witness,
That I was sent for nothing but a rope!
Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possess'd?
I know it by their pale and deadly looks:
They must be bound, and laid in some dark room.
Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth
And why dost thou deny the bag of gold? [to-day,
Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.
Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold;
But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. If the resembling villain, thou speak'st false in both,
Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all;
And art confederate with a damned pack,
To make a loathsome abject scorn of me:
But with these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes,
That would behold me in this shameful sport.

[Pinch and his Assistants bind Astr. E. & Dro. E.]
Adr. O, bind him, bind him, let him come near me.
Pinch. More company;—the freed is strong within.
Luc. Ah me, poor man! how pale and wan he looks!
Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gadler,
I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them [thou,
To make a rescue?]

Off. Masters, let him go:
He is my prisoner, and you shall not harm him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.
Ant. E. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?
Hast thou delight to see a wretched man
Do outrage and displeasure to himself
Off. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,
The debt he owes, will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will dis-charge thee, ere I go from thee:
But mind thou use thy hospitality
And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.
Good master doctor, see him safe conveyed.
Home to my house.—O most unhappy day!
Ant. E. O most unhappy strumpet!
Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in bond for you.
Ant. E. Out on thee villain! wherefore dost thou
mand me?
Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad,
Good master; cry, the devil.
Luc. God help, poor souls, how idly do they talk!
Off. Go bear him hence. — Sister, go with you with me.
[Enter Pinch & Assistants, with Astr. E. & Dro. E.]

Say now, whose suit is he arrest'd at?
Off. One Angelo, a goldsmith; Do you know him?
Adr. I know the man: What is the sum he owes me?
Off. Two hundred ducats.
Adr. Say, how grows it due?
Off. Due for a chain, your husband had of him.
Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.
Cont. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day
Came to my house, and took away my rigg.
(The ring I saw upon his finger now.)
Straight after, did I meet him with a chain.
Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it;
Come, gadler, bring me where the goldsmith is,
I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.
Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.
Adr. And come with naked swords; let's call more
To have them bound again.
Help, Off. Away, they'll kill us.
[Enter Officer. Ann. and Lucr.
Ant. S. I see, these witches are afraid of swords.
Dro. S. She, that would be your wife, now ran from you.

Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from
I logh, that we were safe and sound aboard. [thence.
Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night, they will surely do us no harm; you saw, they speak us fair, give us gold: methinks they are such a gentle nation, that for the mountain of gold and flash that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still, and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;
But, I protest, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.
Mer. How is the man of the name of Dromio in the city?
Ang. Of very reverent reputation, sir.
Of credit infinite, highly belov'd,
Second to none that lives here in the city;
His word might bear my wealth at any time.

Mer. Speak softly; yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore, most monstrously, to have.
Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him.—
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oaths, so to deny
This chain, which now you wear so openly;
Besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend;
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day:
This chain you had of me, can you deny it?
Ant. S. I think, I had; I never did deny it.
Mer. How is it, that you did bear them to my house?
Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?
Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear Eye on thee, wretched! 'tis pity, thou liv'st [these]
To walk where any honest men resort.

Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus:
I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand.

Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain.
[They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezan, and others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake; he's mad;
Some get within him, take his sword away:
Bind Dromio too, and bring them to my house.
Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake, take this
Is some priory; — In, or we are spoild. [house.
[Enter Astr. S. and Dro. S. to the Priory.

Enter the Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people; Wherefore trouble you him.
Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence:
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.
Mer. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?
Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sorrow, sad,
And much, much different from the man he was;
But, till this afternoon, his passion
No' er brake into extremity of rage.
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck a sea?
Buried some dear friend? Hath not his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin, prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
Atr. To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love, that drew him oft from home.
Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.
Atr. Why, so I did.
Abb. As roughly, as my modesty would let me.
Abb. Haply, in private.
And in assemblies too.
Abb. Ay, but not enough.
Atr. It was the copy of our conference:
In bed, he slept not for my urging it;
At board, he has much for my urging it;
And in company, I often glanced it;
Yet still did I tell him it was vile and bad.
Abb. And thereof came it, that the man was mad:
The venom clamours of a jealous woman.
Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.
It seems, his words were hinder'd by the railing:
And therein, as he did, that his head is light.
Thou say'st, his meat was saved with th' upbraiding:
Unquiet meals make ill digestions,
Thereof the raging fire of fever bred;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?
Thou say'st, his sports were hinder'd by thy brav'ls:
Sweet recreations barring, what doth ensue,
Betimes inward and dull melancholy,
(Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair;) And, at her heels, a huge infectious troop
Of pale distemperatures, and foes to life!
In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest.
To be disturb'd, would mad or man, or beast:
The consequence is then, thy jealous fits.
Have sear'd thy husband from the use of wits.
Lus. She never reprehended him but mildly,
When he demean'd himself rough, rude and wildly,—
Why you're about these rebukes, and answer not me.
Abb. She did betray me to my own reproof.
Good people, enter, and let no creature enter in my house.
Atr. Nay, nor till a creature enters in my house.
Abb. Then, let your servants bring my husband forth.
Abb. Neither; he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands,
Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labour in assaying it.
Abb. I will attend my husband, be his curse,
Diet his sickness, for it is my office,
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home with me.
Abb. Be patient: for I will not let him stir,
Till I have used the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again:
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order;
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.
Abb. I will not hence, and leave my husband here;
And ill it doth beseen your holiness,
To separate the husband and the wife.
Abb. Be quiet, and depart, thou shalt not have him.
Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.
Abb. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take perform my husband from the abbess.
Mrs. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
Anon, I am sure, the duke himself in person
Comes this way to the melancholy vale;
The place of death and sorry execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.
Abb. Upon what cause?
Mer. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publicly for his offence.
[Deatb.]
Abb. See, where they come; we will behold his
Luc. Kneel to the duke, before he pass the abbey.
Enter Duke, attended; Exxons, bare-headed; with the Headsman and other Officers.
Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly.
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.
Abb. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!
Abb. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady;
It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.
Abb. May it please your grace, Antiphons, my Whom I made lord of me and all I had,
(A husband, and
At your important letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him;
That desperately he hurrieth through the street,
(With his handsman, all as mad as he,) Displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did take,
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home,
Whilst to take order for the wrongs he went,
That here and there his fury had committed.
Anon, I wasted not by what strange escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him,
And, with his mad attendant and himself,
Each one with rufeful passion, with drawn swords,
Met us again, and, madly bent on us,
Chased us away; till, raising of more aid,
We came again to bind them; then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them;
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence.
Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and sent hence for help.
Duke. Long since, his husband serv'd me in my
And that he was engag'd a prince's word, way;
Duke. When thou didst make him master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could.—
Go, some of you, knock at the abbey-gate;
And bid the lady abbess come to me;
I will determine this, before I stir.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself!
My master and his man are both broke loose.
Beaten the maids a-row, and bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blazed, they threw him up
Great pails of potted mire to quench the hair:
My master prayers and patience he, while
His man with scissors nicks him like a fool:
And, sure, unless you send some present help,
Between them they will kill the conjuror.
Abb. Peace, fool, thy master and his man are here;
And that is false, thou dost report to us.
Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true;
I have not preach'd almost, since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you.
To scour his face and to disfigure you: [Cry within.
Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress; fly, be gone.
COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Duke. Come, stand by me, fear nothing: Guard with halberds.

Adv. Alas me, it is my husband! Witness you That he is borne about invisible: Even now we hou'sd him in the abbey here; And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter ANTIPholoUs and DroMio of EpheseS.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke, oh, grant me justice!

Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I besrid thee in the wars, and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote, I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio.

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife; There, that hath abused and dishonour'd me, Even ia the strength and height of life! Beyond imagination is the wrong, That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just. Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors While she, with harlotts feasted in my house. [upon me, Duke. A grievous fault: Say, woman, didst thou so? Ant. E. You, my good lord; myself, he, and my sister, To-day did dine together: So baf'd my soul, As this is false, he burdens me withal! Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night, But she tells to your highness simple truth!

Ant. O perjur'd woman! they are both forsworn. In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Tis, in the ch'in, I, divvled what I say; Neither distin'gd with the effect of wine. Nor heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire, Albeit, his wrongs might make one wiser mad. This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner: That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who parted with me to go fetch a chain, Pretending to bring it to the Porcupine, Where Balthazar and I did dine together. Our dinner done, and he not coming thither, I went to seek him: In the street I met him; And in his company, that gentleman. There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down, That this day of him receiv'd the chain, Which, God he knows, I saw not; for the which, He did arrest me with an officer. I did obey; and sent my peasant home For certain ducats: He with none return'd. Then fairly I bespoke the officer, To go in person with me to my house. By the way we met My wife, her sister, and a rabble more Of vile confederates; along with them They brought one Pinch; a hungry lean-faced villain, A meer anatomy, a mountebank, A thread bare juggler, and a fortune-teller; A needy, hollow eyed, sharp-looking wretch, A living dead man: this pernicious slave, Forsotho took on him as a conjurer: And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as t'other, out facing me. Cries out, I was possess'd: then altogether They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence; And in a dark and dankish vault at home There left me and my man, both bound together: Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in suader, I gain'd my freedom, and immediately Ran hither to your grace: whom I beseech To give me ample satisfaction For these deep shames, and great indignities.

Ant. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him; That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no? Ant. He had, my lord: and when he ran in here, These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mer. Besides, I will be sworn, these ears of mine Heard you confess, you had the chain of him, After you first forsaw it on the mart; And, thereafter I drew my sword on you; And then you fled into this abbey here From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls, Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me; I never saw the chain, so help me heaven! And this is false, you burden me withal.

Duke. What an intricate impeach is this! I think, you all have drank of Cicer's cup. If here you hou'sd him, here he would have been: If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:— You say, he dined at home; the goldsmith here Denies that saying:—Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there, at the Porcupine.

Cour. He did; and from my finger snatch'd that Ant. E. As true, my liege, this ring I had of her. Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here? Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace. Duke. Why, this is strange:—Go call the abbeys I think, you are all mated, or stark mad. [hither;[Exit An Attendant.

Ege. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak a word, Harpy, I see a friend will save my son, And pay the sum that may deliver me. Duke. Speak freely, Syracusan, what thou wilt. Ege. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus? And is not that your bondman Dromio? Dro. E. Within this hour, I was his bondman, sir; But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords: Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound. Ege. Am I sure, you both of you remember me. Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you; For lately we were bond, as you are now. You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir? Ege. Why look you strange on me? you know me. Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now, [well. Ege. Oh! grief hath chang'd me, since you saw me last. And careful hours, with time's deformed hand, Have written strange defects in my face: But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice? Ant. E. Neither.

Ege. Dromio, nor thou? Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor 1.

Ege. I am sure, thou dost. Dro. E. Ay, sir? but I am sure, I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him. Ege. Not know my voice! O, time's extremity! Hast thou so crack'd and splitt'd my poor tongue, In seven short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untold cares? Though now this gnarled face of mine be hid In sap-consuming winter's drozzled snow, And all the conduits of my blood froze up; Yet hath my life of some memory, My wasting lamp some fading glimmer left, My dull deaf ears a little use to hear: All these old witnesses (I cannot err,) Tell me, thou art my son Antipholus. Ant. E. I never saw my father in my life.
ACT V — SCENE I.

Enter the Abbess, with Antipholus Syracuse, and Dromio Syracuse.

Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wrong'd.

[All gather to see him.]

Adr. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is genius to the other; And so of these: Which is the natural man, And which the spirit? Who decipher them? Dro. S. I, sir, am Dromio; command him away.

Adr. E. I, sir, an Dromio; pray, let me stay.

Ant. S. O. Egeon, art thou not I or else his ghost? Dro. S. O. my old master, who hath bound him here? Abb. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds, And gain a husband by his liberty:— Speak, old Egeon, if thou best the man That hadst a wife once called Emeria, That bore to thee a burden two fair sons: O, if thou best the same Egeon, speak, And speak unto the same Emeria!—

Adr. If I dream not, thou art Emeria; If thou art she, tell me, where is that son That floated with thee on the fatal raft?—

Abb. By men of Epidamnum, he, and I.

Adr. E. By Egeon's wife, there are two so like. But, by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth By force took Dromio, and my son from them, And me they left with those of Epidamnum: What then became of them, I cannot tell; I, to this fortune that you see me in.

Duke. Why, here begins his morning story right: These two Antipholus's, they are two so like, And these two Dromio's, one in semblance,— Besides her urging of her wreck at sea,— These are the parents to these children, Which accidentally are met together. Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first.

Ant. S. No, sir, not I; I came from Syracuse.

Duke. Stay, stand apart; I know not which.

[Lord.]

Ant. E. I came from Conuth, my most gracious Duke. And I with him.

Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle. [warrior] Adr. E. Which of you two did dine with me to day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adr. E. And are not you my husband?

Ant. E. No, I say nay to that.

Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so; And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here, Did call me brother.—What I told you then, I hope, I shall have leisure to make good; If this be not a dream I see and hear.

Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

Ant. S. I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Ang. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

Adr. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail, By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I receive from you, And Dromio my man did bring them me: I see, we still did meet each other's man, And I was taken for him, and he for me, And thereupon these errors are arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

Duke. It shall not need, thy father hath his life. Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.

Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Remain'd duke, vouchsafe to take the pains, To go with us into the abbey here, And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes:— And all that are assembled in this place, By that this sympathized one day's error, Have suffer'd wrong, go, keep us company, And we shall make full satisfaction.—

Twelve-five yen at a have I in great travail Of you, my sons; nor, till this present hour, My heavy burdens are delivered:— The duke, my husband, and my children both,— And you the calendars of their nativity, Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me; After so long grief, such nativity!

Duke. Witness, my lady, my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. [Enter Duke, Abbess, Egeon, Courtezan, Merchant, Angelo, and Attendants.]

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard? [hark'd!]

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou expend

Dro. S. Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Courtezan.

[ mio:]

Ant. S. He speaks to me; I am your master, Dromio, come go with us; we'll look to that anon: Embrace thy brother there, rejoice with him.

[Enter Antipholus S. and E., Ann. and Luc.]

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house, That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner; The new shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks, you are my glass, and not my see by you, I am a sweet-faced youth. [brother; Will you walk in to see their gossiping!]

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We will draw cuts for the senior: till then, lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then thus: We came into the world like brother and brother: And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another. [Exeunt.]

On a careful revision of the preceding scenes, I do not hesitate to think that the composition of two very unequal writers. Shakespeare had undoubtedly a share in them; but that the entire play was no work of his, is an opinion which (as Benedict says,) "Fire cannot melt out of me, I will die in it at the stake." Thus, as we are informed by Aubin Villisus, lib. i. cap. x. some plays were actually ascribed to Plautus; which in truth had only been (verstauet et exspolita) retouched and polished by him.

In this comedy we find more intricacy of plot than distinction of character; and our attention is less forcibly engaged because we can scarce account how the denouement will be brought about. Yet the subject appears to have been remarkably disfigured, even in this last and amusing scene, where the same mistakes are continued, till their power of affecting us, Comedians is entirely lost.—Milton.

The long defence verses that Shakespeare has attributed in this play to the comicorum, are written in that kind of metre which was usually attributed, by the dramatic poets before his time, to the comic verses, to some of their inferior characters; and this circumstance is one of the many that authorize us to place the preceding comedy, as well as Love's Labour's Lost, and The Taming of the Shrew, (where the same kind of versification is likewise found,) among our author's earliest productions; composed very probably at a time when he was insensibly infected with the prevailing fashions, and betimes conceived "to devote boldly from the common track."—MALONE.
MACBETH.

Or this splendid poem the first edition was that of the players in 1589. It was, however, in the opinion of Mr. Malone, written in 1580 or 1581. A copy of it is in the British Museum. It was discovered the 31st of Middleton's tragic comedy the Witch, it was supposed, the Prince's was taken from it in the hint of the supernatural portion of this tragedy. There is no reason for suspecting that the play of Middleton was anterior to that of Shakespeare, and he was accused of having adopted several very strong arguments to show that it was written several years later. This must be given up as to all phases of the question; but it seems probable that the parts revealed in Shakespeare's time is from Dr. Johnson.

"In order to make up the number of the authorities and merit of a writer, it is always necessary to examine the genius of his age, and the opinions of his contemporaries. A poet who should now make the whole action of his tragedy depend upon enchantment, and produce the chief events by the assistance of supernatural agents, would be considered as transgressing the bounds of probability, he was banished from the nobility to the mere, and condemned to write fairy tales instead of tragedies; but a survey of the notions which prevailed at the time when this play was written, will prove that Shakespeare was in no danger of such censure, since he only turned the system that was then universally admitted, to his advantage, and was far from overestimating the credulity of his audience.

"The reality of witchcraft or enchantment, which, though not strictly the same, are confounded in this play, has in all ages and countries been credited by the common people, and in most, by the learned themselves. Thephantoms have indeed appeared more frequently, in proportion as the darkness of ignorance has been more gross; but it cannot be shown, that the brightest glories of knowledge have at any time been so generally suspected or rejected, as when the notions which obtained in modern times were promulgated by the means of writers, like Newton, Dr. Warburton appears to believe (Supplement to the Introduction to the Oracles), that the first accounts of enchantments were brought into this part of the world by the Greeks which returned from their eastern expeditions. But there is always found in these reports a mixture of the true and the false; and one of the most curious instances of this kind of credulity was at his height, seems to have been that of the holy war, in which the Christians supposing demons to be spectators or accomplices of their enemies, were accustomed to employ every kind of witchcraft, to obtain the victory, or to the reception so general. Olympiodorus, in llio. of Eudox. tells us of one Libanius who practiced this kind of miracles on the occasion of a very great calamity, and succeeded so well, that the emperor himself is said to have been charmed out of his senses. There is a story, which is related by the ancient historians, of a certain woman who was so much affected with enchantment, that she could not refuse any request, however absurd, which he made, in the course of their conversation. After a long time, which, however, is said not to occur in the present ages, when the Romans discovered the trick, a great number of women and men were tried, and a sort of witchcraft invented, to perform great things against the Bar. karians without soldiers, by the art of the impostress Had. Hadr., just to death, when he was about to have given proofs of his abilities. He confessed several kindred in her sister, by cutting him off at a time so convenient for his reputation. But a more remarkable proof of the antiquity of this notion may be found in C. Chrystophorytius, the last of the liberators, which exhibits a scene of enchantments not exceeded by any romance of the middle ages; he supposes a spectator overlooking a field of battle, and beholding two armies, the one armed with various objects of horror, the engines of destruction, and the acts of slaughter, alchemists ete. on the enemies, and the other full of terrors and the might of the many, and so on with much vigor. Let him then proceed to the body of the whole tragic action, it is the object of the business, armes men transported through the air, and every power and force of nature. Whether Dr. Chrysostom believed that such performances were really to be seen in a day of battle, or only endeavoured to reveal his design by adopting the notions of the vulgar, it is equally certain, that such notions were in use by the ancients; and he probably knew, that before the campaign, from the Saracens in a later age; the wars with the Saracens, the wonderful events associated with the annual occasions of their preparations, were representations ofPolicy naturally discovers prodigies, but as the scene of action was removed to so great a distance.

"The Magicians now immediately arrive at their meridian, and though day was gradually increasing upon us, the goblins and phantoms, and the entire train of supernatural beings were revealed in the twilight. In the time of Queen Elizabeth was the remarkable trial of the witches of Warwick, whose execution is still commemorated in an annual sermon at Hastings. But the reign of King James, in which this tragedy was written, many circumstances occurred to corroborate and confirm this opinion, the king, who was much celebrated for his knowledge, had, before his arrival in England, not only examined in person a woman accused of witchcraft, but had given a very formal account of the practices and illusions of evil spirits, the compacts of witches, the ceremonies used by them, the manner of detecting them, and the justice of punishing them in his declarations of Daemonologie, written in the Scottish dialect, and published at Edinburgh. This book was, soon after his succession, reprinted in London; and in the ready way to gain King James's favour was to foster his speculations; the system of Daemonologie was immediately adopted by all who desired either to gain preferment or to lose it. Thus the doctrine of witchcraft was very powerfully inculcated; and as the greatest part of mankind have no other reason for their opinions than that they are in fashion, it cannot be doubted but this persuasion made a rapid progress, since vanity and credulity co-operated for its advancement, and the King's authority, and the public spirit of the times, and the party in parliament, who, in the first year of King James, made a law, by which it was enacted, chap. xiv. That "if any person shall use any incantation or conjuration of any evil or wicked spirit; or cause any person to be goaded, stung, or constrained to do any thing, or to do or believe any evil or cursed spirit, or to perform any act of witchcraft, sorcery, charm, or enchantment; or shall use any means to excite any sort of witchcraft, sorcery, charm, or enchantment: 5. whereby any person be killed, wounded, or hurt, or have some part of his body cut off, or be appalled, or from any injury, or false or malicious information, or through any justifiable means, shall suffer death." This law was repeated in many other cases, and became a basis for the practice of the arts of witchcraft, which became more and more universal, and enlivened the whole country, and became the only public, and criminal, to double it; and all are always seen in proportion as they are expected, witches were every day discovered, and punished so fast in some places, that Bishop Hall mentions a village in Lancashire, where their number was greater than that of the houses. The Jesuits and sectaries took advantage of this universal error, and endeavored to promote the interest of their parties by pretending to certain wonders, and of the existence of demons, but they were detected and exposed by the clergy of the established church.

"Upon this general infatuation Shakespeare might be easily allowed to have wrought an effect, especially since he had already, in his greatest exuberance such histories as were then thought true; nor can it be doubted, that the scenes of enchantment, however they may now be ridiculed, were both by himself and his audience thought awful and effecting;—Johnson."
ACT I.—SCENE III.

Enter King Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier.

Mal. What bloody man is that? He can report, As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt.

The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant.

Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought 'Gainst my captivity:—Hail, brave friend! Say to the king the knowledge of the traitor, As thou didst leave it.

Sol. Doubtfully it stood;

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together, And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald (Worthy to be a rebel; for, to that, The multiplying villainies of nature Do swarm upon him,) from the western isles Of Kernes and Gallowglasses is supplied:

And fortune, on his damned quarril smiling, Shew'd like a rebel's where: But all 's too weak:

For brave Macbeth, (well he deserves that name,) Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel, Which smok’d with bloody execution, Like valour’s minion,

Caw’d out his passage, till he fac’d the slave;

And ne’er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him, Till he unscaum’d him from the nace to the chaps, And fix’d his head upon our battlements.

Dan. O, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!

Sol. As whence the sun ‘gins his reflection Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break; So from that spring, whence comfort seem’d to come, Discomfort swells.

Mark, king of Scotland, mark, No sooner justice had, with valour arm’d, Compell’d these skipping Kernes to trust their heels;

But the Norweyan lord, surveying vantage, With furnish’d arms, and new supplies of men, Began a fresh assault.

Dan. Dismay’d not this Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?

Sol. Yes;

As sparrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion.

If I say sooth, I must report they were As canons overcharg’d with double cracks:

They Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds, Or memorize another Golgotha,

I cannot tell:

But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Dan. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds;

They smack of honour both.—Go, get him surgeons.

[Exit Soldier, attended.

Enter Rosse.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthy thane of Rosse.

Len. What haste looks through his eyes! So should That seems to speak things strange. [he look, Rose. God save the king!

Dan. Whence camest thou, worthy thane?

Rose. From Fife, great king,

Where the Norweyan banners float the sky, And far our people cold.

Norway himself, with terrible numbers, Assisted by that most disloyal traitor

The thane of Cawdor, 'gan a dismal conflict:— Till that Bellona’s bridegroom, lapp’d in proof, Confronted him with self-comparisons,

Point against point rebellious, arm against arm, Curbing his lavish spirit: And, to conclude, The victory fell on us;—

Dan. Great happiness!

Rosse. That now

Sweno, the Norweyan’s king, craves composition; Nor would we deign him burial of his men, Till he disbursed, at Saint Colmes’ inch, Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dan. No more that than! of Cawdor shall deceive Our bosom interests:—Go, pronounce his present death, And with his former title greet Macbeth.

Rosse. I’ll see it done.

Dan. What he hath lost, noble Macbeth hath won. [Exeunt.

Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

3 Witch. Sister, where thou?

1 Witch. A sailor’s wife had cherisnats in her lap, And mouch’d and mouch’d and mouch’d:—Give me, quoth I:

Arise thee, witch! the rump fed ronyon cries. Her husband’s go to Aleppo war, master o’ the Tiger; But in a sieve I’ll thither sail, And, like a rat without a tail, I’ll do, I’ll do, and I’ll do.

2 Witch. I’ll give thee a wind.

1 Witch. Thou art kind.

3 Witch. And I another.

1 Witch. I myself have all the other; And the very ports they blow, All the quarters that they know I the shipman’s card.

I will drain him dry as hay: Sleep shall, neither night nor day, Hang upon his peat-house lid; He shall live a man forbid;

Weary sev’n-nights, nine times nine, Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine: Though this bark cannot he lost, Yet it shall be tempest-toss’d.

Look what I have.

2 Witch. Shew me, shew me.

1 Witch. Here I have a pilot’s thum,

Wreck’d as homeward he did come. [Drum within.

3 Witch. A drum, a drum:

Macbeth doth come.

Ill. The weird sisters, hand in hand, Posters of the see and land, Thus do go about, about:

Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, And thrice again, to make up nine; Peace!—the charm’s wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen. Ban. How faris’t call’d to Fores?—What are these, So wither’d, and so wild in their attire; That look not like the inhabitants o’ the earth, And yet are on? Live you? or are you nought That man may question? You seem to understand me, By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips:—You should be women, And yet your beards forbid me to interpret That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can;—What are you? [Glamis! 1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of 2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!—[fater.

S’Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shall be king here-

Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair?—I ‘the name of truth,
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew? My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction
Of noble having, and of royal hope,
That he seems wrapt withal; to thee I speak not:
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say, which grain will grow, and which will not;
Speak then to me, who neither beg, nor fear,
Your favours, nor your hate.

1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.
3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none:
So all hail, Macbeth and Banquo!
1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
By Sincl's death, I know, I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and, to be kig, Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you step our way
With such prophetic greeting?—speak, I charge you.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
And these are of them: Whither are they vanish'd?
Macb. Into the air: and what seem'd corporal, melted
As breath into the wind.——Would they had stand!

Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten of the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?
Ban. To the self-same tune, and words. Who's here?

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Rosse. The king hath happily recei'd, Macbeth,
The news of thy success: and when he reads
The general venture in the rebels' sight,
His wonders and his praises do contend,
Which should be thine, or his: Silenc'd with that,
In viewing o'er the rest the self-same day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwarian ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make;
Strange images of death. As thick as hail,
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;
To herald thee into his sight, o'thout pay thee.

Rosse. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!

For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives; why do you dress
In borrowed robes? [me

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Where he deserves to love. Whether he was Combin'd with Norway; or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;
But treasons capital, confess'd, and prov'd,
Have overthrown him.

Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor:
The greatest is behind.——Thanks for your pains.—

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequences.

Conius, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen——

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill: cannot be good:—If ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion
Whose horizon image doth unfit my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings;
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in suspense; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance may Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him
Like our strange garments; cleave not to their mould,
But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what may come:
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour:—my dull brain was Wrought
With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains
Are register'd where every day I turn
The leaf to read them.——Let us toward the king.

Think upon what hath chanc'd; and, at more time,
The interim having weight'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough.——Come, friends. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain,
Lenox, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not
Those in Commission yet return'd?

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die: who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons;
Implor'd his highness' pardon; and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him, like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,
As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—O worthiest cousin!

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.

The sin of my ingratitude, even now
Was heavy on me: Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee. — Would thou hadst less desper'd;
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.
Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties: and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants;
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honour.

Dun. Welcome hither;
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserve'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plentiful joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm; whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland: which honour must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars shall shine
On all deservers.—From hence to Inverness,
And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for you:
I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach;
So, humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Ca'irdor!

Macb. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a step,
On which I must fall down, or else o'er-heap, [Aside.
For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires!
Let not light see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand! yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done to see. [Exit.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant;
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me. Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exit.

SCENE V.
Inverness. A Room in Macbeth's Castle.

Enter Lady Macbeth, reading a letter.

Lady M. They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfectly report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I learned in desire to question them further, they made themselves-air, into which they vanished. While I stood reposing in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all-hailed me, Thane of Ca'irdor; by which title, before, these twain sisters solaced me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, Hail, king that shalt be! This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness; that thou mightest not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee.
Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Ca'irdor; and shalt be
What thou art professed:—yet do I fear thy nature;
It is too full of the milk of human kindness.
To catch the nearest way. Thou wouldst be great;
Art without ambition: but without [highly,
The illness should attend it. What thou would'st
That would'st thou holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongfully win: thou'dst have, great Glamis,
That which cries, Thus thou must do, if thou hate it;
And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
Than wishest should be undone. Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear;
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal. —What is your tidings?

Enter an Attendant.

Att. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it;
Is not thy master with him? who, wer't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Att. So please you, it is true; our thane is com-
One of my fellows had the speed of him; [ing:
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending,
He brings great news. The raven himself is hoarse,
[Exit Attendant.
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse;
That no compunctions visiting of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect, and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you mordant ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark.
To cry, Halt, halt! —Great Glamis! worthy Ca'irdor!

Enter Macbeth.

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?

Macb. To-morrow,—as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never
Shall sun that morrow see!
Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters;—To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it. He that's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my despacht;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.
Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear;
To alter favour ever is to fear:
Leave all the rest to me. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—The same. Before the Castle.

Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending.

Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo,
Lenox, Macouff, Rosse, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see! our honour'd hostess!

The love that follows us, sometimes is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God yield us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house: For these of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermitxes.

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We court'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well;
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath help'd him
To his home before us: Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand:
Conduct me to mine host; we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him.
By your leave, hostess. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The same. A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter, and pass over the stage,
A Servant, and divers Servants with dishes and service.
Then enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere
It were done quickly: if the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With its surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,—
We'd jump the life to come.—But in these cases,
We'll all awake after-memories: that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which being taught, return
To plague the inventor: this even-hand'd justice
Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed: then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off:
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself,
And falls on the other.—How now, what news?

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd: Why have you left
Mac. Hath he ask'd for me? [the chamber?

Lady M. Know you not, he has?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business:
He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou in art in desire? Would'st thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem;
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage.

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace:
I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none.

Lady M. What beast was it then,
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would
Be so high, that posterity will not love
Nor time, nor place, nor number to count them;
Did then that love, and yet you would make both;
They have made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. I have given suck; and know
How tender 'tis, to love the babe that milks me:
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail,—

Lady M. We fail! But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep, (Where'the the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only: When in svinish sleep Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan! what not put upon
His spongy eviscers; who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?—

Macb. Bring forth men-children only!
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males, Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have done it?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our graces and clamour rear
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bade up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Court within the Castle.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, and a Servant with a torch before them.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?

Fl. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.
MAGNETH.

LADY MCGETH Hark! I laid their daggers ready.

Act II, Sc. 2
Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take 't, 'tis later, sir. [heaven.

Ban. Hold, take my sword. — There's but one dress in it.

Their candles are all out. — Take thee that too.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,

And yet I would not sleep: Merciful powers!

Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature

Gives way to in repose! — Give me my sword; —

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Who's there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed:

He hath been in unusual pleasure, and

Sent forth great largess to your offices:

This diamond he gives your wife withal,

By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepare'd, our will became the servant to detect;

Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All's well. I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:

To whom they have shewn some truth.

Macb. I think not of them:

Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,

Would spend it in some words upon that business.

If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent, — when 'tis, it Shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none,

In seeking to augment it, but still keep

My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear,

I shall be counsel'd.

Macb. Good repose, the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir; The like to you! [Exit Ban.

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,

She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed. [Exit Serv.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,

The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still. [thee:

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind? a false creation
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going;

And such an instrument I was to use.

Mine eyes are made the fools of the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest; I see thee still;

And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,

Which was not so before. — There's no such thing:

It is the bloody business, which informs

Thus to mine eyes. — Now 'oer the one half world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep; now witchcraft celebrates

Pals Hecate's offerings; and with her murder,

Alarum'd by his sentinels, the wolf,

Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin's ravishing strides, toward his design

Moves like a ghost. — Thou sure and firm set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear

Thy very stones prone of my where-about,

And take the present horror from the time,

Which now suits with it. — Whiles I threat, he lives;

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[4 bell rings.

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. [Exit.
MACBETH.

Give me the daggers; The sleeping, and the dead, Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood, That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed, I'll gild the faces of the grooms with blood, For it must seem their guilt. [Exit. Kneeling within. Macb. Whence is that knocking? How is 't with me, when every noise appals me? What hands are here? Ha! they pluck out mine eyes! Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand! No; this my hand will rather The multitudinous seas incarnadine, Making the green—one red.

Re-enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shun To wear a heart so white. [Kneel.] I hear a knocking At the south entry—retire we to our chamber. A little water clears us of this deed: How easy is it then? Your constancy [knocking: Hath left you unattended.—] [Kneeling.] Hark! more Get on your nightgown, let occasion call us, And shew us to be watchers:—Be not lost So poorly in your thoughts. Macb. To know my deed,—'twere best not know myself. Wake Duncan from thy knocking; Ay, 'would thou couldst! [Linen.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter a Porter. [Kneeling within. Porter. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell's gate, he should have old turning the key. [Knocking.] Kneel, knock, knock: Who's there, i' the name of Belzebub? Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: Come in time; have napkins enough about you; here you'll sweat for 't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Who's there, i' the other devil's name? Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock: Who's there? Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French horse: Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Never at quiet! What are you?— But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the promisway to the everlastings bonfire. [Knocking.] Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.]

Enter MACDUFF and LENOX.

Macb. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, That you do lie so late? Port. 'Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock: and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things. Macb. What three things does drink especially provoke? Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Leechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovoes: it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore much drink may be said to be an equivocator with leechery: it makes him: and it mars him: it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him. Macb. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night. Port. That it did, sir, 'tis the very throat o' me: But I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him. Macb. Is thy master stirring?— Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes. Enter MACDUFF.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir! Macb. Good-morrow, both! Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane? Macb. Not yet. Macd. He did command me to call timely on him: I have almost slipp'd the hour. Macb. I'll bring you to him. Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you; But yet, 'tis one. Macb. The labour we delight in, physics pain. This is the door. Macd. I'll make so bold to call, For 'tis my limited service. [Exit MACDUFF. Len. Goes the king From hence to-day? Macb. He does:—he did appoint so. Len. The night has been unruly: Where we lay, Our chimneys were blown down: and, as they say, Lamentings heard; the air; strange screams of death; And prophesying, with accents terrible, Of dire combustion, and confus'd events, New hatch'd to the world: the obsequious bird Clam'd the livelong night: some say, the earth Was feverous, and did shake. Macb. Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel A fellow to it. Re-enter MACDUFF. Macd. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor heart, Cannot conceive, nor name thee! Macb. Len. What's the matter? Macd. Confusion now hath made his master-piece! Most sacrileges murder hath broke ope The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence The life o' the building. Macb. What is 't you say? the life? Len. Mean you his majesty? Macd. Sigh! Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your With a new Gorgon:—Do not bid me speak; See, and then speak yourselves. Awake! awake!— [Enter MACBETH and LENOX. Ring the alarm-bell—] Len. Murder and treason! Banquo, and Donaldbain! Malcolm! awake! Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit And look on death itself:—up, up, and see The great doom's image—Malcolm! Banquo! As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites, To countenance this horror! [Bell rings.]

Enter Lady MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business, That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley The sleepers of the house? speak, speak, —— Macd. O, gentle lady, Tis not for you to hear what I can speak: The repetition, in a woman's ear, Would murder as it fell, —— O Banquo! Banquo! Enter Banquo.

Our royal master's murder'd! Lady M. Woe, alas! What, in our house? Ban. Too cruel, any where. —— Dear Duff, I pr'ythee, contradict thyself, And say, it is not so.
Act III.—Scene I.

Re-enter Macbeth and Lenox.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance, I had liv'd a blessed time: for, from this instant, There's nothing serious in mortality; All is but toys: renown, and grace, is dead; The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know it: The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood Is stopped:—the very source of it is stopped.

Macb. Your royal father's murderer, was—

Mal. O, by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done't:

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood, So were their daggers, which, unswip'd, we found Upon their pillows:

They star'd, and were distracted; no man's life Was to be trusted with them. Macb. O, yet I do repent of my fury, That I did kill them.

Macb. Wherefore did you so?

Mal. Who can be wise, anoaz'd, temperate, And loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man: The expedition of my violent love Out-ran the pause of reason.—Here lay Duncan, His silver skin badg'd with his golden blood; And his gash'd stab look'd like a breach in nature For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers, Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers Unmannerly breach'd with gore: Who could refrain That had a heart to love, and in that heart Courage to make his love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho! Macb. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues, That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken here, Where our fate, hid within an angle-hole, May rush, and seize us? Let's away; our tears Are not yet brewd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow on

The foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:—[Lady Mac. is carried out.]

And when we have our naked fraitrles hid, That suffer in exposure, let us meet, And question this most bloody piece of work, To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us: In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence, Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight Of treasoous malice. Macb. And so do I. All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness, And meet it the hall together.

All. Well contented. [Exeunt all but Macb. & Don.]

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with To shew an unfeelt sorrow, is an office [them: Which the false man does easy: I'll to England.]

Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune Shall keep us both the safer: where we are, There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood, The nearer bloody. Macb. This murderous shaft that's shot, Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore to horse; And let us not be dainty of leave-taking, But dash away: There's winter yet, Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left. [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter Ross, and an old Man.

Old M. Three score and ten I can remember well: Within the volume of which time, I have seen Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore Hath trifled former knowings.

[Exit Ross.

Old M. Ah, good father, Thou seest the heavens, as troubled with man's act, Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 'tis day, And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp: Is it night's predominance, or the day's shame, That darkness does the face of earth intomb, When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural, Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last, A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place, Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Ross. And Duncan's horses, (a thing most strange and certain,) Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race, Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said, they eat each other. Ross. They did so; to the amazement of man eyes, That look'd upon it. Here comes the good Mac- duff:

Enter Macduff.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Macd. Why, see you not?

Ross. Is't known, who did this more than bloody Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain? [deed?]

Ross. Alas, the day

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were suborn'd Malcolm, and Donalbain, the king's two sons, Are stol'n away and flied; which puts upon them

Suspicion of the deed.

Ross. 'Gainst nature still: Threatless ambition, that wilt ravin up Thine own life's means!—Then 'tis most like, The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.

Macd. He is already nam'd; and gone to Scone, To be invested.

Ross. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colines-kill;

The sacred storehouse of his predecessors, And guardian of their bones.

Ross. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Ross. Well, may you see things well done there: Let our old robes sit easier than our new.

Macd. Father, farewell.

Old M. God's benison go with you; and with those That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Scene I.—Forees. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban. Thou hastit, now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all. As the weird women promis'd; and, I fear, Thou play'st most fouly for't: yet it was said, It should not stand in thy posterity; But that myself should be the root and father Of many kings. If there come truth from them, (As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,) Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope! But, hush; no more.

SECRET SOUANDER. Enter Macbeth, as King; Lady Macbeth, as Queen: Lenox, Ross, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

BAN. Let your highness
Command upon me; to which, my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

BAN. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desired your good advice
(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous,)
In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.

BAN. Is't far you ride?

Macb. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time,
'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night.

For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

BAN. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody consorts are bestow'd
To England, and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: But of that to-morrow;
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: Adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?

BAN. Ay, my good lord: our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift, and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to their backs.

Farewell. — [Exit Banquo.]

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourselves
Till supper time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Exeunt Lady Macbeth, Lords, Ladies, &c.
SIRRACH. Lord, this is a most pleasurable pleasure:
Attend. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.— [Exit Attain.]

To be thus, is nothing;
But to be safely thus:—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty of nature
[dares; Rajns that, which would be fear'd: 'Tis much he And, to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none, but he Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My genius is rebuk'd; as, it is said, Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
They bade him for a father to a line of kings;
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my grip.
Thence to be wrenched'd with an unlinear hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If it be so,
For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vesel of my peace
Only for them, and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,
To make them kings; the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?—

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.]

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

Macb. Well then, now
Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know,
That it was he, in the times past, which held you
So under fortune; which, you thought, had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference; pass'd in probation with you, How you were borne in hand; how cross'd; the instruments;
[night,
Who wrought with them; and all things else, that
To half a soul, and a notion craz'd, Say, Thus did Banquo.

I. Macb. You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so; and went forward, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go? Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man; and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?

1. Macb. We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men;
As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs
Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-solves, are cleft
All to the name of dogs: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The house-keeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which beautesons nature
Hath in him clos'd; whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the bill
That writes them all alike: and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
And not in the worst rank of manhood, say it;
And I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off;
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his lie;
Which in his death were perfect.

2. Macb. I am one, my liege,
Whereof the very blows and buffets of the world
Have so incens'd, that I am reckless what
I do, to spite the world.

1. Macb. And I another,
So weary with disasters, tug'd with fortune,
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you
Know, Banquo was your enemy.

Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life: And though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, but wall his fall
Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love;
Marking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons.

2. Macb. We shall, my lord,
Permit what you command us.

1. Macb. Though our lives— [hour, at most,
Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this
I will advise you where to plant yourselves.
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' the time,
The moment out; for't must be done to-night,
ACT III.—SCENE IV.

And something from the place: always thought,
That I require a clearance; And with him,
(To leave no ruts, nor botches, in the work,)
Flence his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart;
I'll come to you anon.

2 Macb. We are resolved, my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight; abide within.
It is concluded:—Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it had heaven, must find it out to-night. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room.

Enter Lady Macbeth and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?
Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure
For a few words.

Serv. Upon your father's Nought's heard, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter Macbeth.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of such compeers as fix your companions making?
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on! Things without remedy,
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it;
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.

But how the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,
 Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams,
That shake us nightly: better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him further!

Lady M. Come on;

Gentle my lord, seek o'er your rugged looks:
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love; and so, I pray you, be you:
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue:
Unsafe the while, that we Must have our honours in these flattering streams;
And make our faces vizards to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!
Thou know'rt, that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.
Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not etern

Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund: Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's summons,
The shard-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,
Till thou applaudit the deed. Come, seeing night,
Sharf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And, with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cancell, and tear to pieces, that great bond
Which keeps my gait—light thickens; and the crowd
Makes wing to the rocky wood:
Good things of day begin to drop and drowse;
Whilest night's black agents to their prey do rouse.
Then marvell' st at my words: but hold thee still;
Things bad begun, make strong themselves by ill:
So, pr'ythee, go with me. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace.

Enter three Murderers.

1 Mur. But who did bid thee join with us?
2 Mur. Macbeth.
3 Mur. He needs not our mistrust: since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.

1 Mur. Theon stand with us.
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the latest traveller space,
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. [Within.] Give us a light there, ho!
2 Mur. Then it is he; the rest
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i'the court.

1 Mur. His horses go about.
3 Mur. Almost a mile; but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Enter Banquo and Fleance, a Servant with a torch preceding them.

2 Mur. A light, a light!

1 Mur. Stand to't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night. [Assaults Banquo.

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly;
Thou may'st revenge.—O slave!
[Dies. Fleance and Servant escape.

3 Mur. Who did strike out this light?
1 Mur. Was't not the way?
3 Mur. There's but one down; the son is fled.
2 Mur. We have lost best half of our affair.

1 Mur. Well, let's away, and say how much is done: [Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the State in the Palace.
A Banquet prepared.

Enter Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, Rosse, Lenox,
Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees, sit down: at first
And last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
Macb. Ourselves will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.
Our housest keeps her state; but, in best time,
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all my friends;
For my heart speaks they are welcome.

Enter first Murderer, to the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts thanks:

Both sides are even: Here I'll sit 't the midst:
Be large in mirth; anon, we'll drink a measure
The table round.—There's blood upon thy face.
Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.
Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within.
Is he despatch'd?

X 2
MACBETH.

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, and I the old

Macb. Thou art the best of the cut throats: Yet he's Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been Macb. And from hence our country's honours roof'd,

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,

Macb. Here, my lord, Whata's that moves your highness:

Macb. This is the very painting of your fear:

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look! how Macb. O, you sneer, and starts, (Impostors to true fear) would well become Lady M. What! quite unmann'd in folly?

Lady M. You shall be whilst our friends, our monuments:

Lady M. The Ghost disappears.

Lady M. Good night, and better health

Lady M. A kind good night to all!

Lady M. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood:

Macb. With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is Lady M. How say'th thou, that Macduff denies his per-Macb. And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;

Lady M. Think of this, good peers, but as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;

Macb. By augury, I and my firm nerves

Lady M. What man dare, I dare:

Lady M. Have you displac'd the mirth, broke the Lady M. Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone,

Lady M. And all to all.

The Ghost rises.

Lady M. O proper stuff!

Lady M. This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,

I keep a servant fee’d. I will to-morrow, (Betwixt I will,) unto the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am beat to know,
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good,
All causes shall give way; I am in blood.
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o’er;
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;
Which must be acted, eu they may be scan’d.
    Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.
    Much. Come, we’ll to sleep: my strange and self-
    Is the imitate fear that wants hard use: abuse
We are yet but young in deed.
    [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Heath.
Thunder.
Enter Hecate, meeting the three Witches.
1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angerly.
Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are,
Saucy, and over-hold! How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles, and affairs of death;
And I, the mistress of your charms,
Was never call’d to bear my part,
Or shew the glory of our art?
And, which is worse, all you have done,
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spiteful, and wrathful; who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: Get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me in the morning; thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels, and your spells, provide,
Your charms, and every thing beside:
I am for the air; this night I’ll spend
Unto a dismal-fatal end.
Great business must be wrought ere noon:
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I’ll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that, distill’d by magic snares,
Shall raise such artificial spirits,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion:
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and hear
His hopes ’bove wisdom, grace, and fear:
And you all know, security
Is mortal’s chiefest enemy.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Forests. A Room in the Palace.
Enter Lenox, and another Lord.
Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further: only, I say,
Thighs have been strangelyborne: The gracious Dun-
Was pitied of Macbeth — marry, he was dead:—
And the right-valiant Hanigo walked too late;
Whom, you may say, if it please you. Fieance kill’d,
For Fleance fled. Men must be kept too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain,
To kill their gracious father! damned fact!
How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight,
In pious rage, the two delinquents bear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep:
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too;
For I would have anger’d any heart alive,
To hear the men deny it.
He has borne all things well: and I do think,
That, had he Duncan’s son under his key,
(As, an’t please heaven, he shall not,) they should find
What ’twere to kill a father; so should Fleance.
But, peace!—for from broad words, and ’cause he fail’d
His presence at the tyrant’s feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace; Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?
Lord. The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court; and is receiv’d
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malvolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, on his aid
To make Northumberland, and warlike Sivard:
That, by the help of these, (with him above
To ratify the work,) we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights:
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives;
Do faith and justice, cancel contrivance, and return the honours,
All which we pine for now: And this report
Hath so exasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.
Len. Sent he to Macduff!
Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I,
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums: as who should say, You ’ll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer.
Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the count of England, and unfold
His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accur’d!
Lord. My prayers with him!
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron boiling.
Thunder.
Enter the three Witches.
1 Witch. Thrice th’brinded cat hath mew’d.
2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin’d.
3 Witch. Harper cries:—”Tis time, ’tis time.
1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go,
In the poison’d entrails throw—
Tead, that under coldest stone,
Days and nights hast thirty-one!
Swelter’d venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first i’ the charmed pot!
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.
2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake, in the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder’s fork, and blind-worm’s sting,
Lizard’s leg, and owlet’s wing;
For a charm of powerful trouble;
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.
3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf:
Witches mummy; jaw, and gulf,
Of the ravin’d silt-sea shark;
MACBETH.

Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark;
Liver of blashpheming Jew;
Gall of gnat, and slips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclip's;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a draught,
Make the greuel thick and slabb:
Add thereto a tiger's chaurdon,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.
2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter Hecate, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and faeries in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

SONG,—Black spirits and white
Red spirits and grey
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mingle may.

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes:—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight
What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,
(though y'arise come to know it,) answer me:
Though you unite the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches: though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders' heads;
Though palaces, and pyramids, do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germs tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me.

To what I ask you.
1 Witch. Speak.

2 Witch. Demand.

3 Witch. We'll answer.

1 Witch. Say, if thou 'st rather hear it from our
Or from our masters?

Macb. Call them, let me see them.
1 Witch. Pour in s'ow's blood, that hath eaten
Her nine farrow: grease, that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

All.

Come, high, or low;
Thyself, and office, deffly show.

Thunder. An Apparition of an armed Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought;
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

[druff;
App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macbeth!
Beware the th'ane of Fife.—Dismiss me:—Enough.

Descends.

Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution thanks;

[more:
Thou hast harp'd my fear aright:—But one word
1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here's an More potent than the first.

Thunder. An Apparition of a bloody Child rises.

App.

Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!—

Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.

[Descends.

Macb. Then live, Macduff: What need I fear of
But yet I'll make assurance double sure.
[three;
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.—What is this,

Thunder. An Apparition of a Child crowned, with A Tree in his Hand, rises.

That rises like the issue of a king;
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty!

All.

Listen, but speak not.

App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinnae hill
Shall come against him.

Descends.

That will never be;
Who can impress the forest; bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? sweet bededmets! good!
Rebellious head, rise never, till the weed
Of Birnham rise, and our high-plaid Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time, and normal custom.—Yet my heart
Throbs to know one thing; Tell me, (if your art
Can tell so much,) shall Banquo's issue ever
Reign in this kingdom?

All.

Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny thyself;
And an eternal curse fall on ye! Let me know:—
Why sinks that cauldron! and what noise is this?

[Hauntbys.

1 Witch. Show! 2 Witch. Show! 3 Witch. Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart.

Eight Kings appear, and pass over the stage in order;
the last with a Glass in his Hand; Banquo following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo; down!
Thy crown does see mine eye-balls:—And thy hair,
Thon other gold-bound brow, is like the first—
A third is like the former—Filthy hags!
Why do you show me this!—A fourth?—Start! eyes!
What! will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?
Another yet!—A seventh?—I'll see no more:—
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shews me many more: and some I see,
That two-fold balls and treble scepters carry:
Horrible sight!—Ay, now, I see, 'tis true;
For the blood-bolted Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at thee for his.—What, is this so?
1 Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so:—But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come, sisters, cheer we up his eprights,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antique round;
That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay.

Music. The Witches dance, and vanish.

Macb. Where are they? Gone!—Let this pernicious
Stand aye accused in the calendar!—

[hour

Come in, without there!

Enter Lenox.

Len.

What's your grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len.

No, my lord.
Mach. Came they not by you?
Len. No, indeed, my lord.
Mach. Infected be the air whereon they ride: And dam'!d, all those that trust them!—I did hear The gathering of horses. Who was 'st come by?
Len. 'Tis the hour three, my lord, that bring you word, Macduff is fled to England.
Mach. Fled to England!
Len. Ay, my good lord,
Mach. Time, thou antipast of my dread exploits: The flighty purpose never is o'took. Unless the deed go with it: From this moment, The very firstlings of my heart shall be The firstlings of my hand. And even now, To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and The castle of Macduff I will surprise; [done: Seize upon Fife: give to the edge of the sword His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls That trace his line. No boasting like a fool; This deed I'll do, before this purpose cool!
But no more sights!—Where are these gentlemen? Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Fife. A Room in Macduff's Castle.

Enter Lady MACDUFF, her Son, and ROSE.

Lady MACD. What had he done, to make him fly the ROSSE. You must have patience, madam. [Exit.
L. MACD. He had none: His flight was madness: When our actions do not, Our fears do make us traitors.
ROSSE. You know not,
whether it was his wisdom, or his fear.
L. MACD. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his husband, and his titles, in a place [babes, Whence whence himself does fly? He loves us not;
He wants the natural touch: for the poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
All is the fear, and nothing is the love;
As little is the wisdom, when the flight
So runs against all reason.

ROSSE. My dearest coz,
I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband,
He is noble, wise, judicious, and best known.
The fits o' the season. I dare not speak much further: But such are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour
From what we fear; yet know not what we fear;
But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way, and move,—I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but I'll be here again:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before.—My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!
L. MACD. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.
ROSSE. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort:
I take my leave at once. [Exit Rosse.
L. MACD. Sirrah, your father's dead;
And what will you do now? how will you live?
Son. As birds do, mother.
L. MACD. What, with worms and flies?
Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.
L. MACD. Poor bird! thou'lt never fear the net,
The pit-fall, nor the gin.
Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not
L. MACD. Yes, he is dead; how wilt thou do for a father?
Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?
L. MACD. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.

SCENE III.—England. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.

MAL. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty.
MACD. Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
Beside the down-fall'n birth'tomed: Each new born,
New widows howl; new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllable of doleful.
MAL. What I believe, I'll wail;
What know, believe; and, what I can redress,
As shall the time to friend, I will.
What you have spoke, it may be so, perchance.
This tyrant, whose sole name blusters our tongues,
Was once thought honest, you have lov'd him well;
Macbeth.

He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young, but something! You may deserve of him through me; and wisdom to offer up a weak, poor innocent lamb, to appease an angry God.

Mac. I am not treacherous.

Mac. But Macbeth is. A good and virtuous nature may recoil, in an imperial charge. But 'tis your pardon; that which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose: Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell: Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace, yet grace must still look so.

Mac. I have lost my hopes. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife, and child, (Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,) Without leave-taking?—I pray you, let not my jealousies be your dishonours. But mine own safeties:—You may be rightly just, Whatever I shall think.

Mac. Bleed, bleed, poor country! Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, (wrongs, For goodness dares not check thee! wear thou thy Thy title is afeard.—Fare thee well, lord: I would not be the villain that thou think'st For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp, And the rich East to boot.

As. Be not offended: I speak not as in absolute fear of you. I think, our country sinks beneath the yoke; It weeps, it bleeds: and each new day a gash Is added to her wounds: I think, withal, There would be hands uplifted in my right; And here, from gracious England, have I offer Of goodly thousands: But, for all this, When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head, Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country Shall have more vices than it had before; More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever, By him that shall succeed.

Mac. What should he be?

Mac. It is myself I mean: in whom I know And all particulars of so griffed, That, when they shall be op'ned, black Macbeth Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compared With my confinless harms.

Mac. Not in the legions Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd In evils, to top Macbeth.

Mac. I grant him bloody, Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful, Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin That has a name: But there's no bottom, none, In my voluptuousness; your wives, your daughters, Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up The cistern of my lust; and my desire All continent impediments would o'er-hear, That did oppose my will: Better Macbeth, Than such a one to reign.

Mac. Boundless intemperance In nature is a tyranny; it hath been The untimely emptying of the happy throne, And fall of many kings. But fear not yet To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink. We have willing damnes enough; there cannot be That vulture in you, to devour so many As will to greatness dedicate themselves, Finding it so facl'd.

Mac. With this th'ore grows, In my most ill-compos'd affection, Such A stanchless avarice, that, were I king, I should cut off the nobles for their heads; Desire his jewels, and this other's house: And my more-having would be as a sauce To make me hunger more; that I should forge Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal, Destroying them for wealth.

Mac. This avarice Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root Than summer-seeding lust; and it hath been The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear; Scotland hath foysons to fill up your will, Of your mere own: All these are portable, With other graces weight'd.

Mac. But I have none: The king becoming graces, As justice, verity, temperance, stabilities, Bounty, perserverance, mercy, lowliness, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude, I have no relish of them; but abound In the division of each several crime, Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell, Upbrao the universal peace, confound All unity on earth.

Mac. O Scotland! Scotland!

Mac. If such a one be fit to govern speak I am as I have spoken.

Mac. Fit to govern! No, not to live.—O nation miserable, With an untutled tyrant, bloody-scepper'd, When shall thou see thy wholesome days again? Since that the truest issue of thy throne By his own interjection stands ascer'd, And doth blaspheme his bred!—Thy royal father Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee, Off'er upon her knees than on her feet, Died every day she lived. Fare thee well! These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself, Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast, Thy hope ends here!

Mac. Macduff, this noble passion, Child of integrity, hath from my soul Wip'd the black scruples, reconcile'd my thoughts To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth By many of these trains hath sought to win me Into his power; and modest wisdom pleaks me From over-credulous haste: But God above Deail between thee and me! for even now I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abide The taints and blames I layd upon myself, For strangers to my nature. I am yet Unknown to woman; never was forsworn; Sarcely have coveted what was mine own; At no time broke my faith; would not betray The devil to his fellow; and deliver'd No less in truth, than life: my first false speaking Was this upon myself: What I am truly, Is thine, and my poor country's, to command Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach, Old Siward, with ten thousand warrior men, All ready at a point, was setting forth: Now thou and I together; And the chance of goodness, Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent? Mac. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once, Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mac. Well; more anox. Comes the king forth, I pray you!
ACT V.—SCENE I.

Doct. Ay, sir, there are a crew of wretched souls, That stay his cure: their malady convinces The great assay of art; but, at his touch, Such sanctity hath heaven given in his hand, They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.

Mai. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king:
Which often, since my here-remain in England, I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven, Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people, All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye, The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks, Put on with holy prayers; and 'tis spoken, To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue, He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy; And sundry blessings hang about his throne, That speak him full of grace.

Enter Rosse.

Mal. I know him now: Good God, betimes remove The means that make us strangers!

Rosse. Sir, Ameo.

Mai. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas, poor country; Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot But raise our mother, but our grave: where nothing, But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile; Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent the air, Are made, not mark'd: where violent sorrow seems A modern ecstasy; the dead man's knell Is there scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's lives Expire before the flowers in their caps, Dying, or e'er they sicken.

Mal. O, relation, Too nice, and yet too true! Mal. What is the newest grief?
Rosse. That of an hour's age doth kiss the speaker.
Each minute teems a new one.

Mal. And all my children?

Rosse. Well too.

Mal. Rosse. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?
Rosse. No; they were well at peace, when I did leave them. [Exit.

Mal. Be not a niggard of your speech: How goes Rosse. When I came hither to transport the tidings, Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour Of many worthy fellows that were out; Which was to my belief witness'd the rather, For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot: Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland Would create soldiers, make our women fight To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. We are coming thither: gracious England hath Lent us good Saxoy, and ten thousand men; An older, and a better soldier, none That Christendom gives out.

Rosse. Would I could answer This comfort with the like! But I have words, That would be howl'd out in the desert air, Where hearing should not latch them.

Mal. What concern they? The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind, that's honest, But lo it shares some woe; though the main part Pertains to you alone.

Mal. If it be mine, Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever, Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound, That ever yet they heard.

Mai. Humph! I guess at it.

Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife, and Savage's slaughter'd: to relate the manner, [Bishops, Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer, To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!— What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows; Give sorrow words: the grief, that does not speak, Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

Mai. My children too?

Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all That could be found.

Mal. And I must be from thence!

Rosse. My wife kill'd too? I have said.

Mal. Be comforted! Let's make us med'cines of our great revenge, To cure this deadly grief.

Mai. He has no children.—All my pretty ones? Did you say, all i.—O, hell-kite!—All! What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam, At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Mal. I shall do so; But I must also feel it as a man: I cannot but remember such things were, That were most precious to me.—Did heaven look on, And would not take their part? Sinful bladuro, They were all strick for thee! naught that I am, Not for their own demerits, but for mine, Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them now!

Mal. Be this the whetsone of your sword: let grief Convert to anger; blust not the heart, erange it.

Mal. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes, And bragget with my tongue.——But gentle heaven, Cut short all intermission; front to front, Bring thou this hand of Scotland, and myself; Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape, Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly. Come, go we to the king; our power is ready; Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth is ripe for shaking, and the powers above [may; Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you The night is long, that never ends the day. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Dunsiaine. A Room in the Castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic, and a waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doct. A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.—In this slumber agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?
MACBETH.

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may, to me; and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her: stand close.

Doct. How now, is it gone by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 'tis her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look how she rules her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot.

Doct. Harf, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One:

Twice. Why, then 'tis time to do:—Hell is murky—Fye, my lord, fye! a soldier, and afear'd?
What need we feer who knows it, when none can call our power to account!—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thame of Fife had a wife; Where is the man now?—What?—What's done?
That's done; and this, will these hands ne'er be clean!—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that:
you mar all with this starting.

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here's the smell of the blood still: all their votive observances will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. Pray God, it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died hollow in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown; look not so pale.—I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out of his grave.

Doct. Even so!

Lady M. To bed, to bed; there's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand;
What's done, cannot be undone; To bed, to bed.

[Exit Lady Macbeth.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whispers are abroad: Unnatural breed unnatural troubles; InfeBcted minds
To their dear pillows will discharge their secrets,
More needs she the divine, than the physician.—
God, God, forgive us all! Look after her;
Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
And still keep eyes upon her:—So, good night:
My mind she has mated, and amaz'd my sight:
I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter, with drum and colours, MENTEIl, CATHNESS,
ANGUS, IRONDO, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Mal-
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff.

[Colm.

Reveiges burn in them: for their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding, and the grim alarm,
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood

Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Cath. Who, knows, if Donalbain be with his bro-

Leu. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file [lier;

Of all the gentry; there is Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:

Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him.

Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel

His secret murders sticking on his hands;

Now minute he upbraids his faith-breach;

Those he commands, move only in command.

Nothing to love: now does he feel his tide
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses to recoil, and start,

When all that is within him does condemn
Itself, for being there?

Cath. Well, march we on,

To give obedience where 'tis truly o'wdl!

Meet we the medicin of the sickly weal:

And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,

To drow the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.

Make we our march towards Birnam. [Ex. muttering-

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter MACBETH, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all;

Tell Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,
I cannot taunt with fear. What's the boy Malcolm?
Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know
All mortal consequents pronounce'd me thus:

Fear not, Macbeth; no man, that's born of woman,
Shall e'er have power on thee. Then fly, false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures!

The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
Shall never sagg with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd loon.
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Goe, Geese, villain?

Serv. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,

Thou little-bred boy. What soldiers, patch?

Death of the soul! then dress his shining shine
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whiey-face?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence—Seyton!—I am sick at
When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push [heart,
Will cheer me ever, or dissent me now.
I have hev'd long enough: my way of life
Is fall'n into the sea, the yellow leaf:

And that which should accompany old age,
ACT V.—SCENE V.

As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses not loud, but deep, month honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not.
Seyton! ——

Enter Seyton.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What news more? Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.

Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd. Give me my armour. Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.

Send out more horses, skirr the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine armour,—
How does your patient, doctor?

Doc. Not so sick, my lord,

As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that:

Caust thou not minister to a mind diseas'd?
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain;
And, with some sweet oblivious antidote,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff,
Which weighs upon the heart?

Doc. Therein the patient

Must minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs, I'll none of it.—

Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff.

Seyton, send out.—Doctor, the thanes fly from me:—
Come, sir, despatch:—If thou could'st, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo.
That should applaud again.—Pull off, I say,—What rubb'dh, senna, or what purgative drug, [them;]
Would scour these English hence? Hearest thou

Doc. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation

Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.

I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Tell Birnam wood to come to Dunsinane.

[Exit. Doc. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear,

Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

Country near Dunsinane: A Wood in view.

Enter, with drums and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, and his Son, Macduff, Menteith, Cathness, Angus, Lenox, Rossie, and Soldiers, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope, the days are near at hand,
That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siuw. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier bear him down a bough,
And beat before him; thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host, and make discovery

Err in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Siuw. We learn no other, but the confidant tyrant

Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before't.

Mal. Tis his main hope:

For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures

Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Siuw. The time approaches,

That will with due decision make us know

What we shall say we have, and what we owe.

Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate;

But certain issue strokes must arbitrate:

Towards which, advance the war. [Exeunt, marching.

SCENE V.—Dunsinane. Within the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, Macbeth, Seyton, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still. They come:—Our castle's strength
Will laugh a sneer to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine, and the ague, eat them up;

Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them careful, heard to hear,
And beat them backward home. What is that noise?

[Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cou'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
As life were in't: I have supp'd full with horrors;
Dreadess, familiar to my slanting thoughts,
Came o'er me. When was that cry?—

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;

There would have been a time for such a word.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,

To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,

And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing. ——

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,

I shall report that which I say I saw,

But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,

The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar, and slave! [Striking him.

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if 't be not so;

Within this three mile may you see it coming;

I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speakest false,

Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,

Till I consume thee, if thy speech be sooth,

I care not if thou dost for me as much,—

I pull in resolution; and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,

That lies like truth: Fear not, till Birnam wood

Do come to Dunsinane; — and now a wood

Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out!—

If this, which he avouches, does appear,

There is not lying hence, nor tarrying here.

I 'gin to be a-weigh of the sun,

And wish the e-tate o'the world were now undone.—

Ring the alarum bell: — Blow wind! come, wrath! —

At least we'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt.
SCENE VI.—The same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, Malcolm, old Siward, Macduff, &c. and their Army, with boughs.

Mal. Now, near enough; your heavy screens throw down
And shew like those you are:—You, worthy uncle, Shall with my cousin, your right-noble son, Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we, Shall take upon us what else remains to do, According to our order.

Swe. Fare you well. —
Do we but find the tyrant’s power to night, Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight. [breath.

Mac. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. [Exit. Alarums continued.

SCENE VII.—The same. Another part of the Plain.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly. But, bear-like, I must fight the course.—What’s he? That was not born of woman! Such a one Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young Siward.

Yo. Swe. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou’lt be afraid to hear it. Yo. Swe. No; though thou call’st thyself a hotter Than any is in hell. [name

Macb. My name’s Macbeth. Yo. Swe. The devil himself could not pronounce a More hateful to mine ear.

[tut We. Macb. No, nor more fearful. Yo. Swe. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword I’ll prove the lie thou speakest.

[They fight. Macb. Young Siward is slain.

Macb. Thou wast born of woman. —
But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn.
Brandish’d by man that’s of a woman born. [Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduff.

Macb. That way the noise is: Tyrant, shewthy face: If thou be’st slain, and with no stroke of mine, My wife and children’s ghosts will haunt me still. I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms Are bir’d to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth, Or else my sword, with an unbatter’d edge, I theatre again unheed. There thou shouldst be; By this great clatter, one of greatest note Seems bruited. Let me find him, fortune! And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarum. Enter Malcolm and old Siward.

Siw. This way, my lord; the castle’s gently render’d: The tyrant’s people on both sides do fight: The noble thames do bravely in the war; The day almost itself professes yours, And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes That strike beside us. [Exeunt. Alarum. Enter Malcolm.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die On mine own sword? I wish I see lives, the gashes Do better upon them.

Re-enter Macduff.

Macb. Turn, hell-hound, turn. Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee: But get thee back, my soul is too much charg’d With blood of thine already.

Macb. I have no words, My voice is in my sword; thou bloodier villain Than terms can give thee out! [They fight

Mal. Thou lostest labour As easy may’st thou the intrenched air With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed: Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests; I bear a charmed life which must not yield To one of woman born.

Macb. Despair thy charm; And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv’d, Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother’s womb Untimely ripp’d.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so. For it hath cow’d my better part of man! And be these juggling fiends no more believ’d, That pallor with us in a double sense: That keep the word of promise to our ear, And break it to our hope.—I’ll not fight with thee. Macb. Then yield thee, coward, And live to be the show and gaze o’ the time. We’ll have thee, as our rarer monsters are, Painted upon a pole; and underwrit, Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I’ll not yield, To kiss the ground before young Malcolm’s feet, And to be baited with the rabble’s curse. Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsmaine, And then oppos’d, being of no woman born, Yet I will try the last: Before my body I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff; And damned be him that first cries, Halt, enough. [Exit, fighting.

Mal. I would, the friends we miss were safe arriv’d. Swe. Some must go off; and yet, by these I see, So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son. Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier’s debt: He only liv’d but till he was a man; The which no sooner had his powers confir’d In the unshrinking station where he fought, But like a man he died. Swe. Then is he dead! Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your case of Must not be measured by his worth, but for then It hath no end. Swe. Had he his hurts before? Rosse. Ay, on the front. Swe. Why, then, God’s soldier be he! Had I as many sons as I have hairs, I would not wish them to a fairer death: And so his knoll’d be. Mal. He’s worth more sorrow, And that I’ll spend for him. Swe. He’s worth no more. They say, he parted well, and paid his score: So, God be with him! —Here comes newer comfort. Re-enter Macbeth, with Macbeth’s head on a pole.

Mact. Hail, king! for so thou art: Behold, where The usurper’s cursed head: the time is free: [stands I see thee compass’d with thy kingdom’s pearl, That speak my salvation in their minds; Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,— Hail, king of Scotland! All. King of Scotland, hail! [Flourish. Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of time,
ACT V.—SCENE VII.

Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thrones and kinsmen,
Henceforth be ears, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,—
As callying home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fill the spaces of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers

This play is deservedly celebrated for the propriety of its fiction, and solemnity, grandeur, and variety of its action; but it is not now discriminated by character; the events are too great to admit the influence of particular dispositions, and the course of the action necessarily determines the conduct of the scenery. The danger of ambition is well described; and I know not whether it may not be said, in defence of some parts which now seem improbabe, that, in Shakespeare's time, it was necessary to warre credulity against vain and illusive predictions.

The passages are directed to their true ends. Lady Macbeth is merely detested; and though the courage of Macbeth precedes some esteem, yet every reader respects at his fall—

SCENE.—sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

Of this dead butcher, and his head-like queen:
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life;—Thi, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crow'd at Scene.

ACT I.

SCENE I.

Northampton.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, Queen ELINOR, PEMBROKE, ESSEX,
SALISBURY, and others, with CHATILLON.

KING JOHN. Now say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France,
In my behaviour, to the majesty,
The borrow'd majesty of England here.

El. A strange beginning;—borrow'd majesty!

KING JOHN. Silence, good mother, for the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf
Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son,
Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim;
To this fair island, and the territories
To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine:
Destiny thee to lay aside the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles;
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
Thy nephew and right royal sovereign.

KING JOHN. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war,
To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld. [blood,

KING JOHN. Here have we war for war, and blood for Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,
The furthest limit of my embassy.

KING JOHN. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:
Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;
For ere thou canst report I will be there,
Thou and all soldiers shall hear:
So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sudden presage of your own decay,—
An honourable conduct let him have:—
KING JOHN.

Pembroke, look to't; Farewell, Chaillou.

[King Chaillou and Pembroke.

Eli. What now, my son! have I not ever said, how that ambitious Constance would not cease, Till she had kindled France, and all the world, Upon the right and party of her son? This might have been prevented, and made whole, With very easy arguments of love; Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful bloody spine arbitrato.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right, for us.

Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your Or else it must go wrong with you, and me: [right; So much my conscience whispers in your ear; Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy, Come from the country to be judged by you, That ever I heard: Shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach. [Exit Sheriff. Our officers, and our pairs, shall pay

Re-enter Sheriff, with Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge. — What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman, Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son, As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge; A soldier, by the honour-giving hand Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field. K. John. What hast thou done?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge. K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir? You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king, That is well known: and, as I think, one father: But, for the certain knowledge of that truth, I put you o'er to heaven, and to my mother; Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Oft on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy And wound her honour with this difference. [mother, Basts. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it; That is my brother's plea, and none of mine: The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out At least from fair five hundred pound a-year: Heaven's given me! That in this land I am! [Six pounds, K. John. A good blunt fellow — What, being younger Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance? [born, Bast. I know not why, except to get the land. But once he slander'd me withbastardy: But who 'e be as true begot, or no, That still I lay upon my mother's head; But, that I am as well begot, my liege; [Fair full the bones that took the pains for me! Compare our faces, and be judge yourself. If old sir Robert did beget us both, And were our father, and this son like him; — O old sir Robert, father, on my knee I give heaven thanks, it was not like to thee. K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us Eli. He's true: but who hath the duke's face, [here! The accent of his tongue affecteth him. Do you not read some tokens of my son In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts. And finds them perfect Richard. — Sirrah, speak, What doth move you to claim your brother's land? Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father; With one half face we have all my land: A half-faced great five hundred pound a-year! Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd, Your brother did employ my father much; —Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land: Your rule must he, how he employ'd my mother. Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy. To Germany, there, with the emperor, To treat of high affairs touching that time: The advantage of his absence took the king, And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's; Where how he did prevail, I shame to speak; But truth it was, that he increased two of us and shores between my father and my mother has; (As I have heard my father speak himself,) When this same lusty gentleman was got, Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd His lands to me; and took it, on his death, That this, my mother's son, was none of his; And, if he were, he came into the world Full fourteen weeks before the course of time. Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine, My father's land, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate; Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him: And, if she did play false, the fault was her's; Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands That marry wives. Tell me how he did employ the heir, Who, as you say, took pairs to get this son, Had of your father claim'd this son for his? In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world; In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother, My brother might not claim him; nor your father, not being none of his, refuse him: This concludes,— My mother's son did get the father's heir; Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force, To dispossess that child which is not his? Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir, Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether haste's thou rather,—be he a Faulcon And like thy brothers to enjoy this land; [bridge, Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion, Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, as if my brother had my shape, And I had his, sir Robert his, like him; And if my legs were two such riding-roses, My arms such eel-skins stuff'd: my face so thin, That in a mirror I durst not look at her; Least men should say, Look, where there are farthings goes! And, to his shape, were heir to all this land. 'Would I might never stir from off this place, I'd give it every foot to have this face; I would not be Sir Nob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well; Wilt thou forsake thy fortunes, Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me! I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance. Your face hath got five hundred pounds a-year; Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.— Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither. Bast. Our country manners give our better's way. K. John. What is thy name? Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun; Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bear'st:

Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great; Arise, sir Richard, and Plantagenet. [hand Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your My father gave me hopes; yet I have this land: —Now blessed be the hour, by night or day, When I was got, sir Robert was away.
ACT II.—SCENE I.

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—
I am thy grandame, Richard: call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth: What something about, a little from the right, [though! In at the window, or else o'er the hatch; Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night; And have his make, however men do catch
Near or far off, well won is still well shot ; And I am I, how'er I was begot. [sire,
K. Jaha. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thyde—
A landlord knight makes thee a landed squire.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed For France, for France: for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu; Good fortune come to thee! For thou wast got i the way of honesty.

[Exit all but the Bastard.

A foot of honour better than I was;
But many a foot of land the worse.

Well, now can I make up Jean a lady—
Good day, sir Richard.—I, God-a-sir, fellow—
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honour doth forget men's names; "Tis too respective, and too sociable,
For your conversion. Now your traveller,—
He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess;
And when my knighthood stomach is stuffed,'—
What would the devil, ha! I wuske my bread, and be your horse.
My picked man of countries:—My dear sir, (Thus, leaning on my elbow, I begin,) I shall betheew you—That is question now;
And then comes answer like an ABC-book:—
O, sir, says answer, at your best command; At your employment; at your service, sir—
No, sir, says question, I want not, at yours:
And so, ere answer knows what question would, (Saving in dialogue of compliment; And talking of the Alps and Apennines, The Pyrenean, and the river Po,)
It draws toward supper in conclusion so.
But this is worshipful society.
And fits the mounting spirit, like myself:—
For he is but a bastard to the time,
Who doth not smack of observation; (And so am I, whether I smack, or no ;)
And not alone in habit and device, Exterior form, outward accoutrement; But from the inward motion to deliver Some sweet, sweet pangs for the heart's tooth.
Which, though I will not practise to deceive, Yet to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.—
But who comes in such haste, in riding robes? What woman-post is this? hath she no husband, That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge, and James Gurney.

O me! it is my mother:—How now, good lady? What brings you here to court so hastily!—
Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother! where is That holds in chase mine honour up and down? the!
Bast. My brother Robert's old sir Robert's son! Colbran the giant, that same mighty man! Is it sir Robert's son, that you seek so?
Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unmerended boy, Sir Robert's son: Why scorn'st thou at sir Robert? He is sir Robert's son; and so art thou.
Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile? Gurn. Good leave, good Philip.

[Exeunt James and Gurney.

There's toys abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.

Madam, I was not old sir Robert's son;
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me Upon Good-friday, and ne'er broke his fast: Sir Robert could do well;— Marry (to confess!) Could he get me! Sir Robert could not do it;— We know his handy work—Therefore, good mother, To whom am I beholden for these limbs? Sir Robert never holp to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too, That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honour! What means this scorn, thou most uncounted knave?
Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basillfice-like: What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.

Bast. Mother, I am not sir Robert's son;
I have disclaim'd sir Robert, and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone: Then, good my mother, let me know my father; Some proper man, I hope; Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge! Bast. As faithfully as deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard, Cour de-lion was thy father: By long and vehement suit I was seduced To make room for him in my husband's bed:— Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge! Thou art the issue of my dear offence, Which was so strongly urg'd, past my defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again, Match'd with my brother, I would sue at Richard's hand.
Some sins do bear their privilege on earth, And so doth yours: your fault was not your folly: Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,— Subjected tribute to commanding love,— Against whose fury and unmatched force The aweless lion could not wage the fight, Nor with his pointed, quilted heart, thrust Richard's hand.
He, that performe rob's lions of their hearts, May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother, With all my heart I thank thee for my father! Who lives and dares but say, thou didst't not well When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell. Come lady, I will shew thee in my kin;— And they shall say, when Richard me begot, If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin: Who says it was, he lies; I say, 'twas not. [Exit.
KING JOHN.

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealouss kiss, As seal to this indclaration of my love; That to my home I will no more return, Till Augiers, and the right thou hast in France, Together with that pale, that white-face'd shore, Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides, And coops from other lands her islanders, Even till that England, hagg'd in with the main, That water-swallowed bulwark, still secure And confidant from foreign purposes, Even till that utmost corner of the west Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy, Will I not think of home, but follow arms. ConSt. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks, Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength, To make a more requital to your love.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their In such a just and charitable war. [swords
K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be Against the brous of this resisting town.-- [bent Call for our chiefest men of discipline, To call the plotts of best advantages;-- We'll lay before this town our royal bones, With all that market place in Frenchmen's blood, But we will make it subject to this king. ConSt. Stay for an answer to your embassy, Lost annu'd'v's you stain your swords with blood: My lord Châtillon may from England bring That right in peace, which here we urge in war; And then we shall repent each drop of blood, That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Châtillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—o, upon thy wish, Our messenger Châtillon is arriv'd.-- What England says, say brieily, gentle lord, We cooly pause for thee; Châtillon, speak. Chât. Then turn your forces from this Julius siege, And stir them up against a mightier task. England, impatient of your just demands, Haths put himself in arms; the adverse winds, Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time To land his legions all as soon as 1: His marches are expedient to this town, His forces strong, his soldiers confidant. With him along is come the mother-queen, An Aig, stirring him to blood and strife: With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain: With them a bastard of the king deceased: And all the unsettled humours of the land,— Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntaries, With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens,— Have sold their fortunes at their native homes, Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs, To make a hazard of new fortunes here. In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits, Than now the English bottoms have wait o'er, Did never float upon the swelling tide, To do offence and scathe in Christendom. The interruption of their churlish drums [Drums beat, Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand, To parley, or to fight; therefore, prepare. K. Phi. I know not how to look forward this expedition! Aust. By how much unseen, by so much We must awake endeavours for defence; For courage mounteth with occasion: Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter King John, Elsinor, Blanche, the Bastard, Pembroke, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France; if France in peace Our just and lineal entrance to our own! [permis...
Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?

K. John. My life as soon:—I do defy thee, France.

Arthur, of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand; and,
Out of my dear love, I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy.

Ed. Come to thy grandam, child.

Cont. Do, child, go to it grandam, child;
Give grandam, kingdom, and it grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arthur. Good my mother, peace! I would,
That I were low laid in my grave:
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.

Ed. His mother shoals him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Cont. Now shame upon you, who she doth, or no!
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shame.
Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee:
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bribe'd
To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Ed. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth! Call not me slanderer; thou, and thine, usurp
The dominations, royalties, and rights,
Of this oppressed boy, the eldest son of this
Infant unfortunate in nothing but in thee;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Remov'd from thy sin conceiving womb.

K. John. Bellam, have done.

Cont. His father has but this to say,—
That he's not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this removed issue, plague'd for her,
And with her plague, her sin; his injury
Her injury,—the beadle to her sin;
All punishment in this person of this child,
And all for her; A plague upon her!

Ed. Thou unadvis'd scold, I can produce
A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Cont. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;
A woman's will; a rank'd grandam's will!

K. Phi. Peace, lady, pause, or be more temperate:
It ill beseemeth this presence, to cry aid
To these ill-inclinations.
Some trumpet summons hither to the walls
These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

TrumpeTs sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.

1 Cit. Who is it, that hath warn'd us to the walls?

K. Phi. 'Tis France for England.

K. John. England, for itself:
You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects.—

K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's sub-
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle. [j ects,]

K. John. For our advantage:—Therefore, hear us
These flags of France, that are advanced here [first—
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endagement:
The cannons have their bowels full of wrath;
And ready mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Colerful and of the worst provoking gates;
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By the compulsory of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime

Had been dishabit'd, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of us, your lawful king:—
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscrath'd your city's threaten'd decks,—
Behold, the French, amaz'd, vouchsafe a parle:
And now, instead of bullets wrap'd in fire,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke,
To make a falshess error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king: whose labours spirits,
Forewarned in this action of swift speed,
Craue harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us
Lo, in this right hand, whose protection [both.
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet;
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys:
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town;
Being no further enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed
Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes it; namely, this young prince
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up;
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Again on the invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And, with a blessed and unex't'd retire,
With uncheck'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.
But if you fondly pass our proff'red offer,
Tis not the roundure of your old-fa'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war;
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were barbour'd in their rude circumfrence.
Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challenge' d it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stand in blood to our enemies?

1 Cit. In brief, we the king of England's sub-
For him, and in his right, we hold this town. [j ects;
K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

1 Cit. That can we not: but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we rama'd up our gates against the world.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the
And, if not that, I bring you witnesses, [king?
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's brea,— Bast. Bastards, and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many, and as well-born blood as those,
Bast. Some bastards too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face, to contradict his claim.

1 Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthi'est,
We, for the worthi'est, hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those souls,
That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evenning fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's life.
Bast. St. George,—that swing'd the dragon, and e'er
Sits on his horseback at mine hostess' door, [since,
Teach us some fence!—Sirrah, were I at home,
At your den, sirrah, [to Austria.] with your lioness, Y
I'd set an ox-head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.

Aust. O, tremble; for you bear the lion roar.
K. John. Up higher to the plain; where we'll set
In best appointment, all our regiments.

[Burst forth,
Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field,
K. Phi. It shall be so;—[to Lewis.] and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand,—God, and our right!

[Execut.

SCENE II.—The same.
Abras and Excursions; then a Retreat.
Enter a French Herald, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, duke of Bretagne, in;
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground;
Many a widow's husband groveling lies,
Coldly embracing the discolor'd earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and yours.
Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells;
King John, your king and England's, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day!
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Litter return all guilt with Frenchmen's blood;
There stuck no plague in any English crest,
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd forth;
And, like a jolly troop of huntmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purple hands,
Ditto in the dying slaughter of their foes:
Open your gates, and give the victors way.

Ccit. Herals, from off our towers we might behold,
From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censur'd;
[blows;
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd.
Strength match'd with strength, and power confront'd
Both are alike; and both alike we like.
[power;
One must prove greatest: while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither; yet for both.

Enter, at one side, King John, with his power;
Elinor, Blanch, and the Bastard; at the other,
King Philip, Lewis, Austria, and Forces.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast
Say, shall the current of our right run on?
[away?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'erswell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores;
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.

A. Phi. England, thou hast not sav'd one drop
Of this hot trial, more than we of France;
[blood,
Rather, lost more: And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlook's,—
Before we will lay down our just borne arms,
We'll put thee down, against whom these arms we bear,
Or add a royal number to the dead;
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire!
O, now doth death line his dead chaps with steel;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs;
And now he feasts, moulthng the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings.—
Why stand these royal fronds amazed thus?
Cry, havoc, kings! back to the stained field,
You equal panters, fiery-kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's presence; till in, blows, blood, and death!
K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?
K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?

1 Cit. The king of England, when we know the king.
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear possession of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.

1 Cit. A greater power than we, denies all this;
And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-barr'd gates:
King'd of our fears; until our fears, resolved,
By some certain king purg'd and depos'd.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings;
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presences be rul'd by me;
Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while, and both conjointly bend
The greatest deeds of malice on this town.
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon charged to the mouths:
Till their soul fearing clamours have brawled down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
So long as they remain united, strength,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Face to face, and bloody point to point:
Then, in a moment, fortune shall call forth
Out of one side her happy minion;
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
Now may this wild counsel, mightiest states?
Smack it not something of the policy?
K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well;—France, shall we kneel our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?

Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king,—
Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish town,—
Tow now the month of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against those saucy walls:
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why, then defy each other: and, pell-mell,
Make work upon ourselves, for heaven, or hell.
K. Phi. Let it be so;—Say, where will you assault?
K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.

Aust. I from the north.
K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drif't of bullets on this town.

Bast. O prudent discipline! from north to south;
Austria and France shoot to each other's mouth:

[Aside.
I'll stir them to it:—Come, away, away!
[stay,
1 Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe a while to
And I shall shew you peace, and fair-faced league;
Win you this city without stroke or wound;
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds;
That here come sacrifices for the field:
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.
K. John. Speak on, with favour; we are bent to hear.
1 Ctt. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Blanche, is near to England; Look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid:
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanche?
If jealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanche?
If love ambitions sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanche?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete, O say, he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not, that she is not he;
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such a she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.
O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in:
And two such streams can no one but made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them,
This union shall do more than battery can,
To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match,
With swifter spleen than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you passage, but without this match,
The sea enrag'd is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion; no, not Death himself
In mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.
Bast.
Here's a stay,
That shakes the rotten carcass of old Death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas;
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs!
What cannoner begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon, fire, and smoke, and bounce;
How; and the last hereafter, this matchyard:
Our ears are cudgeled; not a word of his,
But buffets better than a fist of France:
Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father, dad.
Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie
Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown,
That you green boy shall have no son to ripe
The bloom that0 promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France;
Mark, how they whisper; urge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition:
Last zeal, now melted, by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.
1 Ctt. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?
K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward
To speak unto this city: What say you?
K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely
Can in this book of beauty read, I love,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou, and fair Tournai, Maine, Poictiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea
(Except this city now by us besieg'd,)
Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed; and make her rich
In titles, honours, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world.
K. Phi. What say'st thou, hoy? look in the lady's Lev. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find [face.
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The shadow of myself form'd in her eye;
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow:
I do protest, I never lov'd myself,
Till now inform'd I beheld myself,
Drawn in the flatterer of her eye.
[Whispers with Blanche.
Bast. Drawn in the flatterer of her eye!—
Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow!—
And quarter'd in her heart! — he doth espy
Himself Jove's traitor: This is pity now,
That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there should
In such a love, so vile a lust as he.
[be,
Blanche. My uncle's will, in this respect, is mine.
If he see aught in you, that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
Will with ease translate to your fall;
Or, if you will, (to speak more properly,)
I will enforce it easily to my love.
Further I will not flatter you, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this,—that nothing do I see in you, (Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your
That I can find, should not put any hate.
[judge,
K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece!
Blanche. That she is bound in honour still to do
What you in wisdom shall vouchsafe to say.
K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady.
Lev. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love;
For I do love her most unequally.
K. John. Then do I give Voltiessus, Tournai,
Poictiers, and Anjou, these five provinces, [Maine,
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin,—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Conquer the son and daughter of thy hand.
K. Phi. It likes us well; — Young princes close your hands.
Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well ass'd,
That I did so, when I was first ass'd.
K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at saint Mary's chapel, presently,
The rites of marriage shall be solemnized;
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?—
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much:
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.
Lev. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent
K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have
Will give her sadness very little cure.—
[made,
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? in her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own vantage.
K. John. We will heal up all,
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town
We'll make him lord of. — Call the lady Constance;
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity; — I trust we shall
Y 2
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er his bounds?
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But that one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true, as, I believe, thou thinkst them false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Cost. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
Teach thee this sorrow how to make me die;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall, and die.---
Lewis marry Blanch! O, boy, then where art thou?
France friend with England! what becomes of me?—
Fellow, be gone! I cannot brook thy sight;
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done!

Cost. Which harm within so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Cost. If thou, that bid'st me be content, were grim,
Ugly, and slanderous to thy mother's womb,
Full of unpleasing blots, and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crotch'd, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content;
For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy!
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great;
Of nature's gifts thou may'st have many boast,
And with the half-blow'n rose: but fortune, O!
She is as quick, chang'd, and won a content;
She adulterates hourly with this uncle John,
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is a bawd to fortune, and king John;
That stropmet fortune, that usurping John:—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France i' the world?
Embracing him with words; or get thee gone,
And leave these wanes alone, which I alone,
Am bound to underbear.

Sal. Pardon me, madam,
I may not go without you to the kings.

Cost. Thou mayst, thou shall, I will not go with
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud:
For grief is proud, and makes his own stout;
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble, for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit;
Here is my throne, bids kingdom come to bow to it.

She throws herself on the ground.

Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis, Blanch,
Elnor, bastard, Austria, and Attendants.

K. Phi. This true, fair daughter; and this blessed Ever in France shall be kept festival:—

[day;
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist;
Turned with spice, nor dyed by the spectre's eye,
The meagre cloudy earth to glittering gold;
The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Never shall see it but a holyday.

Cost. A wicked day, and not a holyday!—[Rising,
What hath this day sav'd? what hath it done?
That it in golden letters should be set,
Among the high titles, in the calendar?

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Cost. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!
False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch? and Blanch those pro-
It is not so; thou hast misspeake, misheard; [violces
Be well advis'd, tell me thy tale!
It cannot be; thou dost but say, 'tis so:
I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man,
I have a king's oath to the contrary,
Thou shalt be punish'd for this frighting me,
For I am sick, and out of breath,
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,
With my veil'd spirits I cannot take a trace,
But they will quake and tremble all this day,
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Nay, neither, turn this day out of the week; This day of shame, oppression, perfidy: Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day, lest that their hopes predigiously of this day: But on this day, let seamen fear no wreck; No bargains break, that are not this day made: This day, all things begun come to ill end: Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change! K. Phi. By heaven, lady, thou shall have no cause To curse the fair proceedings of this day: Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty? Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit, Resembling majesty: which, being touch'd, and tried, Proves valueless: You are forsworn, forsworn; You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood, But now in arms, you strengthen it with yours: The grappling vigour and rough frown of war, Is cold in amity and painted peace, And our oppression hath made up this league:— Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjured kings! A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens! Let not the hours of this ungodly day Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset, Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings! Hear me, O, hear me! Aust. Lady Constance, peace. Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war. O Lymoges! O Austria! thou dost shame That bloody spoil: Thou slave, thou wretch, thou Thou'lt be valiant, great in villany! [coward; Thou art even strong, too strong a side! Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight But when her handsome ladyship is by To teach thee safety! thou art perjur'd too, And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou, A ramping fool: to brag and stamp, and swear, Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave, Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side? Been sworn my soldier! bidding me depend Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength! And dost thou now fall over to my foes? Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame, And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs. Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me! But hang and hang a calf's-skin on recreant limbs, Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life. Const. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs. K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter Pandulph. K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope. Pand. Hail, you appointed deputies of heaven! To thee, king John, my holy errand is. I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal, And from pope Innocent the legate here, Do, in his name, religiously demand, Why thou against the church, our holy mother, So wilfully dost spurn; and, force perforce, Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see? This, in our fore-said holy father's name, Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee. K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories, Can task the free breath of a sacred king! Thou cannot, cardinal, devise a name So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous, To charge me to an answer, as the pope's Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England, Add thus much more.—That no Italian priest Shall title or toll in our dominions: But as we under heaven are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold, Without the assistance of a mortal hand: So tell the pope; all reverence set apart, To him, and his usur'd authority. K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this. K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, [dom, Dreading the curse that money may buy out: And, by the merit of vile gold, gross, dust, Purchase corrupted pardon of a man, Who, in that safe, sells pardons from himself; Though you, and all the rest, so grossly lied, This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish; Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose Against the pope, and count his friends my foes. Pand. Then by the lawful power that I have, Thou shalt stand curs'd, and excommunicate: And blessed shall be he, that doth revolt From his allegiance to an heretic; And meritorious shall that hand be call'd, Canoniz'd, and worship'd as a saint, That takes away by any secret course Thy hateful life. Const. O, let him, O, lawful let it be, That I have room with Rome to curse awhile! Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen, To my keen curses: for, without my wrong, There is no tongue hath power to curse him right. Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse. Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right, Let it be lawful, that he that wrongs law Cannot give my child his kingdom here; For, he, that holds his kingdom, holds the law: Wherefore, since law itself is perfect wrong, How can the law forbid my tongue to curse? Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse, Let go the hand of that arch-heretic; And raise the power of France upon his head, Unless he do submit himself to Rome. [hand. Eti. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy Const. Look to that, devil! lest that France repent, And, by disjoining hands, he'll lose a soul. Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal. Best. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs. Aust. Tell, tell, ruffian, I must pocket these wrongs, Because—

Bust. Your breeches best may carry them. K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal? Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal? Lew. Bethink you, father; for the difference Is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome, Or the light loss of England for a friend: Forego the easier. Blanch. That's the curse of Rome. Const. O Lewis, stand fast; the devil tempts thee In likeness of a new untrimmed bride. [here, Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her But from her need. [faith, Const. O, if thou grant my need, Which only lives but by the death of faith, That need must needs infer this principle, That faith would live again by death of need; O, then, tread down my need, and faith mount up, Keep my need up, and faith is troubled down. K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this. Const. O, be removed from him, and answer well Aust. Do so, king Philip; hang no more in doubt. Best. I hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweetest K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say. Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee If thou stand excommunicate, and curs'd: [more,
K. Phi. Good revered father, make my person
And tell me, how you would bestow yourself. [yours,
This royal hand and mine are newly knit:
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and lock'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vows:
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before,
— No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royal bargain up of peace—
High heaven is witness, thou and I and other-stain'd
With slaughter's pencil; where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings:
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So newly joined in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret!
Play fast and loose with faith! so jest with heaven,
Marshall such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm;
Unswear faith sworn; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O holy sir,
My revered father, let it be so:
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some such gentle order; then we shall be bless'd
To do your pleasure, and continue friends.
Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.
Therefore, to arms, be champion of our church!
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou art a serpent by the tongue,
A cased lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Thou keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.
K. Phi. I may disjoint my hand, but not my faith.
Pand. So makest thou faith an enemy to faith;
And, like a civil war, set'st oath to oath.
Thy tongue against thy tongue.
First made to heaven, first to be to heaven perform'd;
That is, to be the champion of our church!
What since thou swor'st, is sworn against thyself,
And may not be performed by thyself:
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is not amiss when it is truly done;
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it
The better act of purposes misbook
Is, to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood cures; as fire cools fire,
Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd,
It is religion, that doth make vows keep'd;
But thou hast sworn against religion;
By what thou swear'st, against the thing thou swear'st;
And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath: The truth thou art unsure
To swear, swear only not to be forsworn;
Else what a mockery should it be to swear!
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself:
And better conquest never canst thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in.
If thou vouchsafe them: but, if not, then know,
The peril of our curses light on thee;

So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But, in despair, die under their black weight.
Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!
Bast. Will not be?
Wilt not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of thine?
Leu. Father, to arms!
Blanch. Upon thy wedding day!
Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud curish drums,—
Clamours of hell,—be measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me!—ah, alack, how new
Is husband in my mother's eye—e'en for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.
Const. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Daphne, alter not the doom
For thought by heaven,
Blanch. Now shall I see thy love; What motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
Const. That which upholds him that thee upholds,
His honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!
Leu. I muse, your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do poll you on.
France. I will demonstrate a curse upon him.
K. Phi. Thou shalt not need—England, I'll fall from Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty! [thee.
Edi. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!
K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.
Bast. Old time the clock setter, that bald sexton
Is it as he will! we well then, France shall rue.
[Time.
Blanch. France, thou shalt rue. Is't s' o'ercast with blood: Fair day,
Which is the side that I must go withal? [aids me
I am with both: each army hath a hand;
And, in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou may'st win,
Uncle, I needs must pray that thou may'st lose;
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive.
Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose;
Assured loss, before the match be play'd.
Leu. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies.
Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.
K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.—
[Exit Bastard.
France. I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
A rage, whose heat hath this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and poorest val'd blood, of France.
K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.
K. John. No more than he that threatens.—To arms let's lie! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums; Excursions. Enter the Bastard, with Austria's head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wonderful
Some airy devil hovers in the sky, [hot:
And pours down mischief. Austria's head, lie there;
While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy;—Philip, make up;
ACT III.—SCENE IV.

My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.

Hub. My lord, I rescu’d her;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not:
But on, my liege; for very little pains
Will bring this labour to an happy end. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same.

Aiturums: Excursions; Retreat. Enter KING JOHN,
ELINOR, ARTHUR, the Bastard, HUBERT, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind. [To ELINOR.

So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad:
[To ARTHUR.

Thy grandam loves thee; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

K. John. If this, will make my mother die with grief.

ARTH. O, this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, [to the Bastard.] away for England; haste before:
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbot; imprisonment’d angels
Set thou at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon:
Use their commission in his former force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy,)
For your fair safety; so I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.

K. John. Come hither, little kinsman; bark, a word.
[She takes ARTHUR aside.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. Omy gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh
There is a soul, counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love:
And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—
But I will fit it with some better time.

By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed
To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet; but thou shalt have: and creep time ne’er so slow,
Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say.—But let it go:
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gawds,
To give me audience.—If the midnight bell
Did with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound one unto the drowsy race of night;
If this same were a church-yard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;
Or if that sad spirit, melancholy,
Had bak’d thy blood, and made it heavy, thick;
(Which, else, runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men’s eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion hateful to my purposes;)
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without those ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,
Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words;
Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But ah, I will not.—Yet I love thee well;
And, by thy troth, I think, thou lov’st me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,
By heaven, I’d do’t.

K. John. Do not I know, thou wouldst?

Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On yon young boy; I’ll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way;
And, whereas’er this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me: Dust thou understand me?
 Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I will keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.

Hub. My lord?

Hub. He shall not live.

I could be merry now: Hubert, I love thee.
Well, I’ll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember.—Madam, fare you well:
I’ll send those powers o’er to your majesty.

Eli. My blessing go with thee!

K. John. For England, cousin, go:
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. The French King’s Tent.

Enter KING PHILIP, LEWIS, RANDELL, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter’d and disjoin’d from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Arthur ta’en prisoner? divers dear friends slain:
And bloody England into England gone,
O’erbearing interruption, spite of France?

Leu. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice dispos’d,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: Who hath read, or heard,
Of any kindred action like o this?

K. Phi. Well could I hear that England had this
So we could find some pattern of our shame. [praise,

Enter Constance.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath:—
I pr’ythee, lady, go away with me.

Con. Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace!
K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Con. Con. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death.—O amiable lovely death!
Thou odioriferous stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones;
And put my eye-balls in thy vauly brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household worms;
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come grin on me; and I will think thou smil’st,
And bow thee as thy wife! Misery’s love,
O, come to me!

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace.

Con. Con. No, no I will not, having breath to cry:—
O, that my tongue were in the thunder’s mouth!
Then with a passion would I shake the world;
KING JOHN.

And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which scorns a modern invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Cons. Thou art not holy to belibe me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear, is mine
My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad:—I would to heaven I were!
For then, 'tis like I should forget myself:
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!—
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And I shall be his, and my shame shall be none:
For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
If I were mad, I should forget my son;
Or madly think, a babe of clouts were he:
I am not mad: too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses: O, what love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends
Do glew themselves in sociable grief:
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sinking together in calamity.

Cons. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Cons. Yes, that I will; And wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds; and cried aloud,
O that these hands could so redeem my son,
As they have given these hairs their liberty!

K. Phi. I see my dearest life in you:
And will again commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,
That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To have that child but yesterday suspend,
There was not such a vicious creature born,
But now will cancel sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost;
As dun and meagre as an ague's fit;
And so he'll die; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven
I shall not know him: therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Cons. He talks to me, that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Cons. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
Put on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious creature,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.

Fear you well: had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort then you do.—
I will not keep this form upon my head,
"Tearing off her head-dress.
When there is such disorder in my wit,
O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!
My widow-comfort, and my sore'ss' cure! [Exit.

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.

Lew. There's nothing in this world, can make me
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;
And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's taste,
That it yields naught, but shame, and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest: evil, that take leave,
On their departure most of all shew evil.
What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly, you had.

No, no: when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye.
'Tis true, to think how much you have lost
In which this he accounts so clearly won;
Are not you grieved, that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lew. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.
Now hear me speak, with a prophetic spirit;
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall fix each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and, therefore, mark.
John hath seized Arthur; and it cannot be,
That, while warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misprac'd John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest:
A scepter, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must he be heinously maintained by a gain'd.
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of to wipe hold to stay him up:
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

Pand. You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May be the joy of all the world that saw you.

Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green are you, and fresh in this old world!
John lays your plots; the times conspire with you:
For he, that steeps his safety in true blood,
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrue.
This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up the zeal;
That none so small advantage shall step forth,
To check his reign, but they will cherish it;
No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scope of nature, no destimer'd day,
No common wind, no customed event,
but they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, presages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lew. May be, he will not touch young Arthur's life,
But hold himself safe in his prisonment.

Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that ows he dies; and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him.
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;
And pick strong matter of revolt, and wrath,
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot;
And, O, what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have nam'd!—The bastard Faulconbridge
Of all his English, and freeze up the zeal;
Offending charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side;
Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin,
Go with me to the king: 'Tis wonderful,
What may be wrought out of their discontent;
Now that their souls are topfull of offences,
ARTHUR: O, save me. Hubert, save me!

SET IV. SC. 1
For England go: I will whet on the king.

Act IV.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HUBERT and Two Attendants.

HUB. Heat me these irons hot; and, look thou stand
Within the arms: when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth:
And bind the boy, which thou shalt find with me,
Fast to the chair: be heedful; hence, and watch.

1 ATTEND. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

HUB. Un cleanly scruple! Fear not you: look to—

[Exit Attendants.

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

ARTH. Good morrow, Hubert.

HUB. Good morrow, little prince.

ARTH. As little prince (having so great a title To be more prince,) as may be. —You are sad.

HUB. I had, I have been merrier.

ARTH. Methinks, no body should be sad but I:
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen were to be sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my most tenderness,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be as merry as the day is long;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him:
Is it my fault that I was Gaffrey's son?
No, indeed, is't not; And I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

HUB. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden and despatch.

[Aside.

ARTH. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day:
In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

HUB. His words do take possession of my bosom.

Read here, young Arthur. [Shewing a paper.] How You now, foolish rhinem! I await Turning despight the torture out of door!
Must I be brief; lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears. —
Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

ARTH. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

HUB. Young boy, I must.

ARTH. And will you?

HUB. And I will.

ARTH. Have you the heart? When your head did
I knot my handkerchief about your brows, (but ake, (Th' best I had, a princess wrought it me,) And I did never ask it you again:
And with my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?
Or, what good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you; But you at my sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think, my love was crafty love,
And call it, cunning; Do, as if you will:

If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes?

HUB. I have sworn to do it;
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

ARTH. Ah, none, but in this iron age, would do it! The iron of itself, though heat red-hot.
Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,
And quench his fiery indignation.
Even in the matter of mine innocencel
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd no tongue, but Hubert's.

HUB. Come forth. [Stamps.

Re-enter Attendants, with cords, irons, &c.

Do as I bid you do.

ARTH. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,
Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

HUB. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

ARTH. Alas, what need you be so boisterous-rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.
For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hold, Hubert! drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily:
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put to me.

HUB. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

1 ATTEND. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed.

[Exit Attendants.

ARTH. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart—
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

HUB. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

ARTH. Is there no remedy?

HUB. None, but to lose your eyes.

ARTH. O heaven! —that there were but a mote in
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wand'ring hair, [yours,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boistrous there,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

HUB. You must be kind to your master that bears your tongue.

ARTH. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes; O, spare mine eyes;
Though to no use, but still to look on you!
Lo, by my oath, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

HUB. I can heat it, boy.

ARTH. No, io good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,
Being create for comfort, to be us'd
In undeserv'd extremes; See else yourself; There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

HUB. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

ARTH. And if you do, you will but make it blush,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:

Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes; And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master's throat he turns him on.
All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron extends,
Creatures of note, for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live, I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, hay
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this while
You were disguised.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
And in the last repeating, troublesome,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven! — I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely in with me.

Much danger do I undergo for thee [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The same.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here aonce again we sit, once aonce crown'd;
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pembroke. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,
With prudence and wisdom we crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er plac'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stain'd with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To increase it still through the wise counsel,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beautuous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pembroke. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act as an ancient tale now told;
And in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigur'd;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about;
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pembroke. When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness:
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredite more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel: but it pleas'd your highness
To overbear it; and we are all well pleas'd:
Since all and every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;
And more, more strong, (when lesser is my fear.)
I shall induc you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not well;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pembroke. Then I, (as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound the purposes of all their hearts,) both for myself and them, (but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their best studies,) heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If, what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your fears, (which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong,) should move you to new up
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise
That time's enmity, when not got to this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,
Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal, he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so; I do commit his youth
Enter Hubert.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?

Pembroke. This is the man should do the bloody deed,
He shew'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wick'd heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does shew the mind of a much troubled breast,
And I do truly believe his days are done.

What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.
Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like herald's twixt two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pembroke. And, when it breaks, I fear, will issue thence
The image of a double-headed serpentine,
K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand.—
Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead:
He tells us, Arthur is desc'ed to-night.
Sal. Indeed, we fear'd, his sickness was past cure.

Pembroke. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick:
This made the answer'd, rather here, or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend each solemn brow on me?
Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandement on the pulse of life?
Sal. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it:
So thrive it in your game: and so farewell.

Pembroke. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.
That blood, which ow'd the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold: Bad world the while!
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ere long I doub't.

[Exit Lords.

K. John. They burn in indignation, I repeat;
There is no sure foundation set on blood;
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.—

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast; Where is that blood,
That I have sev'n inhabit in those cheeks!
No foul a sly eye does thou behold;
Pour down thy weather:—How goes all in France?
Mess. From France to England. — Never such a power
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land!
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come, that they are all arriv'd.

K. John. Of, whence hath our intelligence been drank?
ACT IV.—SCENE II.

Where hath it slept? Where is my mother’s care? That such an army could be drawn in France, And she not hear of it?
Mest. My liege, her ear
Is stopp’d with dust; the first of April, died Your noble mother: And, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a frenzy died Three days before: but this from rumour’s tongue I idly heard: if true, or false, I know not.
K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion! O, make a league with me, till I have pleas’d My discontented peers.—What! mother dead!
How wildly then walks my estate in France!—
Under whose conduct came those powers of France, That thou for truth giv’st out, are landed here!
Mest. Under the Dauphin.

Enter THE Bastard and Peter of Pomfret.
K. John. Thou hast made me giddy With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world To your proceedings? I do not seek to stuff My head with more ill news, for it is full.
Best. But, if you be afeard to hear the worst, Then let the worst, unhord, fall on your head.
K. John. Bear with me, cousin, for I was amaz’d Unbearably of these tidings.
Alot the flood; and can give audience To any tongue, speak it of what it will.
Best. How I have spoil among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express.
But, as I travelled hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied;
Possess’d with rumours, full of idle dreams;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here’s a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.
K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore dost thou so?
Peter. Forcakingnow that the truth will fall out so.
K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him hang’d.
Deliver him to safety, and return.
For I must use thee.—O my noble cousin, (Exit Hubert, with Peter.
Heart’s thon the news abroad, who are arriv’d?
Best. The French, my lord; men’s mouths are full of Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury, [fit:
(With eyes as red as new enkindled fire.)
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill’d to-night
On your suggestion.
K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.
Best. I will seek them out.
K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before,
O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!—
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.
Best. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.
(Exit.
K. John. Spoke like a spiritful noble gentleman.—
Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.
Mest. With all my heart, my liege.
K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert.
Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-
Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about [night:
The other four, in wond’rous motion.
K. John. Five moons!
Hub. Old men, and boldsmans, in the streets,
Do prophesy upon it dangerously:
Young Arthur’s death is common in their mouths;
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he, that speaks, doth gripe the hearer’s wrist;
Whilst he, that hears, makes tearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool;
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s cool.
K. John. Whysyseek’t thou to possess me with these
What urged thou so oft young Arthur’s death? [fears
Thy hand hath murder’d him: I had mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.
Hub. Had none, my lord! why, did you not provoke
K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended [me
By slavish that take their warrant for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life;
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frows
More upon humour than advis’d respect.
Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.
K. John. O, when the lastaccount twixt heaven and
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal [earth
Witness against us to damnation!
How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done! Hades not then by been,
By fellow by the hand of nature mark’d,
Quoted, and sign’d, to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.
But, taking note of thy abhor’d aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villany,
Apt, liable, to be employ’d in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur’s death;
And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.
Hub. My lord,—
K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a
When I spake darkly what I purposed;
[pause,
Or turned an eye of doubt upon my face,
And bid me tell my tale in express words;
Deep shame had struck medumb, made me break off,
And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me:
But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with sin;
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And, consequently, thy rude hand to act
The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name.—
Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me; and my state is bravo’d,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my consim’s death.
KING JOHN.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a devil betwixt your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not stained with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom never entered yet
The dreadful notion of a murd'rous thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form:
Which howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover, of a true mind.
Then to be butcher of an innocent child.
K. John. Doth Arthur live? O, haste thee to the Throw this report on their incensed rage.
[peers,
And make them tame to their obedience!
Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O, answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. Before the Castle.

Enter ARTHUR, on the walls.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down:—
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!—
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:
As good to die, and go, as die, and stay. [Leaps down,
O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones!—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!

[Dies.

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BOSW.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's-Bury;
It is our safety, and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perilous time.
Pen. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?
Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;
Whose private wit with me, of the Dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import.
Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.
Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or 'er we meet.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords!
The king, by me, requests your presence straight.
Sal. The king hath dispossess'd himself of us;
We will not line his thin bestained cloak
With our pure honours, nor attend the foot
That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks:
Return, and tell him so; we know the worst.
[best.
Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were
Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.
Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;
Therefore, 'twere reason, you had manners now.
Pen. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege.
Bast. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else.
Sal. This is the prison: What is he lies here?

[Seeing ARTHUR.

Pen. O death, made proud with pure and princely
The earth had not a hole to hide this deed. [beauty!
Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,
Doth lay it open, to urge on revenge.
Bast. Or, when he imagined this bounty to a grave,
Found it too preciously-princely for a grave.
Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,
Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?
Or do you almost think, although you see,
That you do see? could thought, without this object,
Form such another? this is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,
Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savag'ry, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-eye'd wrath, or staring rage,
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pen. All murders past do stand execus'd in this:
And this so sole, so remarkable,
Shall give a holiness, a purity.
To the yet-unbegotten sin of times:
And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest,
Exampl'd by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.
Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—
We had a kind of light, what would ensue:
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand:
The practice, and the purpose, of the king:—
From whose obedience I forbid my soul,
Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life
And breathing to his breathless excellence
A breast of a wily woman;
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,
Nor conversant with ease and idleness,
Till I have set a glory to this hand,
By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pen. Big, Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:
Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.
Sal. O, he is bold, and blushest not at death:—
Avant, thus hateful villain, get thee gone!
Hub. I am no villain.
Sal. Then set down the law? [Drawing his sword.
Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.
Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.
Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;
By heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours:
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;
Least I, by marking of your rage, forget
Our oath, our faith, our great desire, and solitude.
Big. Out, duagh! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?
Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove me so;
Yet, I am none: Whose tongue soever speaks false,
Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.
Pen. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say.
Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.
Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury:
If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,
Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame,
I'll strike thee dead.
Put up thy sword betime;
Or I'll so maul you and your toasting-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.
Big. What wilt thou do renowned Faulconbridge?
Second a villain and a murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince?
Sal. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well:
I honour'd him, I lov'd him; and will weep
My date of life out, for his sweet life's loss.
Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villany is not without such rhum;
And he long tradg in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence
Away, with me, all you whose souls abhor
The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house;
For I am stung with the smell of sin.
Big. Away, toward Dury, to the dauphin there!
Pen. There, tell the king, he may inquire us out.
[Exit Lords.]
Bast. Here's a good world! — Know you of this fair
Beyond the infinite and boundless reach [work?
Of mercy, if thou dost this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.
Hub. Do but hear me, sir.
Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what;
Thou art damn'd as black — nay, nothing is so black;
Thou art more damn'd than Paris. Lucifer:
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell.
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.
Hub. Upon my soul, —
Bast. If thou didst but consent
To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou wanst a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twister from her web
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be
A beam to hang thee on, shouldst thou drown thy-Put but a little water in a spoon, [self
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.
I do suspect thee very grievously.
Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought
Be guilty of the stealing the sweet breath
Which was embounded in this beautiful cloy,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.
Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.
I am amaz'd, methinks; and lose my way.
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.
How easy dost thou take all England up!
From forth this mere morsel of dead empire
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven; and England now is left
To tug and scumble, and to part by the teeth
The smouldering interest of proud-swelling state.
Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarl in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from low estate, and discourtesies to home,
Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits
(As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,) The eminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy lie, whose cloak and closure can Hold out this terpest! Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed: I'll tell to the king:
A thousand businesse are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth crew upon the land. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in the Palace.
Enter King John, Pasquilin with the crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory.

Pand. Take again, [Giving John the crown
From this my hand, as holding of the pope.
Your sovereign greatness and authority. [French
K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the
And from his holiness use all your power;
To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflamm'd.

Our discontented counties do revolt;
Our people quarrel with obedience;
Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
This inundation of mistempered humour
Rests by you only to be quali.ified.
Then pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope:
But, since you are a gentle convert,
My tongue shall hush against this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blustering land.
On this Ascension-day, remember well,
Upon your oath of service to the pope,
Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit.
K. John. Is this Ascension-day! Did not the prophet
Say, that, before Ascension-day at noon,
My crown I should give off? Even so I have,
I did suppose, it should be on constraint;
But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kentsh hath yielded; nothing there holds out,
But Dover castle: I London hath receiv'd,
Like a kind host, the dauphin and his powers:
Your quicksilver will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.
K. John. Would not my lords return to me again.
After they heard my strong Arthur was alive?
Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets;
An empty casket, where the jewel of life
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.
K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.
Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?
Be great in act, as you have been in thought;
Let not the world see fear, and sad distrust,
Govern the motion of a kingly eye:
Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire;
Threaten the threat'ner, and outface the brow
Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes,
That borrow their behaviour's from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauphin's spirit and resolution.
Away, and glistre like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field:
Shew boldness and aspiring confidence.
What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
O, let it not be said — Forage, and run wild;
To meet displeasure further from the doors;
And grapple with him, ere he comes so nigh.
K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with me,
And I have made a happy peace with him;
And he hath promised to dismiss the powers
Led by the dauphin.
Bast. O inglorious league! shall we, upon the footing of our land,
Send fair-play orders, and make compromise,
Insinuation, parley, and base truce,
To arms invasive! shall a beardless boy
A coxcomb's silken wanton brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And put a no cheval? Let us, my liege, to arms:
Perchance, the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or if he do, let it at least be said,
They saw we had a purpose of defence.
KING JOHN.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.
Bast. Away then, with good courage; yet, I know, Our party may well meet a ponderer too. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Plain, near St. Edmund's-Bury.

Enter in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bigot, and Soldiers.

Leu. My lord Melun, let this be copied out, And keep it safe for our remembrance: Return the precedent to these lords again; That, having our fair order written down, Both they, and we, perusing o'er these notes, May know wherefore we took the sacrament, And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.
Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble dauphin, albeit we swear A voluntary zeal, and unreg'd faith, To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince, I am not glad that such a sore of time Should seek a platter by conemain'd revolt, And heal the inveterate causer of one wound, By making many: O, it grieves my soul, That this is mettled from my side To be a widow-maker; O, and there, Where honourable rescue, and defence, Cries out upon the name of Salisbury; But such is the infection of the time, That, for the health and physic of our right, We cannot deal but with the very hand Of stern injustice and confus'd wrong. — And isn't pity, O my grieved friends! That we, the sons and children of this isle, Were born to see so sad an hour as this: Wherein we step after a stranger march Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up Her enemies' ranks, (I must withdraw and weep Upon the spot of this enforced cause,) To grace the gentry of a land remote, — And follow unacquainted colours here? What, here! — O, nation, that thou could'st remove! That Neptune's arms, who clipped thee about, Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself, And grapple thee unto a pagan shore; Where these two Christian armies might combine That in a win of death, And not to spend it so unprofitably! Leu. A noble temper dost thou shew in this; And great affections, wresting in thy bosom, Do make an earthquake of nobility. O, what a noble combat hast thou fought, Between compulsion, and a brave respect! Let me wipe off this honourable dew, That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks: My heart hath melted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation; But this effusion of such many drops, This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul, Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed Than had I seen the vanitory top of heaven Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury, And with a great heart leave away this storm: Command these waters to those baby eyes, That never saw the giant world enrag'd; Nor met with fortune other than at feasts, Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping, Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep Into the purse of rich prosperity. As Lewis himself — so, nobles, shall you all, That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter PANDULPH, attended.

And even there, methinks, an angel spake: Look, where the holy legate comes apiece, To give us warrant from the hand of heaven; And on our actions set the name of right, With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France! The next is this, — king John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in, — That so he stood against the holy church, The great metropolises and see of Rome: Therefore thy threaten'ing colours now wind up, And tame the savage spirit of wild war; That, like a lion fosser'd up at hand, It may be gently at the foot of peace, And be no further harmful than in show. Leu. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back; I am too high-born to be prostrcess, To be a secondary at controul, Or useful serving-man, and instrument, To any sovereign state throughout the world. Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars Between this chas'tis'd kingdom and myself, And brought in matter that should feed this fire; And now it is far too long to be blown out. With that same weak wind which enkindled it. You taught me how to know the face of right, Acquainted me with interest to this land, Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart; And come you now to tell me, John hath made His peace with Rome! What is that peace to me. I, by the hand of my marriage-bed. After young Arthur, claim this land for mine; And, now it is half conquer'd, must I back, Because that John hath made his peace with Rome! Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne, What men provided, what munition sent, To underprop this action? is't not I, That enderso this charge? who else but I, And such as to my claim are liable, Sweet in this business, and maintain this war? Have I not heard these islanders shout out, Vice le roy! as I have bank'd their towns? Have I not here the best cards for the game, To win this easy match play'd for a crown! And shall I now give o'er the yielded set? No, never, till my soul, it never shall be changed. Pand. You look but on the outside of this work. Leu. Outside, or inside, I will not return Till my attempt so much be glorified As to my ample hope was promised Before I drew this gallant head of war, And call'd these fiery spirits from the world, To outlook conquest, and to win renown Even in the jaws of danger and of death. — [Trumpet sounds.]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?
Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world, Let me have audience; I am sent to speak — My holy lord of Milan, from the king I come, to learn how you have dealt for him; And, as you answer, I do know the scope And warrant limited unto my tongue. Pan. The dauphin is too wilful opposite, And will not temporize with my entreaties; He flatter's me, he'll not lay down his arms. By all the blood that ever fury breathed, The youth says well: — Now hear our English king; For thus his royalty doth speak in me. He is prepar'd; and reason too, he should:
ACT V.—SCENE IV.

This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.
K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.—
Set on toward Swinestead: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

The same.—Another part of the same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, Bigot, and others.

Sal. I did not think the king so staid with friends.
Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French.

If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal! That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day.

[field.

Pem. They say, king John, sore sick, hath left the Enter Melun, wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;
Unthrift the rude eye of rebellious wrongs,
And welcome home again discarded faith.

Seek out King John, and fall before his feet;
For, if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmund’s-Bury;
Even on that altar, where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hidous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life;
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolved from its figur’d against the fire?

What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false; since it is true,
That I must die here, and live by truth by right?

I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if e’er those eyes of yours
Behold another day live the same.

But even this night,—whose black contagious breath
Already smokes about the burning crest
Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun,—
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire;
Pay the fine of rated treachery,
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day.

Command me to one Hubert, with your king;
The love of him,—and this respect besides,
For that my grand sire was an Englishman,—

Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
In hien wherefro, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field;
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee.—And beshrue my soul
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will not tread the steps of damned flight;
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o’erlook’d,
And calmly run on in obedience,
Even to our ocean, to our great king John.—

My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence:
For I do see the cruel pangs of death
Night in thine eye—Away, my friends! New flight;
And happy newness, that intends old right.
[Exeunt, leading off Milun.]

SCENE V.—The same. The French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his Train.

Scene VI.—An open Place in the neighbourhood of Swinsteal-Abeby.

Enter the Bastard and Huernet, meeting.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I Bast. A friend.—What art thou?
[shoot.]

Hub. Show me of the part of England.
Bast. Whither dost thou go?
Hub. What's that to thee? Why may I not demand
Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?
Bast. Huernet, I think.
Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought:
I will, upon all hazards, well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well:
Who art thou?
Bast. Who art thou? as if thou please,
Thou may'st befriended so much, as to think
I come one way of the Plantagenets.
Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless night,
Have done me shame.—Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent, breaking from thy tongue,
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?
Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of night,
To find you out.
Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?
Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.
Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news;
I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.
Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:
I left him almost speechless, and broke out
To acquaint you with this evil; that you might
The better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at leisure known of this.
Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out; the king
Yet is not dead, and peradventure may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?
Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come
And brought prince Henry in their company; [back.
At whose request the king hath pardoned them,
And they are all about his majesty.
Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven,
And tempt us not to bear above our power!
I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide.
These Lincoln washes have devoured them;
Myself, well-mounted, hardly have escap'd.
Away, before! conduct me to the king;
I doubt, he will be dead, or ere I come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The Orchard of Swinsteal Abbey

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late; the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain
[Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house,] Deth, by the idle comments that it makes,
Foreret the ending of a mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pen. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief,
That, being brought into the open air,
It would alloy the burning quality
Of that fell poison which assails him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.

Deth he still rage? [Exit Bigot.

Pen. He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes,
In their continuance, will not feel themselves.
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them insensible; and his siege is now
Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;
Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'Tis strange, that death should
I am the cygnus to this pale fain swan, [sing.
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death;
And plays on the organ-pipe of frailty, sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born
To set a form upon that indigest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude

Re-enter Bigot and Attendants, who bring in

K. John, in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;
It would not out at windows, nor at doors.
There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon the parchment; and against this fire
I do shrink up.

P. Hen. Poison'd.—ill fare.—dead, faroak, cast.
And none of you will bid the winter come, [off:
To thrust his icy fingers in my Mary;
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burnt bosom; nor estract the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips.
And comfort me with cold.—I do not ask you,
I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait,
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my tears,
That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt in them is hot.—
Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin’d to tyrannize
On unreprievable condemned blood.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O, I am sealed with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see your majesty.

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart is crack’d and burn’d;
And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be utter’d;
And then all this thou see’st is but a clod,
And module of confounded royalty.

Bast. The dauphin preparing hitherward;
Where, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him;
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the watches, all unwarily,
Devour’d by the unexpected flood. [The King dies.
Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.
My liege! my lord!—But now a king,—now thus.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop,
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay!

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge;
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.—
Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? Shew now your minded faiths;
And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction, and perpetual shame,
Out of the weak door of our fainting land:
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we;
The cardinal Pandulphe is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the dauphin;
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath despatch’d.
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal.
With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will pest
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so:—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spar’d,
Shall wait upon your father’s funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inter’d;
For so he will’d it.

Bast. Thither shall it then.
And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land!
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do beseech my faithful services
And true submission everlasting.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.

P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you
And knows not how to do it, but with tears. [thanks,
Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.—
This England never did, (nor never shall,)—
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them: Nought shall make us rue,
If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt.

The tragedy of King John, though not written with the utmost power of Shakspeare, is tinted with a very pleasing interchange of incidents and characters: the lady’s grief is very affecting; and the character of the Bastard contains that mixture of great ness and levity which this author delighted to exhibit. — John

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF

KING RICHARD II.

This play, which Mr. Malone supposed to have been written in 1593, was published in quarto no less than five several times during our author's life. The first edition was in 1597, without the scene of deposing Richard, which was first inserted in the edition of 1608.

It has been supposed by Mr. Farmer, that there was a play on the subject anterior to that of Shakespeare, because he found in Lord Essex, in the arrangements of Cafe and Merel, vol. iv. p. 350, of Malone's edition, that, 'The afternoon before the rebellion, Merick, with a great number of others, that afterwards were all in the action, had prearrived to be played before them the play of deposing King Richard the Second; when it was told him by one of the players, that the play was old, and they should have lost in playing it, because he would come to it, there was forty shilling's extraordinary given to play, and so thereupon played it was.'

This passage does not, however, necessarily refer to a drama older than Shakespeare's. In the year 1601, the actors would be very naturally induced to consider a play as old as the one the Duke of Norfolk, on the accession of high-treason, which occurred in 1596, and close with the death of King Richard, which took place in the end of the year 1602.

SCENE.—dispersedly in England and Wales.

ACT I.

Enter King Richard, attended; John of Gaunt, and other Nobles, with him.

King. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lan-cast thout, according to thy oath and band, [caster, brought bither Henry Hereford thy bold son;

Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,

Which then our leisure would not let us hear,

Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray.

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

King. Rich. Tell me moreover, hast thou sounded him,

If he appeal the duke on ancient malice;

Or worthily, as a good subject and true

On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sit him on that argument,—

On some apparent danger seen in him, [ment,—

Aim'd at thy highness, no inveterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to face,

And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear

The accusar, and the accused, freely speak:—

[Exeunt some Attendants.

High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,

In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Re-enter Attendants, with Bolingbroke and Norfolk.

Boling. Many years of happy days befal

My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

Now. Each day still better other's happiness;

Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,

Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters us,

As well appeareth by the cause you come;

Namely, to appeal each other of high treason;

Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object

Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boling. First, (heaven be the record to my speech!) In the devotion of a subject's love,

Tendering the precious safety of my prince,

And free from other misbegotten hate,

Come I appellant to this princely presence.—

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I tunes to thee,

And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,

My body shall make good upon this earth,

Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.

Then art a traitor and a miscreant;

Too good to be so, and too bad to live;

Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky,

The unrighteous seem the clouds that in it fly.

Once more, the more to aggravate the note,

With a foul traitor's name stuff my throat;

And wish, (so please my sovereign,) ere I move,

What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword may prove.

Now. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal.

'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain:

The blood is hot, that must be cool'd for this,

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,

To be bush'd, and with italise at all to say:

First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me

From giving reins and spurs to my free speech;

Which else would post, until it had return'd

These terms of treason doubled down his threat.

Setting aside his high blood's royalty,

And let him be no kinsman to my liege,

I do defy him, and spit at him;

Call him—a slanderous coward, and a villain:

Which to maintain, I would allow him odds;

And meet him were I tied to run a-foot.
ACT I.—SCENE I.

Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable
Wherever England doomed him to his foot.

Mean time, let this defend my loyalty.—

For Gloster's death, I speak.

Boling. Pale trembling coward, here I throw my Disclaiming here the kindred of the king; [gag

And lay aside my high blood's royalty,

Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except:

That guilty drest hath left thee so much strength,

As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoope,

By that, and all the rites of knighthood else,

Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,

What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.

Now, I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,

Which gently lay'd my knighthood on my shoulder,

I'll answer thee in any fair degree,

Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:

And, when I mount, alive may I not light,

If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!

K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's

It must be great, that can inherit him [charge!

So much as of a thought of ill in him. [true;

Boling. Our master shall prove it,

That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,

In name of lendings for thy highness's soldiers;

The which he hath detain'd for woful employments,

Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.

Besides I say, and will in battle prove—

Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge

That week survey'd by English eye—

That all the treasons, for these eighteen years

Complotted and contrived in this land,

Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.

Further I say,—and further will maintain

Upon his bad life, to make all this good,—

That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death;

Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;

And, consequently, like a traitor coward,

Slue'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:

Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,

Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,

To me, for justice, and rough chastisement;

And, by the glorious worth of my descent,

Thou shalt do it, or my life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!

Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Now. O let my sovereign turn away his face,

And bid his ears a little while be deaf,

Till I have told this slander of his blood,

How God, and good men, hate so foul a har.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and ears:

Were he my brother, say, my kingdom's heir,

(As he is but my father's brother's son,)Now by my scepter's awe I make a vow,

Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood

Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize

The unstooping firmness of my upright soul;

He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou; Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

Now. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart.

Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest!

Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,

Disborn's I duty to his highness' soldiers:

The other part reserv'd I by consent;

For that my sovereign liege was so my debt,

Upon remainder of a dear account,

Since last I went to France to fetch his queen:

Now swallow down that lie.—For Gloster's death,—

I slew him not; but to my own disgrace,

Neglected my sworn duty in that case.—

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,

The honourable father to my foe,

Once did I lay in ambush for your life,

As those that doth mangle a distressed soul: But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,

I did confess it; and exactly begg'd

Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.

This is my fault: As for the rest appeal'd,

It issues from the rancour of a villain,

A recreant and most degenerate traitor:

Which in myself I boldly will defend;

And interchangeably hurl down my gage

Upon this overweening traitor's foot,

To prove myself a loyal gentleman

Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom:

In haste whereof, most heartily I pray

Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me;

Let's purge this choler without letting blood;

This we prescribe, though no physician;

Deep malice makes too deep incision:

Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;

Our doctors say, this is no month to bleed,—

Good uncle, let this end where it begun;

We'll put the duke of Norfolk to your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age—

Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry? when?

Obedience bids, I should not bid again.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is

Nor. Myself I throw, dreadful sovereign, at thy foot:

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:

The one my duty owes; but my fair name,

(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,) To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.

I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here;

Fiercely to the soul with slander's venom'd spear;

The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood

Which breath'd this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood:

Give me his gage:—Lions make leopards tame.

Nor. Yea, but not change their spots: take but my Boling. O, God defend my soul from such foul sin! Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight? Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height Before this outcast's dastard! Ere my tongue Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong, Or sound so base a parade, my teeth shall fear The slavish motive of rencanting fear; And spit it bleeding, in his high disgrace, Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face. K. Rich. We were not bound to sue, but to command: Which since we do, what do to make you friends, Be ready, as your lives shall answer.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster’s Palace.

Enter Gaunt, and Duchess of Gloucester.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gloucester’s blood
Both more solite me, than your exclamations.
To stir against the butchers of his life.
But such correction I must have in this cause,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who when he sees the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain not vengeance on offenders’ heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward’s seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven phials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dried by nature’s course,
Some of those branches by the destines cut:
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloucester,—
One phial full of Edward’s sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,—
Is crack’d, and all the poisonous insect in it.
Is buck’d down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy’s hand, and murder’s bloody axe,
Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bed, that womb,
That mettle, that self-mould, that fashion’d thee,
Made him a man; and though thou hvst, and breath’st,
Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father’s death,
In that thou seekest thy wretched brother’s life,
Who was the model of thy father’s life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair;
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter’d;
Thou shew’st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern manner how to butcher thee:
That which in mean men we entitle—patience,
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say! to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is—to venge my Gloucester’s death.

Gaunt. Heaven’s is the quarrel; for heaven’s sub-
His deputy anointed in his sight, [stirrue.
Hath caus’d his death: the which if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

Duch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?
Gaunt. To heaven, the widow’s champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.
Thou go’st to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight:
O, sit my husband’s wrongs on Hereford’s spear,
That it may eatier butcher Mowbray’s breast!
Or, if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray’s sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courier’s back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A baffly re vestibule to my cousin Hereford!

Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometime brother’s wife,
With her companion grief must end her life.
Gaunt. Farewell, sister, farewell: I must to Coventry:
As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more;—Grief boundeth where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun;
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.
Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.
Lo, this is all:—Nay, yet depart not so;

Though this be all, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him—O, what?—
With all good speed to Plashy visit me.
Alack, and what shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unpeopled offices, unstricken stones?
And what cheer there for welcome, but my groans?
Therefore commend me; let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow that dwells every where:
Deseolate, desolate, will I hence, and die;
The last loose leaf of thee takes my weeping eye, [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Gosford Green, near Coventry.

Arms set out, and a Throne. Heralds, &c. attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm’d?
Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter in.
Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant’s trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar’d and
For nothing but his majesty’s approach.  [stay

Flourish of trumpets. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his throne; Gaunt, and several Noblemen, who take their places. A trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Then enter Norfolk, in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yeoman champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms:
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him to the justiciary of his cause.

Mar. In God’s name, and the king’s, say who thou
And why thou com’st, thus knightly clad in arms:
Against what man thou com’st, and what thy quarrel:
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oaths;
And so defend thee heaven, and thy valour!

Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Nor-
Who kither come engaged by my oath,
[fol.
(Which, heaven defend, a knight should violate !)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me;
And, by the grace of God, and this my arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

[He takes his seat.

Trumpeter sounds. Enter Bolingbroke, in armour; preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yeoman knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plaited in indignities of war,
And formally according to our law
Depose him in the justice of his cause.  [hither,

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com’st thou
Before King Richard, in his royal lists?
Against whom comest thou? and what’s thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!  [Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby. Am I not here, who stand to defend in arms?
To prove, by heaven’s grace, and my body’s valour,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he’s a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshal, and such officers
Appoint’d to direct those fair designs.
ACT I—SCENE III.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand, and bow my knee before his majesty: [hand, Lord Marshal, and myself, are like two men. That vow a long and weary pilgrimage; Then let us take a ceremonious leave; And loving farewell, of our several friends. [kneel. Mar. The appellant in all duties greet your highness. And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave. K. Rich. We will descend, and told him in our arms. Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,

So be thy fortune in this royal fight! Farewell, my blood; which did to thou shed, Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead. Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be god'd with Mowbray's spear; As confident, as is the falcon's flight Against a bird, do I with Mowbray right. My loving lord, [to Lord Marshal.] I take my leave of You, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle:— [you; Not sick, although I have to do with death; But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath. Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet: O thou, the earthly author of my blood,— [To Gaunt. Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate, Rich with a two-fold vigour lift me up To realise the poetry above my head. Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers; And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat, And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt, Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

Our. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosper. Be swift like lightning in the exultation; [perious! And let thy blows, doubly redoubled, Fall like amazing thunder on the casque Of thy adverse pernicious enemy: Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live. Boling. Mine innocence, and Saint George to thrive. [He takes his seat. Nor. [Rising.] However heaven, or fortune, cast my lot, There lives, or dies, true to king Richard's throne, A loyal, just, and upright gentleman. Never did captive with a freer heart Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace True golden unconstr'd equality. Now may my dancing soul do celebrate This feast of battle with mine adversary — This mighty liege,—and my companion peers,— Take from my mouth the wish of happy years: As gentle and as jovial, as to jest, Go I to fight; Truth hath a quiet breast. K. Rich. Farewell, my lord; securely I copy Virtue with valour couched in thine eye, Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

[The King and the Lords return to their seats. Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, Receive thy lance; and God defend the right! Boling. [Rising.] Strong as a tower of hope, I cry aloud,— Amen. Mar. Go hear this lance to an Officer, to Thomas, a Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself, On pain to be found false and recreant, To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray, A traitor to his God, his king, and him, And dares him to set forward to the fight. 2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of On pain to be found false and recreant, [Norfolk, Both to defend himself, and to approve Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal; Courageously, and with a free desire, Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound trumpets; and set forward, combatants. [A charge soundeth. Stay, the king hath thrown his warlike down. [spear, K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their And both return back to their chairs again:— Withdraw with us:—and let the trumpets sound, While we return these dukes what we decrease.— [A long flourish. Draw near. [To the Combatants. And list what with our council we have done. For that our kingdom's earth should not be soild With that dear blood which it hath fostered; And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' swords; And for we think the eagle-winged pride Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts, With rival hate engag'd, set you on To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep; Which so rous'd up with boisterous untamed drums, With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful Bray, And grating shock of wondrous iron arms. Might shatter forth our quiet conscience bright fair peace, And make us wake even in our common blood— Therefore, we banish you our territories:— You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death, Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields, Shall not return our fair dominions, But tread the stranger paths of banishment. [be. Boling. Your will be done: this must my comfort That sun, that warms you here, shall shine on me; And those his golden beams, to you here lent, Shall point on me, and gild my banishment. K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom, Which I with some unwillingness pronounce: The sky-slow hours shall not determine The dateless limit of thy dear exile; — The hopeless word of—never to return Breatheth against thee, upon pain of life. Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege, And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth: A dearer merit, not so deep a maim. As to be cast forth in the common air, Have I reserved at your own right hand. The language I have learn'd these forty years, My native English, now I must forego: And now my tongue's use is to me no more, Than an unstrung viol, or a harp; Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up, Or, being open, put into his hands That know's no touch to tune the harmony, Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue, Doubly portcullis'd, with my teeth, and lips; And dull, unfailing, bare ignorance Is made my gainer to attend on me. I am too old to fawn upon a nurse, Too far in years to be a pupil now; What is thy sentence then, but speechless death. Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath! K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate; After our sentence plaining comes too late. Nor. Then thus I turn me from my country's light, To dwell in solemn shades of endless night. [Retiring. K. Rich. Retain again, and take an oath with thee. Lay on thy royal sword to his hand; Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven, (Our part therein we banish with ourselves,) To keep the oath that we administer:— You never shall (so help you truth and heaven!)

And, for my heart disclaimed that my tongue should so profane the word, that taught me craft;
To counterfeit oppression of such grief,
That words seemed but a burden on my sorrow's grave.
Marry, would the word farewell have length'd me hours,
And added years to his short banishment,
He should have had a volume of farewells;
But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but his doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kin shall come to see his friends.
Ourself, and Husby, Bagot, here, and Green,
Observe'd his courtship to the common people.
How he did seem to dive into their hearts,
With humble and familiar courtesy;
What reverence he did throw away on slaves;
Wowing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,
And patient underhearing of his fortune.
As 'twere, to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;
A brace of draymen bid—God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With—Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends;
As were our England in reverson his,
And as our kin shall come to see his friends.
Green. Well, he's gone; and with him go these
Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland;
Expedient manage must be made, my liege;
Ere further leisure yield them further means,
For their advantage, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war.
And with a little army, in the which
For want of means cannot strange our friends,
And liberal largess,—are grown somewhat light,
We are enforce'd to farm our royal realms;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand: If that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;
Whereeto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants;
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Busby.

Busby, what news?
Busby. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord;
Sudden taken; and hath sent post-haste,
To entreat your majesty to visit him.
K. Rich. Where lies he?
Busby. At Ely-house.
K. Rich. Now put it, heaven, in his physician's mind,
To help him to his grave immediately!
The listing of his coffers shall make costs
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—
Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:
Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late!

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

GAUNT ON A COUCH; THE DUKE OF YORK, AND OTHERS STANDING BY HIM.

Gaunt. Will the king come? that I may breathe my
In wholesome counsel to his untaught youth. [Last York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your
For all in vain comes counsel to his ear. [breath;
Gaunt. O, but they say, the tongues of dying men
Enforce attention, like deep harmony;
Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain;
For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in pain.
He, that no more must say, is listen'd more

That they whom youth and ease have taught to glose;
More are men's ends mark'd, than their lives before;
The setting sun, and music at the close,
As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last;
Writ in remembrance, more than things long past;
Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.

York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,
As, praises of his state; then, there are found
Lascivious metres; to whose venom sound
The open ear of youth does always listen;
Report of fashions in proud Italy;
Whose manners still our tardy aship nation
Lims after in base imitation.
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
(So it be new, there's no respect how vile,)
That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?
Then, too lowly of counsel to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard?
Direct not him, whose way himself will choose;
'Tis breath thou lackest, and that breath wilt thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspir'd;
And thus, expiring, do foretell of him:
His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last;
For what fires soon burn out and are physics
Small show'rless long last, but sudden storms are short;
He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Light vanity, instatate coromant,
Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this scept'r'd isle,
This royal band of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise:
This fortress, built by Nature for herself,
Against infection, and the hand of war;
This happy breed of men, this little world;
This precious stone, set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a most defensive to a house,
Against the wanton mischief of the lands;
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fear'd by their breed, and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
(For Christian service, and true chivalry,)
As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,
Of that old crom's ransom, bless'd Madoc son;
This land of such dear souls, this dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world,
Is now leav'd out (I die pronouncing it,) Like to a tenement, or pelting farm:
England bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds;
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself;
O, would the scandal vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death!

Enter King Richard and Queen: Aumerle, Busby, Green, Bagot, Ross, and Willoughby.

York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;
For young hot colts, being rag'd, do rage the more.
Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?
K. Rich. What comfort, man? how is't with aged Gaunt?

Gaunt. O, how that name befits my composition; Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt in being old.
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast:
And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt;
For sleeping England long time have I wond'rd
Enter Northumberland.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your
K. Rich. What says he now? [majesty
North. Nay, nothing; all is said
His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.
K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, as is said; his
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be
So much for that. — Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns;
Which live like venom, where no venom else,
But only they, hath privilege to live.
And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables.
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.
York. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,
Nor the prevails of poor Bolingbroke.
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.—
I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first;
In war, was never hon rag'd more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than he, that was more princely gentleman.
His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;
But, when he crown'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends: his noble hand
Did win what he did spend, and spent not that
Which his triumphant father's hand had won:
His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.
K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?
York. O, my liege,
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I pleas'd
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.
Seek you to seize, and seize you into lands,
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford's rights away, and take from him
His charters, and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;
Be not myself, for how art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!) If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue,
His letters, and deny his old lord's hommage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.
K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands. [hands
York. I'll not be by, the while my liege, farewell! What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;
But by bad courses may be understood,
That their events can never fall out good. [Exit.
K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire
Bid him repair to us to Ely-house, [straight;
To see this business: To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow;
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England,
For he is just, always lov'd us well.—
Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish.
[Enter King, Queen, Bushy, Aumerle, Green, and Bagot.
North. Well, Northumberland, the duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.
Will. Barely in title, not in revenue.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.
Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with Erst be disburden'd with a liberal tongue, [silence.
North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him never Speak more,
That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm?
Will. Tends that thou 'ltst speak, to the duke of
If it be so, out with it boldly, man; [Hereford?
Quick is mine ear, to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all, that I can do for him;
Unless you call it good, to pity him,
But the grief and tidings of his present fortune.
North. Now, afore heaven, 'tis shame, such wrongs
In him a royal prince, and many more [are borne,
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all;
That will the king severely prosecute
'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.
Ross. The commons hath he pill'd of grievous
And lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd [taxes,
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.
Will. And daily new exactions are devis'd;
As blunders, benevolences, and I wot not what;
But what, o'God's name, doth become of this?
North. Wars have not wasted it, for war'st be
But basely yielded upon compromise [hath not,
That which his ancestors achieved with blows:
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.
Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.
Will. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken
North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burdensome taxation notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.
North. His noble kinsman: most degenerate king!
But lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.
Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer:
And unavoid'd is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.
North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of
I spy life peering: but I dare not say [death,
How near the tides of our comfort is. [ours.
Will. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost
Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts: therefore, be bold:
North. Then thus I— I have from Portle Blanc, a
In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence [say
That Harry Hereford, Reingold lord Cobham, [The son of Richard earl of Arundel.]
That late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, sir John Ramstou.
Sir John Norberry, sir Robert Waterton, and Frances Quoict,—
All these, well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
With eight thousand ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making better with all due expedience,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavey yoke,
Imp our drooping country's broken wing,
Redeem from broken pawn the blenished crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our scepter's girt,
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away, with me, in post to Ravenspurg:
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go. [fear.
Ross. To horse! to horse! urge doubts to them that Will. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Palace.
[Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.
Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.
Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard: Yet, again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles at something it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord the king.
Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty sha:
Whichever grief itself, but are not so: [dows,
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Shew nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of griefs, more than himself, to wait;
Which, if you do not, look'd upon as it is,
Though it be not; and so your thoughts,
Of what it is not. Then, thrice-graciou.s queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not more;
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye, [not seen:
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.
Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: How'er it be,
I cannot but be sad: so heavy sad,
As—though, in thinking, on o'God I think.——
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.
Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.
Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so;
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:
'Tis in reversion that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known;
what I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.
[Enter Green.
Green. God save your majesty!—and well met,
genlemen,
I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.
Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope he is,
For his designs c'reve haste, his haste good hope;
Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?
Enter York.

York. Here comes the duke of York.

Green. With signs of war about his aged neck; Or, if all careful business are his looks! —

Uncle, For heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts: Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth, Where nothing lives, but crosses, care, and grief. Your husband he is gone to save far off, Whilst others come to make him lose at home: Here I must to understand his mind; Who, weak with age, cannot support myself: — Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made; Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came. York. He was! — Why, so! — go all which way it The nobles they are fled, the commons cold, [will!] — And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side. —

Sirrah, Get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloster; Bid her send me presently a thousand pound; Hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship: To-day, as I came by, I called there; — But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

York. What is it, knave? —

Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died. York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes Comes rushing on this wealful land at once! I know not what to do: — I would to God, (So my untruth had not prov'd him kind) The king had cut off my head with my brother's. —

What, are there no posts despatch'd for Ireland? —

How shall we do for money for these wars? —

Come, sister,—cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.—

Go, fellow, [to the Servant] get thee home, provide And bring away the armour that is there.—[Ex. Serv.

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? if I know How, or which way, to order these affairs, Thus disorderly thrust into my hands, Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen: —

Thus is my sovereign whom both my oath And duty bids defend; the other again, Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd; Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right. Well, somewhat we must do.—Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you: — Go, muster up your men, And meet me presently at Berkley-castle. I should to Flashy too —

But time will not permit.—All is uneven, And every thing is left at six and seven. — [Exeunt York and Queen.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland, But none returns. For us to levy power, Proportional to the enemy, Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love, Is near the hate of those love not the king. Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their Lies in their purses; and whose empty them, [love By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate. Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally con-demnd.'

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we, Because we ever have been near the king. Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol The earl of Wiltshire is already there. —

Castle; Bushy. Thither will I with you: for little office The hateful commons will perform for us; Except, like curs, to tear us all to pieces. —

Will you go along with us? —

All. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty. Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain, We three here part, that never shall meet again. Bushy. That's as York thrives to best back Bol-lingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes Is—numb'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry; Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly. Bushy. Farewell at once; for ever, for all, and ever. Green. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. —

SCENE III.—The wilds in Glos-tershire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now? North. Believe me, noble lord, I am a stranger here in Glos-tershire. These high wild hills, and rough unequal ways, Draw out our nibles, and make them wearisome: And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar, Making the hard way sweet and delectable. But, I think you, what a weary way From Ravensespur to Cotswold, will be found In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company; Which, I protest, hath very much begg'd! The tediousness and process of my travel: But theirs is sweeter'd with the hope to have The present benefit which I possess: —

And hope to joy, is little less in joy, Than hope enjoy'd: — by this the weary lords Shall make their way seem short; as mine hath done By sight of what I have, your noble company. Boling. Of much less value is my company, Than your good words. But who comes here? —

Enter Harry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.—

Harry, how fares your uncle? [health of you.

Per. I had thought, my lord, to have learnt'd his North. Why, is he not with the queen?

Per. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the court, Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd
The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?

He was not so resolv'd, when last we spake together. Per. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor.

But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurg, To offer service to the duke of Hereford;
And sent me o'er by Berkley, to discover What power the duke of York had levied there; Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurg.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy?

Per. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot, Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge, I never in my life did that name in England, [dike.

North. Then learn to know him now: this is the Per. My gracious lord, I tender you my service, Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young;
And as my fortune ripens with thy love, It shall be still thy true love's recompense: My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it, North. How far is it to Berkley? And what stirs Keeps good old York there, with his men of war! Per. There stands the castle, by you tuff of trees. Many with three hundred men, as I have heard: And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour; None else of name, and noble estimation.

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Willoughby, Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.

Boling. Welcome, my lords: I wet your love-pursuit.

A banish'd traitor; all my treasure
Sues Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompense.

Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord. Willo. And far surmounts our labour to attain it, Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor, Whose goods you have added thirty years: Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter Berkley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess. Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord, my answer is— to Lancaster; And I am come to seek that name in England: And must find that title in your tongue, Before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my mean-
To raze one title of your honour out. [tag, To you, my lord, I come, (what lord you will,) From the most gracious regent of this land, The duke of York: to know, what pricks you on To take advantage of the absent time, And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you; Here comes his grace in person.— My noble uncle!

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee, Whose duty is deceivable and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle!
Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
Whilst you have fed upon my seignories,
Dispark’d my parks, and fell’d my forest woods;
From my own windows torn my household coat,
Raz’d out my impress, leaving me no sign—
Save men’s opinions, and my living blood,—
To shew the world I am a gentleman.
This, and much more, much more than twice all this,
Condemns you to the death:—see them deliver’d over
To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me,
Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell
Green. My comfort is,—that heaven will take our
And plague injustice with the pains of hell. [souls,
Boling. My lord Northumberland, see them despatch’d.

[Enter NOUMTH, and others, with Prisoners.
Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house;
For heaven’s sake, fairly let her be entreated:
Tell her, I send to her my kind commends;
Take special care my greetings be deliver’d.
York. A gentleman of mine I have despatch’d
With letters of your love to her at large.
Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, lords, away;
To fight with Glendower and his complices;
Awhile to work, and, after, holiday.

[Exeunt.}

SCENE III.—The Coast of Wales.  A Castle in View, Flourish: Drums & Trumpets.  Enter KING RICHARD,
BISHOP OF CARLESTE, AMABLE, and Soldiers.
K. Rich. Baclongusky castle call you this at hand?
Aun. Yea, my lord. How long have you discourse the air,
After late tossing on the breaking seas?
K. Rich. Needs must I like it well: I weep for joy,
To stand upon my kingdom once again.—
Dear earth. I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels bound thee with their horses’ hoofs:
As a long parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;
So, weeping, smiling, great I thee, my earth,
And do thee favour with my royal hands.
 Feed not thy sovereign’s foe, my gentle earth,
Nor with thy sweet comforts his rav’rous sense:
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy gaited toads, lie in their way:
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies;
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder;
Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign’s enemies.—
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords;
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, are her native king;
Shall falter under foul rebellions arms; [you king,
Bishop. Fear not, my lord; that Power, that made
Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all;
The means that heaven yields must be embrac’d,
And not neglected; else, if heaven would
And we will not, heaven’s offer we refuse;
The pretend’d means of all.
Aun. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends.
K. Rich. Discomfortable consil! know’st thou not,
That when the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, blindly here:
But when, from under this terrestrial ball,
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and all demon-sins,
The crack of night being pluck'd from off their backs,
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves!
So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,
Whilst we were wand ring with the antipodes,—
Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
His treasons with sit covering in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough reade sea
Can wash the balm from an annotated king:
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd,
To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,
God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight,
Weak men must fall; for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.

Welcome, my lord! How far off lies your power?
Sall. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,
Than this weak arm: Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,
Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth:
O, call back yesterday, bid time return,
And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men.
To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
O'erethrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state:
For all the Welshmen, bearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd and fled. [pale?
K. Rich. Call not my name: a man looks on grace so
K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
And, till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead?
All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;
For then hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege: remember who you are.
K. Rich. I had forgot myself: Am I not king?
Awake thou sluggard majesty! thou sleepest.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
Ye favourites of a king; Are we not high?
High be our thoughts: I know, my uncle York
Hath power enough to serve our turn: But who Comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More heath and happiness betide my liege,
Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him.
K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepar'd.
The worst is worldly loss, thou canst untold.
Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care;
And what loss is, to be rid of care?
Strokes Bolingbroke to be as great as we;
Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so:
Revolt our subjects; that we cannot mend;
They break their faith to God, as well as us:
Cry, woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;
The worst is—death, and death will have his day.
Yet, with such a highness is so arm'd
To bear the tidings of calamity,
Like an unreasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolved to tears;
So high above his limits swells the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
White beards have arm'd their thin and hairy scalps
Against thy majesty: boys, with women's voices,
Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints
In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown:
 Thy very beadsmen learn to bend their bows
Of double-fatiguel ye against thy state;
Yea, distast-women manage rusty hills
Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill.
Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
That they have let the dangerous enemy
Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
If we surrender, on whose head shall the earth.
I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke, Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord. [demption!
K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without re-
Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!
Snares, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart!
Three Jewels, each one thing worse than the other,
Judas! Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
Upon their spotted souls for this offence!
Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
Turns to the surest and most deadly hate:—
Again uncease their souls, their peace is made
With heads, and not with hands: whom whom you curse,
Have felt the stroke of death's devouring wound.
And lie full low, gradv'd in the hollow ground.
[dead! Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, Scroop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.
Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power?
K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man speak.
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs,
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrows on the heads of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills:
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposited bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own, but death;
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which all in turn, as paper and cover lines.
For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings:—
How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depo'd:
Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd;
All murder'd:—For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king.
Keeps death his court: and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with soft and vain conceit,—
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impenetrable, and, humour'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bored through his castle wall, and—farewell king!
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,
For you have but mistaken me all this while:
I live with broad like face, in want, taste grief,
Need friends:—Subjected thus,
How can you say to me—I am a king?
Car. My lord, wise men ne'er wait their present
But presently prevent the ways to wait. [woes,
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives in, your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself,
Fear, and be slain; no worse can come, to fight:
And fight and die, is death destroying death;
Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath.

Aum. My father hath a power, inquire of him;
And learn to make a body of a limb. [broke, I come]
K. Rich. Thou child'st me well. — Proud Boling-
To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
Thisague-fit of fear is over-blown;
An easy task it is, to win our own.—
Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day:
So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say,
I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken—
Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Uphis party.

K. Rich. Then hast said enough.—
Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth
To Aumerle.

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now? What comfort have we now?
By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.

Get to Flint castle; there I'll pine away;
A king, whose slave, shall kingly owe obey.
That power I have, discharge; and let them go
To ear the land that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none:—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.
Aum. My liege, one word.
K. Rich. He does me double wrong;
That wounds me with the batteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers, let them hence:— Away,
From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

SCENE III.—Wales. Before Flint Castle.

Enter, with drum and colours, Bolingbroke and Forces; York, Northumberland, and others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
With some few private friends, upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair, and good, my lord;
Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head.

York. It would beseech the lord Northumberland,
To say—king Richard;—Alack the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.

York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.
Boling. Mistake not, uncle; further than you should,
York. Take not, good cousin, further than you should.
Lest you mistake:—The heavens are o'er your head.
Boling. I know it; uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will.——But who comes here?

Enter Percy.

Well, Harry:—what, will not thus castle yield?
Percy. The castle royally is man'd my lord,
Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royalty! Why, it contains no king?
Percy. Yes, my good lord, It doth contain a king; but Richard lies Within the limits of you lyme and stone:
And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

North. Belike, it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord. [To North."
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of praise
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver,
Harry Bolingbroke
On both his knees, doth kiss king Richard's hand;
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person; lither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd, And lands restor'd again, be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:—
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall shew.
Go, signify as much; while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.—

[North. advances to the castle, with a trumpet.
Let's march with that noise threatening drum,
That from the castle's totter'd battlements,
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting tears the cloudy checks of heaven
Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water:
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.
March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.

A parte sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls KING RICHARD, the BISHOP OF CARLISLE, AUMERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY.

York. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east;
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.
Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Controlling majesty; Alack, alack, for woe,
That any harm should stain so fair a show!

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we
To watch the fearful bending of thy knee, [stood
To Northumberland.

Because we thought ourselfsthy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can grip the sacred handle of our scepter,
Unless, he do proflane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think, that all, as you have done
Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,
And are more barren, and bereft of friends;—
Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent,
Is onstirring in his clouds, on our behalf
Arms of pestilence: and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head,
And threat the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke, (for yond', methinks, he is,) That every stride he makes upon my land,
Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face;
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil ears
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon thy royal grand sire's bones;
And by the royalties of both thy bloods,
Cushioned with darts springing from other consecrated head;
And by the buried band of warlike Gaunt;
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,—
His coming hitherto hath no further scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement from his owncreate heads;
To which, by the murderer's banquet,
His glittering arms he will command to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.

This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thou the king resolv'se
No noble cousin is right well-conceived [turns;]
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle bearing kind commends.—
We do debase ourselves, cousin, do we not, [To Aum.
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair!
Shall we still back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words,
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of
That laid the sentence of dreadful banishment [mine,
On you proud man, should take it off again With sense of sooth? O, this is great As is my grief, or less than my name! that Or that I could forget what I have been! Or not remember what I must be now! Swell'st thon, proud heart! I'll give thee scope to beat,
Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke;

K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he sub-
The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd? [mit? The king shall be contented: Must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go: I'll give my jewels, for a set of heads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown;
My furbelow's, for a dish of wood;
My scepter, for a palmer's walking-staff;
My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little grave, an obscure grave:—
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where common subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head:

For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live;
And, buried once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou weep'st; My tender-hearted cousin!—
We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?

To our decks!—To drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted as a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid.—There lies
Two kinsmen, digg'd their graves with weeping eyes;
Would not this ill do well!—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me—

Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What say's king Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says,—ay
North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend
To speak with you: may 't please you to come down;
K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening Phæ-
Wanting the manage of untruly jades. [Ton,
[North. retires to Bolingbroke.

In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down! Down, court! down king! For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should Wing. [Exeunt, from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants below.
Boling. Stand all apart,
And shew fair duty to his majesty.—

My gracious lord,—

[Knelling.
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you delase your princely knee,
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, [touching his own head.] although your knee be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love. [have,
K. Rich. Well you deserve:—They well deserve to That know the strongest and surest way to get—
Uncle, give me your hand: may, dry your eyes:
Tears shew their love, but want their remedies.—
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;
For do we must, what force will have us do.—
Set on towards London:—Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.
K. Rich. —Then I must not say, no. [Flourish.

SCENE IV.

Langley.—The Duke of York's Garden.
Enter the Queen and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this gar-et? To drive away the heavy thought of care? [den?
1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.
Queen. 'Twill make me think,
The world is full of ruins, and that my fortune
Right 'gainst the bias.

1 Lady. — Madam, we will dance.
Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.
1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.
Queen. For what sorrow, or of joy?
1 Lady. Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither; girl.
For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain.
1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well, that thou hast cause; [weep.
But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou
1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.
Queen. And I could weep, would weeping do me
And never borrow any tear of thee.
[good,
For stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

My wretchedness unto a row of pi's,
They'll talk of state: for every one doth so
Against a change: Woe is forewarn with woe.

1 Gard. Go, bind thou up yon dashing apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their size
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some supportage to the bending twigs.
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be pruned; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.
1 Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law and form, and due proportion,
Sewing, as in a model, our farm estate?
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?
1 Gard. Hold thy peace:
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds, that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,
That seemed in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.
2 Serv. What, are they dead?
1 Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath set seid't the wasteful king.—Oh! what pity is it,
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we the garden! When the boughs may live;
With too much riches it confounded itself:
He had done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their trusts of duty. All superfluous branches
We've pluck'd away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite throwen down.
1 Serv. What, think you then, the king shall be deposed of?
1 Gard. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd,
'Tis doubt, he will be: Letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.
Queen. O, I am press'd to death,
Through want of speaking!—Thou, old Adam's-like [Coming from her concealment.
Set to dress this garden, how dares
Thy harsh rude tongue sound this unplesasing news?
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?
Why dost thou say, king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Canst thou by these ill-tidings? speak, thou wretch.
Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I,
To breathe this news: yet, what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides the courtiers, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so:
I speak no more than every one doth know.
Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy emissage belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go,
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What, was I born to this! that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gardener, for telling me this news of woe,
I would, the plats thou graft'st, may never grow.
[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.
1 Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.—[worse,
Here did she fall a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, some herb of grace:
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall. The Lords spiritual on the right side of the throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwilliam, another Lord, Bishop of Carlisle, Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants. Officers behind with Bagot.

Boling. Call forth Bagot:—

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless end.
Bagot. Then set before my face the lord Aumerle.
Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.
Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court
As far as Calais, say'st thou, brother's head?
Amongst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how blest this land would be,
In this your cousin's death. [Am.

Princes, and noble lords,
ACT IV.—SCENE I.

What answer shall I make to this base man? Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars, On equal terms to give him chastisement? Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd With the attainer of his stand'rous lies.—

There is my gage, the manual seal of death, That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest, And will maintain, what thou hast said, is false, Is thy heart-blood, though being all too base To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.

Fitz. If thou hast not, thy honour stand on sympathies,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:
By that fair sun that shews me where thou stand'st, I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it, That thou wast cause of noble Glover's death.

If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart, Where it was forg'd, with my rapier's point.

Aum. I saw him die; and I gave thee a recompence to that day,
Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour,
Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true,
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust:
And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extreme point!

Of mortal breathing; there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I throw at all.

I have a thousand spirits in one breast, To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surrey. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The time thou liest, Aumerle, and you did talk.
